

To Bring Back Prosperity

BY CALVIN COOLIDGE

If all the money in the country were divided equally—

ONE of the serious results that come from the experience through which our country has been passing for the past two years is loss of faith. Because some have put their trust in things which they have found do not always endure, they draw the hasty and unwarranted conclusion that it is useless to have faith in anything. They propose to abandon all standards, seek only the easiest course, and live merely for the present, on the theory that they may as well eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow they die.

It cannot be denied that many people have had an experience which at first thought seems to warrant such an attitude. They had profitable employment on which they believed they could rely for a permanent income. That has gone, and they are unable to secure work. They had a house which ultimately they expected would be their own and would make a home for themselves and their family. They have been unable to meet the payments due on it and have seen it taken from them. Others have found that investments on which they relied for provision for their old age have turned out to be of much less value than had been supposed. Some have met with losses through the failure of banks in which they had money deposited.

It is easy, in these circumstances, for the individual to conclude that these disasters have arisen through no fault of his own, that it must be the fault of someone, and he is inclined to blame something he loosely calls society. Sometimes a feeling of injustice results in a threat of defiance against constituted authority.

Among all these people, those who most strongly appeal to our sympathies, those who seem most warranted in their discouragement, are the ones who want work and cannot find it. But even they should take the larger view of their situation. It is no new experience for a wage earner to be without employment. Such a condition has always been temporary. It will be temporary now. Surely the country will go back to work, back to production and consumption. The condition of the wage earner in America has long been the despair of all the rest of the world. Some hope should be derived from what has been and some confidence entertained that the same again shall be.

But a new element has entered into the situation of the unemployed. Heretofore, few have known anything about it, few have cared anything about it and nobody has done anything about it. Now the whole nation is aroused. There is scarcely a hamlet in the land where there is not an organization and active public effort for the relief of the unemployed. They will be cared for in an unprecedented way. We have had a tremendous spiritual awakening concerning our duty to relieve human suffering.

It is true some homes have been lost through default of payments. That risk is always incurred when property is bought on credit. But even in this field, where one home has been lost, an enormous number have been retained. Their owners now find themselves securely and comfortably housed because they saved money and bought when they had an income, instead of spending all their money on rents and expensive living.

If all those who have bought homes in the last twenty years could be assembled, it would be found, in spite of some failures, that, as a class, they were distinctly better off than their neighbors.

The desire to build and own a home is one of the primal human instincts. It is especially strong in women. Even the present age of hotel apartments and flats is not likely to eradicate so strong a natural longing. But those who have given up the effort in despair or disgust certainly must live somewhere—if not in their own house then in the house of someone else. Their real position in the world is disclosed by supposing that everyone else followed their example. The whole race would be without shelter in about a generation.

Those who have come to the conclusion that they will do nothing to make themselves a home are injuring themselves most, but they are also injuring the whole community.

Any such scheme of things as their actions presuppose could not be put into effect. Nature and reason are both opposed to it.

When we examine the complaints of those who have lost through investments we find that they fall into three classes: Some lost because they were plainly swindled. We are enacting more and more laws and setting up more and more regulations and safeguards to prevent a recurrence of such abuses. The practice of swindling is very old, and larceny has never been eradicated from any community where property was abundant. But because someone does wrong does not prove that we shall all abandon trying to do right.

Others have used poor judgment in investments. Usually they have been tempted to take large risks by the hope of making large gains. Some did not make great profits, while many more suffered heavy losses.

Those who trust to chance must abide by the results of chance. They have no legitimate complaint against anyone but themselves.

Still others, using all the judgment possible for human beings and guided by the best financial advice obtainable, have seen their investments seriously impaired. But this simply means that everyone should know; that even when surrounded by all the safeguards and all the integrity which it is possible to secure, the ownership of property involves a risk. No law, no regulation, no government supervision, no skill in management, has ever been devised that could protect invested property from temporary fluctuation and occasional loss. These are the hazards of our finite existence. Only omniscience can guard against them.

But that does not excuse us from making the most of what we have and doing the best we can.

While no one can tell with certainty what will happen to any particular property or what the market will do at any particular time, the best financial judgment expects that, while further losses may accrue, sometime the general level of good standard properties will rise, so that some of the present losses will be reduced. Future prices at which property will sell are always uncertain.

There is no one to be blamed for what is unavoidably true. The great fact of life is uncertainty. The only thing we can do is to recognize the uncertainty and govern ourselves accordingly.

It is true that a considerable number of people have suffered through bank failures. In a time of declining prices the banks that have not been well managed always have difficulty. Some also that through no fault of their own have met losses have been compelled to close. But that does not mean a total loss to depositors. Sometimes the loss is heavy, but sometimes payment is made in full. In any case, funds are tied up and much inconvenience results.

Our national banking system is as sound as generations of experience have been able to make it. Most of the states follow a similar system. The nature of investments is regulated by law, and most banks are carefully supervised, rigidly controlled, and frequently examined by government agents. While absolute safety has been impossible to secure, it is probable that the records of money deposited in properly regulated banks in this country would show over a series of years that it has been in the safest place to keep funds.

Banks are an absolute necessity for the transaction of business. If it were possible to conceive of all of them being closed, starvation would face most of us inside of ten days. They exist to facilitate the process of exchange, which is the basis of all business. They are one of the main sources of credit, on which our economic welfare largely depends.

It is apparent that if their source of currency were cut off by people taking money out of banks and hoarding it, or locking it up, or hiding it away, our banking system soon would become deranged and the whole nation would begin to suffer losses. Loans would have to be called, mortgages canceled, prices would fall, wages decline, credit would fall, and a general panic would be produced.

If all the people attempted to draw their money from the banks, all commerce would be reduced to barter, and universal bankruptcy would prevail.

While particular banks may become unsound, we can feel adequately certain that our banking system as a whole will not become unsound. If it ever did, we should find that the money we had hidden away had become unsound also. It would not be possible to buy anything with it. All exchange would be at an end. Even payments by the federal government would have to be suspended. While keeping money in banks involves some risk, because possession of property always involves risks, it is a risk that must be taken. Compared with the certain calamity that would result if the people drew all money out of banks, the risk can be considered as negligible.

Those who are engaged in hoarding currency are probably no safer as a class than those who keep their funds in the banks. They are injuring themselves and everybody else. They are in the position of not taking their part of the risks of life and are trying to make themselves safe by letting others carry their risks for them.

It might be a great personal comfort if we could lay all the blame for our misfortunes upon some source outside ourselves. That is why it is easy to convince some of us that we have not failed, but society has failed. Of course, it would follow that if society were to be blamed for our failures, that some society must be credited with our successes. If we want to look at it that way we shall have to admit that on the whole, society in this country has done very well by us. Our country, over its span of history, has been considerable of a success.

But while there is a relationship of all of us, which we term society, that differs from each of us, just as a house differs from the individual bricks in it, yet people are not bricks, and moral responsibility cannot be shifted to others. It must rest with the individual. The same society produced Paul and Judas; Washington and Arnold, Lincoln and Tweed, Edison and the gang leader.

If we are to be free to make our own choices

in life, we must take the risk of being responsible for the results.

If we could lay the blame for present conditions in our own country or in the world on society at large, against whom is the blame to be assessed? It is impossible to point out any general moral lapse, any widespread dishonesty. We may say it was the result of greed and selfishness. But what body is to be specifically charged with that? Were the wage earners too greedy in getting all they could for their work? Were the managers of enterprise, big and little, too greedy in trying to operate at a profit? Were the farmers too greedy in their efforts to make more money by tilling more land and enlarging their production?

Even if we could convict society on a general charge of selfishness, we could not point to any element that consciously brought about a condition of falling prices, unemployment, lack of confidence, business failures, and hard times. These were the last things that anybody wanted. The most we can say is that there has been a general lack of judgment so widespread as to involve practically the whole country.

We have found out that we were not so big as we thought we were. We were riding too high. We shall have to keep nearer the ground. We may not feel so elated but we shall be much safer.

Economic well-being is very important, but perhaps it is not so important as we thought it was. If it is used as it ought to be, to minister to spiritual well-being, we cannot have too much of it. But if it is made a vehicle for stimulating greed and selfishness, idleness and ignorance, extravagance and waste, destructive alike to body and soul, it defeats itself and vanishes, until, through adversity, we can learn to make a better use of prosperity.

The development of the real character of men and women can go on in bad times as well as in good times. After all, that is the important thing. Neither the world at large nor our own most favored nation is going to discover some miraculous formula which, all at once, will remove the possibility of hardship, want and deprivation from the human race. With all the power of mass production, we are a long way from universal luxury. But in the United States we have approached the line of universal convenience. Our system has produced a distribution of wealth so that those having incomes of five thousand dollars or less, according to the latest available records, are said to receive 87 per cent of the total national income. If they were given, in addition, the entire income of all those who receive more, the increase would be only about seven hundred dollars. Great as our resources are, they have a distinct limitation.

There is no wealth enough in our country to take care of our people without the ablest possible management and the hardest kind of work on the part of all of us.

There is no government in the world that can remove this burden from its inhabitants.

Under the pressure of events there are some who have become sullen and resentful. They are inclined to refuse to make an effort to pay their taxes and their interest. If they earn anything, they propose to spend it. They have lost faith in the standards by which they have lived.

Such people have made a great mistake. They have been born into the wrong universe for them. They belong in some place where there are no risks to be faced, where a backbone would be considered excess baggage, where courage and perseverance, effort and self-denial, industry and thrift are not virtues in themselves, to be cultivated for their own sakes. The absurdity of this position is revealed by considering what would result if everybody else adopted the same attitude.

There is no power that can guarantee us economic security. We think we want relief from toil and worry, forgetful that all our real satisfactions are in our achievements.

If we will but make the effort to develop them, if we will apply ourselves faithfully to our tasks, we shall all find we have powers we did not know we possessed.

We shall come nearest to achieving our own economic security by the practice of the old-fashioned, homely virtues of industry and thrift; of buying a few things we can pay for, rather than many which leave us loaded with dangerous debts we can never pay; of small savings securely invested at moderate returns, rather than spectacular financial performances.

The best recipe for financial security is to live within our means. This is our ancient faith. We have found nothing better.

If we should undertake to put into operation any scheme based on the assumption that the world owes all of us a living, we would soon find the world was bankrupt. If we try to adopt some plan that will eliminate the changes and risks of life, we are likely to find that reverses will come just the same. We shall be better off if we work on the old standard that we owe a duty to the world to earn our own living, and instead of supposing we can abolish reverses, preparing to meet them. Under this homely, safe, and seasoned system we shall probably find we have the best chance of taking care of ourselves and securing the greatest distribution of wealth.

WAKES UP TO FIND SELF WITH 2 WIVES

Man Remembers Nothing of Second Marriage.

Kansas City, Mo.—Liquor, according to Peter Van Diest, thirty-five, who awakened in the police holdover one night recently to discover that he was the husband of two wives, causes a man to do some peculiar things.

Van Diest was arrested when wife No. 1, Mrs. Velma Diest, Kansas City, Kan., traced him there after he had been missing from home since the Sunday before.

The first wife also discovered during her search that her husband had acquired a second wife the day after his disappearance, without obtaining a divorce.

The twice married man was in a repentant mood after his arrest and during the time of his arraignment in the justice court on a charge of bigamy.

News to Him.

"That second marriage is sure news to me," he told a detective. "I left home Sunday to take a motor car ride and I met one of the fellows. He suggested a little drink and I took one. Of course that called for another and I guess I must have gotten pretty drunk, because the next thing I re-

Quarrel Between Young Lovers Ends in Suicide

Washington. — "Lucy: Good-by, sweetheart, I am going to join my mother. You can get another boy friend, now, who has a car, money and can dance. Elmer."

This note, telling how a quarrel between youthful sweethearts ended in tragedy, was left on the bureau in the room of twenty-year-old Elmer Tippens, in the 200 block Fourteenth place N. E. It was written just before the youth ended his life by firing a .22-caliber rifle bullet through his head.

The Lucy of the farewell note found the boy's body.

Miss Lucy Body, sixteen, of the first block Todd place N. E., a friend of his family, came to the home to see Elmer's sister. The sister was not at home.

The girl told the police she had quarreled with young Tippens earlier in the day. A Casualty hospital interne who examined his body said the shot probably killed him instantly. Tippens was unemployed and lived with his brother-in-law.

Rubber Tube Provides Food for Patient, Six

Columbus, Ohio.—For 19 months six-year-old Alan Holycross, in a hospital here, has not swallowed food, yet he is in perfect health. Two years ago Alan swallowed a cupful of lye water and burned his esophagus so badly that he could not swallow food.

Almost starving, he was taken to the hospital. An incision was made, and a rubber tube was connected with his digestive organs. Six times a day nurses pour liquid food through the tube. Doctors hope that in six or seven years he will again be normal.

Believe Petrified Logs Part of Ancient Fort

San Antonio.—Four petrified logs, believed to be ruins of Santa Cruz de Cibola, an ancient Spanish roadway garrison, have been discovered by a party from the Witte Memorial Museum here.

The garrison was built in 1734 near Karnes City by Governor Sandoval, according to Col. M. L. Crimmins, a member of the exploring party. Ancient documents show it was erected to guard the highway from San Antonio to Matagorda Bay.

Spends 20 Years in Jail; Going Back for 5 More

Milwaukee.—William Lovely, forty-five, who has spent twenty years in Wisconsin penal institutions, was sentenced to five years in the state penitentiary following conviction at Racine on a burglary count. Testimony disclosed that the gun Lovely drew on the policeman who arrested him here was stolen by him when he burglarized a Racine soft-drink establishment.

Iowa Hen Makes Up for Vacation Days

Keokuk, Iowa.—One of H. B. Hopp's hens lays an egg every day, but on her "working days" the hen's egg is of unusual size. Hopp says the chicken regularly lays a double egg weighing approximately six ounces. The outer shell, measuring six inches by nine inches in circumference, contains another complete egg in addition.

member was waking up here three days later.

"What news—some policeman told me I had two wives," he moaned. "Lord, it's hard enough to care for one the way that times are.

"I was sure there was something wrong, because I could remember only one wife, Velma."

Mrs. Fern Wells, wife No. 2, told police that Van Diest apparently had been drinking when he called at her home Sunday and began making love to her. However, she didn't believe, she said, that he was in such a condition that he didn't know what he was doing.

Mrs. Wells said she met Van Diest once before, but had never kept company with him. When he called at her home he painted such a glowing picture of what they could accomplish together as man and wife that she agreed to marry him, she said.

She said that the difficult time she had to earn a living for herself and small daughter had prompted her to accept the proposals.

Big Job Nonexistent.

The fact he told her he had a wonderful job, paying a huge salary, awaiting him in Arizona also influenced her decision, she admitted.

Van Diest, according to Mrs. Wells, avowed the day after their marriage, borrowed $5 from her with which he planned to hire a taxi to take him to his last place of employment to obtain money to take his bride and stepdaughter on their honeymoon to Denver.

It was during his absence with the borrowed money that the first wife appeared.

Mrs. Van Diest was in an unfriendly mood when she conferred with detectives.

Mrs. Wells said that she would stand by her husband, despite the fact that she is wife No. 2, acquired illegally.

Western Indians Fight for Fishing Rights

Portland, Ore.—Indians along the Columbia river are on the warpath, after many years of peace.

They seek, however, to settle their grievances in the white man's courts.

Members of the Yakima, Warm Springs, Umatilla and Lapwai tribes have entered formal protest against asserted violation of treaty rights by private property owners near the Dalles.

The landowners, the Indians say, prevent them entrance to and use of their ancient fishing grounds.

The treaty of 1855, by which the Indians deeded their property over to the government, provided in exchange that the Indians were to be allowed all fishing rights and also called for exclusive reservations.

United States Attorney George Neuner has been authorized to bring suit against the private owners if necessary, according to the Department of Interior.

Enters Jail as Visitor, Held 30 Days as Guest

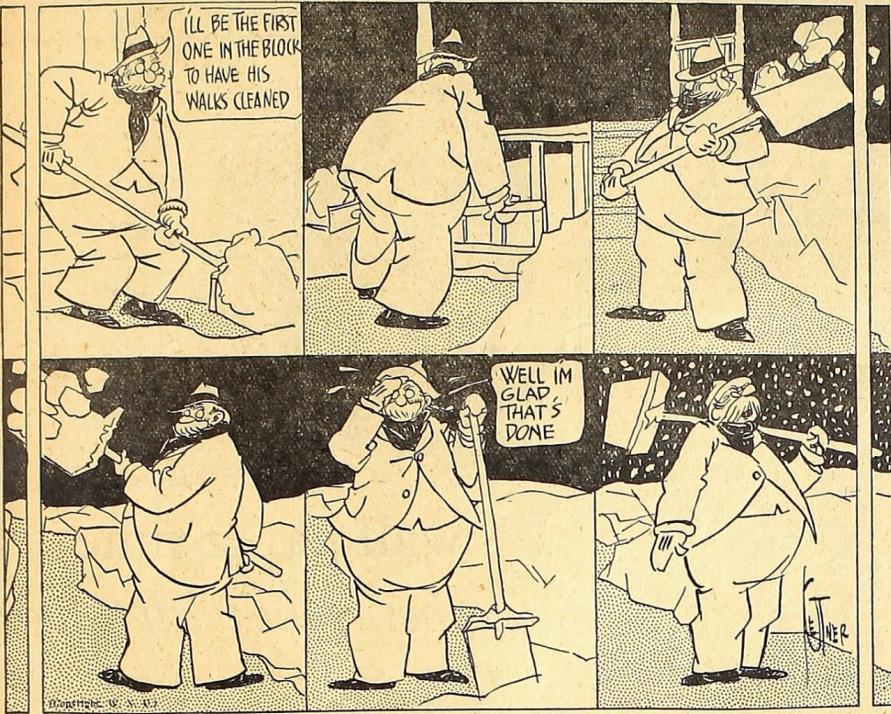

Fairmont, W. Va.—Harry Davidson entered the county jail here as a visitor. He was detained as a guest—against his will—for thirty days. When guards searched him they reported finding a half pint of whisky. He was fined $100 in addition to the jail sentence.

Washington's Travels

Wakefield; a Restoration of the Birthplace of George Washington.

(Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.)

GEORGE WASHINGTON, soldier statesman, has eclipsed George Washington, the traveler—yet as a traveler, and as a geographer who gained his information at first hand, the Father of His Country earned the right to another "first." Many places Washington visited have been unaware of the fact; other places where he is reputed to have "stopped" or "spent the night" are far from the verified records of his travels. This information developed when the map makers of the National Geographic society started on the extensive research task—research consuming more than a year—to record all of Washington's journeys on a single map. Thorough checks was made of the diaries of Washington, of the contemporary accounts of his travels, and in many cases personal visits had to be made to places, and dusty courthouse files scanned, because of places that have changed names, or have their names duplicated.

The compilation of this information shows that George Washington traveled over a larger area than any other official of his time. His travels extended from the heart of Georgia to Kittery, Maine. Westward, he went to the vicinity of Lake Erie, in Pennsylvania; to the neighborhood of Point Pleasant, in West Virginia, and to Gallipolis, Ohio.

Of three sea voyages Washington made, one was to foreign soil, Barbados. But the most amazing aspect of his travels, perhaps, are his journeys on horseback—journeys ranging from Virginia to Fort Le Boeuf, and from Mount Vernon to Boston. However, so far as records show, he did not visit the birthplace of his mother, Epping Forest.

Long Horseback Trips.

Washington's horseback trips were often arduous. He was known to average 35 miles a day for periods of more than a week. Once he rode 500 miles in 16 days. That trip was from Cumberland, Md., to Williamsburg, Va., and two days of the 16 were "time out," waiting for an armed escort. He carried the pay for Braddock's army in his saddlebags.

Horses often broke under the strain, when public duty called Washington to move with dispatch. For instance, when riding to join General Braddock, upon reaching the vicinity of what is now Charles Town, W. Va., he reported that he killed one horse outright and had rendered the three others he had brought along unfit for service.

When there was no urgency of public business his horses fared better. After his trip to his western lands in 1784, during which he had twice crossed the Appalachians and had been so far from civilization that he could get no corn for his horse (and nothing or only boiled corn for himself), he sets down with satisfaction that he had traveled 680 miles between the first day of September and the fourth day of October, on the same horses.

Washington's geographic instincts began to develop on this early trip. The trough of the south branch of the Potomac, where many years later President Grover Cleveland fished for bass, he described as "(a) couple of Ledges of Mountain Impassable running side and side together for above seven or eight Miles and ye River down between them." He adds: "You must Ride Round ye back of ye Mountain for to get below them."

With boyish zest Washington ate his evening meal on Friday, April 8. "We camped this Night in ye Woods near a Wild Meadow where was a Stack of Hay after we had Pitched our Tent and made a very Large Fire we pull'd out our Knapsack in order to Recruit ourselves every (one) was his own Cook our Spits was Forked Sticks our Plates was a Large Chip as for Dishes we had none."

Good Pay, Small Expense. A letter written to a friend while on one of the several other surveying trips he made to the waters of the Shenandoah, the Cacapon, and the South Branch in 1749, 1750, 1751, and 1752 indicates it was the good pay that reconciled young Washington to the hardships of a surveyor's life. Therein he says that he had not slept above three or four nights in a bed, but after walking all day he lay down "before the fire upon a Little Hay Straw Fodder or bairnskin which ever is to be had with Man Wife and Children like a parcel of Dogs or Catts & happy he that gets the Berth nearest the fire there's nothing would make it pass of tolerably but a good Reward a Dubbleloon ($7.16%) is my constant gain every Day that the Weather Will permit my going out and some time Six Pistoles ($21.50)." Traveling expenses were low in those days. Virginia had a law that rates for accommodations in each county should be fixed by the court thereof, and that any keeper of an ordinary not observing these rates should be heavily fined, half the fine going to the informer. The Augusta county court order book shows that a hot dinner cost 9 pence; a cold meal, 6 pence; lodging, with clean sheets, 3½ pence; twenty-four-hour stabling and fodder for a horse, 6 pence; and corn or oats, per gallon, 6 pence. When it is remembered that the Virginia shilling was worth 16½ cents of our money, we see that a hot dinner cost 12½ cents and other service in proportion.

From Staunton, Washington rode to Fredericksburg by way of Charlottesville, making the 114-mile journey in three days and still being fit enough to play billiards the evening he arrived.

On Wednesday, February 4, 1756, Washington set out for Boston to lay a case of military precedence before Gen. William Shirley, commander in chief of the British forces in America. He reached Philadelphia the following Sunday, and took five or six days to look around the city.

He apparently made the 90 intervening miles to New York in two days. And what must the New York of that day have meant to the young Virginian, who had spent the last three years mostly in the primeval forests or fighting French and Indians on the savage frontiers!

A Visit to New York.

There was the "microcosm" to visit described at the time as a world in miniature, which took 22 years to build. Washington's enthusiasm for it is written in his accounts, for on two separate occasions he enters items "for treat, Ladies to ye Mi(cro)cosm." There was also a room at Mrs. Baron's, and tips to the servants in the household of Beverley Robinson, son of the speaker of the Virginia house of burgesses. The young officer was always punctilious in tipping the servants in households where he was entertained, and equally so in entering these items in his account books—two traits that have aided a great deal in tracing his travels.

Two days before he was twenty-four years old he set out on the last leg of his journey to Boston, and the "Pennsylvania Gazette" carried the news that "Colonel Washington, of Virginia, but last from Philadelphia, left this city (New York) for Boston."

On his way to Boston he stopped with a Mr. Malbone, in Rhode Island. He entered a tip for the latter's servants of £4 and another item of £5 for a broken bowl.

In Boston he stopped at Cromwell's Head tavern. He saw General Shirley, who decided the question of command at Fort Cumberland in his favor; visited a man of war in the harbor, lost some money at cards at the governor's house, and then set off for Virginia. But at the governor's he had met such people as John Adams, and made a deep impression by his recital of conditions in western Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania. Unconsciously he again was playing into the hands of destiny, for John Adams was one of those who 19 years later joined with Thomas Johnson of Maryland in making him commander in chief of the American forces.

Survey of the Frontier.

Another interesting phase of Washington's travels began when he determined to make a personal survey of the frontier with a view to establishing a chain of forts at the important passes, in the hope of damming the Indian tribe behind the Allegheny divide.

During the French and Indian war days, villages and towns near the frontier had not yet begun to take shape, except in the case of county seats. Places were known as "John Smith's Plantation," "William Scott's Mill," "Tasker-Tosh's Fort," "Big Lick," etc. The changing ownerships of five generations, together with the substitution of bridges for fords, have obliterated these names from map and memory alike.

It was necessary, therefore, to go patiently through scores of massive land-grant books, dozens of old deeds books, and all the survey records that have survived, in order to find out where the early settlers lived.

THE GIRL ON THE SILVER DOLLAR

THE classic profile which is familiar to all of us as that of the goddess of liberty on our silver dollar, belonged in real life to Ann W. Williams, a school teacher, who died just a few years ago in Philadelphia.

In 1876 George Morgan, expert designer and engraver, was entrusted with the task of preparing a new design for a silver dollar that was to be minted at Philadelphia. At that time Miss Williams was principal of the girls' school at the House of Refuge in Philadelphia and boasted blue eyes, golden hair and a profile of Grecian beauty. Thomas Eakins, an artist, was acquainted with both Mr. Morgan and Miss Williams' family, and had contact with the girl herself while she was an art student. He brought them together, but it was only after considerable persuasion and with the promise that her identity remain a secret that Miss Williams consented to pose.

The sittings took place in Mr. Eakins' home during November of 1876. The first sketches showed the model's hair, abundant and light in texture, caught in a soft coil at the back of her neck. Some time later it was decided that the familiar cap and sheath was a more fitting ornament for the goddess of liberty's head. Despite persistent rumors that the engraver put so much heart and soul into his work that he ended up by falling madly in love with Miss Williams, the fact remains that she continued her work as teacher and always referred to it as the greatest joy of her life.

SWEET ADELINE

FOR romance's sake we assume that each and every one of the several billion who have ecstatically sung "Sweet Adeline" has had in mind some one "flower of his heart" when he sang it. For it is certain that the author, Richard Gerard, when he wrote the song back in 1903, had in his mind a certain brunet who worked behind a music counter in a New York department store, and wrote his love-lick words in all youthful sincerity.

The brunet, alas, married some one else. But all this happened, of course, when Gerard was just a kid and in love with a new brunet each week. Only one of them, however, achieved the fame of Sweet Adeline. Her song was written in an old apartment house in Greenwich Village and took about twenty minutes in the writing. Equipped with music written by Harry Armstrong, "Sweet Adeline" commenced making the rounds of the music publishing houses. Most of them just weren't interested, though this was the day of the sentimental ballad and "Just for Tonight," "After the Ball," and "Daisy Bell," were making money. Soon after it was finally published, Armstrong sold his rights for $1,000; Gerard parted with his five years later for $3,000. Over 50,000,000 copies of it have been sold since, at 30 cents each for the publisher!

THE MARQUESA DE MONTMAYOR

IN THE Seventeenth century Madame de Sevigne, writing from Paris long, gossipy letters to her beloved daughter in Provence, earned for herself a dramatic place in the literary world as its foremost woman letter writer. Out of the story behind those letters, the passionate, bitter story of a mother who loved unwisely and too well a daughter who did not return that affection, Thornton Wilder in 1928 conceived the character of the Marquessa de Montmayor, one of the victims of that inexplicable catastrophe, the fall of "The Bridge of San Luis Rey."

Marie du Rabutin-Chantal was a charming, vivacious woman with an outright manner of speech unusual in the Seventeenth century when affection was a social necessity. Her marriage to the Marquis de Sevigne was an unhappy one, and she concentrated her affection upon her two children, and especially upon her daughter. When that daughter married the Comte de Grignan, lieutenant general of Provence and went there to make her home, her lonely mother commenced her famous correspondence with her, consisting of over 1,000 letters written over a period of 25 years. The establishment of a postal system via stagecoach in 1627 had given impetus to the writing of letters, which contained not merely personal matters for the recipient alone, but news in general for a group of friends, acting as a newspaper in the days before journalism. Thus the letters of Madame de Sevigne are not only charming as letters, but they contain much valuable insight into current life in fashionable Paris. (© 1932, Western Newspaper Union.)

Rodin's Masterpiece

"The Door of Hell," or, as it is more usually called, "The Gates of Hell," is a work by the eminent French sculptor Rodin, on which he originally intended to place his famous statue, The Thinker. We understand that this monument has now been set up in Paris, contrary to the sculptor's original idea. —Washington Star.

John's Mother Praises Doctor

There isn't a mother living who won't agree that no half-sick child should be the subject for an experiment with medicines of uncertain merit. When your child is bilious, headachy, half-sick, feverish, restless, with coated tongue, bad breath, no appetite or energy, you know that nine times out of ten it's a sign his little stomach and bowels need purging. And when you know that for over fifty years leading physicians have endorsed one preparation for this condition, there doesn't seem to be any reason for "trying" things.

Rich, fruity California Fig Syrup clears the little stomach and bowels gently, harmlessly and in a hurry. It regulates the bowels, gives tone and strength to them and to the stomach; and helps to give your child new strength, energy and vitality. Thousands of Western mothers praise it. Mrs. Joseph W. Hill, 4306 Bedford Ave., Omaha, Nebraska, says: "Till never forget the doctor who got me to give my baby boy, John, California Fig Syrup. Nothing else seemed to help his weak bowels. That was when he was just a baby. He suffered a good deal before I gave him Fig Syrup, but it stopped his trouble quick. I have used it with him for colds and little upset spells ever since. I consider him a Fig Syrup boy."

Insist on the genuine article. See that the carton bears the word "California." Over four million bottles used a year.

So Weak She Could Scarcely Get Around

Kalamazoo, Mich.—"Some years ago I became so weak and run-down I could scarcely get around—had such terrible pains in my back I could hardly get out of a chair," said Mrs. Carrie Belle Noragon of 517 N. Park St. "A druggist advised me to use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. After taking it a short time the pains left my back, and today I can do any amount of heavy lifting—an ever afraid to tackle any work. I think I owe a vote of thanks to Dr. Pierce." SORE THROAT

FIVE minutes after you rub on Musterole your throat should begin to feel less sore! Continue the treatment once every hour for five hours and you'll be astonished at the relief.

This famous blend of oil of mustard, camphor, menthol and other ingredients brings relief naturally. Musterole gets action because it is a "counter-irritant"—not just a salve—it penetrates and stimulates blood circulation and helps to draw out infection and pain. Used by millions for 20 years. Recommended by doctors and nurses.

To Mothers—Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

STORY FOR BEDTIME

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

PETER RABBIT had run over to the Smiling Pool for a bit of gossip with Grandfather Frog if he were in sight, or with anyone else who might happen to be there in case Grandfather Frog was not. He had just reached the bank of the Smiling Pool and had time to see that Grandfather Frog's big green lily-pad was quite lonely looking without Grandfather Frog sitting on it, and that Jerry Muskrat was sitting on the end of an old log which was half in the water and half out, when he looked toward the Green Forest and saw the stranger who belonged to the Hawk family headed toward the Smiling Pool.

perfectly still for a second, and then with his wings closed he shot down, down, down, so fast that it quite took away Peter's breath just to watch him.

Peter's first thought was of Jerry Muskrat. Of course that must be who this great stranger with the ugly great claws was after. From his hiding place he couldn't see the Smiling Pool, although it was so near. And so, of course, he couldn't see Jerry Muskrat. With all his heart he hoped that Jerry saw the danger, and he listened for the splash when Jerry dived into the water. But there was no splash—that is, there was no splash by Jerry. Down plunged the stranger, and Peter watched for him to being chased by him," muttered Peter. "I wonder what he lives on."

As Peter said later, things happened then just as if they were in answer to his thoughts. The big stranger was just above the Smiling Pool and headed straight toward the Big River. Just as he got right over the middle of the Smiling Pool he turned a little circle in the air, seemed to hang there

THE BAD DIE YOUNG

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

THE ones who get up early. The ones who stay up late. May both attain the pearly (See certain prophets) gate. In fact, the stay-up lates will likely first arrive. While those up hoeing 'aters At six may long survive.

I do not think that heaven Is closed forevermore To those not up at seven, But up the night before, I do not think that Eden Is closed, and they accursed, In fact, the life they're leadin', They'll likely get there first.

The ones, as I was sayin' Who with the dawn arise More likely are delayin' Their trip to Paradise. In spite of all the preachin' We hear in ev'ry tongue, And all our other teachin', Is the bad die young.

FRUIT SALADS

FRUIT salad is especially valuable to balance heavy foods. With oranges as the basic fruit, many pleasing combinations may be had with cheese, nuts and dried fruits.

Vitamin Salad.

On a lettuce covered plate, place a square or scoop of cottage cheese, stand on end sections of orange. Top with half a pecan or walnut meat and serve with:

French Honey Dressing.

Take three tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, six tablespoonfuls of salad oil, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of paprika and one-fourth cupful of strained honey. Shake thoroughly before serving.

Orange and Date Salad.

Take two large oranges, arrange in sections of six on lettuce radiating from the center on the salad plate. In the center place stuffed dates, four to a serving. Top with a rose of mayonnaise.

Fruit Salad in Orange Cups.

Cut three large oranges into halves, remove the pulp carefully and mix with two slices of diced pineapple, twelve quartered marshmallows, one-third of a cupful of pecan meats and two-thirds of a cupful of diced pear. Serve the orange cups filled with the fruit mixed with mayonnaise and whipped cream. Serve on lettuce and garnish the top of each with nut meats.

Meal That Lingers in One Doughboy's Memory

Your discussion of breakfast as a possible contender for the position of "best meal of the day" (writes G. W. E.) reminds me of a breakfast I had in the army once that was a best meal. I had been out driving an ambulance over muddy French roads between Bar-le-Duc and Marquenterre for a day and a night, with nothing to eat but a can of sardines and a spare tank full of frog beer. I got back to camp about ten in the morning and found the cook away getting ravitaillement for dinner. Well, I was so empty I could see my skeleton without an X-ray, so I rummaged through the trailer kitchen for solid grub. All I could find was a big pan of cold baked army-and-navy beans. Also a quart of maple sirup. Together they went and down they went and that was my best meal that day or any day.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

YOU WERE RIGHT, LOUISE! THAT HARD SOAP SOAKS CLOTHES WHITER THAN THEY CAN BE SCRUBBED

I KNEW YOU'D LIKE IT, FLO. RINSO IS GREAT FOR DISHES, TOO

These thick, safe suds give whiter washes!

THERE are all degrees of whiteness. If you want to see the very whitest white that clothes can be—just try Rinso!

Rinso gives rich, creamy lasting suds even in the hardest water. Dirt loosens—soaks right out. Clothes come so white they don't need to be boiled. Even grimy cuffs and edges come snowy with little or no rubbing. Clothes last much longer!

Cup for cup, thrifty Rinso gives twice as much suds as lightweight, puffed-up soaps—it's so compact. And no softener needed! It's so safe, the makers of 40 washing machines recommend it.

BABY FRETFUL, RESTLESS?

Look to this cause

When your baby fusses, tosses and seems unable to sleep restfully, look for one common cause, doctors say. Constipation. To get rid quickly of the accumulated wastes which cause restlessness and discomfort, give a cleansing dose of Castoria. Castoria, you know, is made specially for children's delicate needs. It is a pure vegetable preparation; contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics. It is so mild and gentle you can give it to a young infant to relieve colic. Yet it is as effective for older children. Castoria's regulative help will bring relaxed comfort and restful sleep to your baby. Keep a bottle on hand. Genuine Castoria always has the name:

"I don't know it," said Stanton. "If I did they wouldn't have walked out of the room. I'm only guessing."
"Yes, guessing. Well, I'd rather you guessed that I was alive because they were dead than that they were alive because I was dead. That's what it comes to. I can't go back to New York tonight. But how am I to know that they have gone? They may stay here in Newburgh."

"If I may use Mr. Darling's telephone, I'll loose the Dogberrys on them."
"There's the extension here on the table and there's an instrument in a closet off the hall," said Mr. Darling. "I'll not bother you with the mysteries of police business," said the lieutenant. "I'll use the other phone."
When he returned Roberts was bracing himself with another drink of Scotch.

"They will be quietly escorted into New York," the lieutenant said, "and from then on the watchful eye will be in the middle of their backs. Now, Roberts, here we are in a case which stumps me to think of the like of it. It seems that the only thing I can do, as John Law confronted with one transparent killing and two fairly plausible ones is to wait for another."
"Will you let me stay at your hotel with you tonight?" Roberts asked. "I'll figure out something. Maybe I can go back to Chicago with you. It may not be as hopeless as I think. I might be able to get West. If I could get away from San Francisco I might be able to disappear somewhere in the Far East, somewhere in the Pacific Islands."

He brightened perceptibly in tone and confidence of motion as he walked to and fro on the hearth-rug.
"I've got sixty thousand dollars a year now instead of thirty thousand dollars. That's right, isn't it, Mr. Darling?"
"Owing to the fact that Mr. Clayton, Mr. Brown and Mr. Tremble are no longer where they can receive checks, you are quite right, Mr. Roberts."

"Well, now, sixty thousand dollars a year is money. It gives a man freedom. He can live where it's pleasant and convenient. He can take measures to protect himself. If I can get a fair break at the start. That's all I'll need. Now, if Lieutenant Stanton will help, I know I can rely on Mr. Darling."

"We'll be leaving, Mr. Darling," said Stanton.
"Shall I see you again, Lieutenant?" the old gentleman asked, holding out his hand.

"I hope so. I must be going back tomorrow after I've gone down to New York. I've always said I was no detective, but this beats even my usual experience. I get my man! I'm nursemaid to the handsome gentleman who expects to be murdered. That's all I've got to show for my expense account. Come along, Mr. Roberts. And good day to you, Mr. Darling."

It was late dusk as Stanton and Roberts walked toward the Palatine. They passed by the Hasbrouck house.

"You might go in there a while tomorrow," said Stanton.
"Where? In there? Why?"
"It's Washington's headquarters."

"What of it?"
"Oh, go in and look at Uzal Knapp's grave."

"You're a nut, Chief. There's only one grave I want to see, and it isn't filled yet."

"You discount Ashley, don't you?"
"I can handle him."

"Can you? I'd guess that in this elimination he'd be the survivor."
"Don't be ridiculous. What makes you think that?"
"Just looking at you three, I fancy Ashley."

When they entered the hotel Stanton told his companion to get himself a room.

"I must send some telegrams," he said. "I must go to the local chief's office and I may be able through him and by telephone to avoid going to New York."

"Do you think you'll be gone long?"
"I'd not think so. Why? You needn't be alarmed here in the hotel."
"Sometimes you seem simple-minded, Lieutenant. You ought to know that often the safest places are the most dangerous."

"I'd get hold of myself if I were you, mister. You're safe here."

"When you are back I must buy some linen and things. I'll get a room and wait for you here in the lobby."

When Stanton returned a half-hour later, Roberts was in a leather chair in a smoking corner.

"I got a room with two beds," he said, "and I've had your things moved into it. Don't mind, do you? I'll feel easier. I meant to speak to you about it."

"I doubt that you did, Roberts. You preferred to have it done, and then tell me about it. I don't mind, if it makes you any happier. The furnishing stores are down the hill in the old town. You'd better go and make your purchases before dinner."

"I'm not going down there alone."

"All right. I'll go with you. Ashley and Blair are on their way to New York, but I can't afford to report back home without you alive. So come along, and then we'll have dinner."

CHAPTER VIII

A Night Visitor at Room 510

At dinner Stanton said he was going to the movies and that his companion might please himself, remain in the hotel or accompany him. Roberts was glum for a moment and then smiled.

"I'll go with you. I don't mind hick-town amusements. I like them."
"If the movies are hick the big towns are the center of the sticks," said Stanton.

"I know, but I only enjoy the movies when I'm laid up in a small place."
"Come on then. I'm a two-show man, mister, when I get a chance, and I saw by the signs that John Gilbert in 'Twelve Miles Out' is at one place and Sid Chaplin in 'Charley's Aunt' at another."

They claimed their overcoats from the checkroom and walked along the shadowy street leading to the Newburgh white way.

"I suppose you think I'm an awful coward," said Roberts as they walked. "I'm not always. I've had my share of danger. There's some kinds I haven't dodged. I fought a man with a pistol placed in the middle of a table. You stand two feet away, and at a signal the man who gets the gun uses it."

"Did you cheat?" asked Stanton.
"Not much. Just enough to keep him from cheating more. But I didn't shoot him."

"Afraid to?"
"No. I couldn't shoot a man who didn't have a gun."

"I hope he appreciated it."
"He took a shot at me a half-hour later, and then I had to wing him."

"Here's the Great White Way," said the lieutenant as they turned into the brilliantly lighted main street of the newer Newburgh on the top of the bluff above the old town which starts at the river's edge. "Here's the Chaplin nearest. We'll take the first show here, and John Gilbert next."

"You're a curious copper."
"You may be right there, mister, but it isn't because I like the movies. It's because I do dumb things. You're probably one of them."

Roberts was amused by "Charley's Aunt," but he was depressed by "Twelve Miles Out."

"Cheerful lot of gore, that finish," he said as they walked back to the hotel. "Looked like Blair and Ashley shooting each other's heads off. They would grin and yell at each other just that way. Ghastly pair of crooks. I never knew Blair to have the slightest compunction in anything he ever did. Nor Ashley either. Something they did to Turner got us in this mess."

"Meaning sixty thousand dollars a year for you?"
"I need the money because I've got it, if you can figure that out. I'd be well off if I'd never heard of it. What do you want to do, smoke a cigar in the lobby or turn in? I feel restless."

"I'll smoke a cigar with you, but I'm not restless and I'm about ready for sleep."
"Lucky cuss you are, Stanton. Got nothing to make you nervous or restless."

"I've got you."
"I said lucky cuss. You might have Blair. I once saw him strangle a black boy in Haiti who tried to slice him. Did it slowly, as if it were a pleasure."

"What did you, the six of you, do to Turner?" the lieutenant asked. "I'm going to make you come clean on that sooner or later."
"I don't know anything about it, whatever it was. I swear I don't."

"All right. It will be later, then."
"Did I tell you I've telegraphed for a drawing room or compartment when we pick up the train at Albany? I'll not trust an open Pullman. I'll get a magazine and go up to the room with you now if you want to."

He went to the cigar and magazine counter and came back with several periodicals. He looked about as they stepped into the elevator and glanced each way in the traverse hall on their room floor. When their door was locked he seemed relieved.

The lieutenant made ready for bed. "I'll only keep this reading lamp on," said Roberts. "That won't disturb you, will it?"
"No, nothing will disturb me," said the lieutenant, stretching out.

Later he was awakened by Roberts who was shaking him. When he opened his eyes in a daze Roberts signaled him to be silent.

"Listen," he said.
Stanton raised himself and saw that Roberts had a pistol in his hand.

"The door," said Roberts. He spoke in a whisper.
For a second or two Stanton did not hear anything. Then there was the sound unmistakably of a key touching the lock outside. Apparently some one was trying to put it in the key-hole blocked by the key inside. As soon as this was beyond doubt the lieutenant got out of bed.

"What are you doing?" Roberts asked nervously.
"See who it is," said Stanton.
"Wait, where's your gun?"
"I don't need a gun," said Stanton, as he turned the key and pulled the door back.

Roberts instantly stepped behind him. The door opened on a whiff of liquor and a fat man who blinked. Stanton looked at him and smiled.

"Wrong room, brother," he said. The fat man's expression seemed to contradict that statement. He said nothing, but he stood his ground and blinked.

"Wrong room," the lieutenant repeated.
The fat man then looked at the metal disk attached to his key.

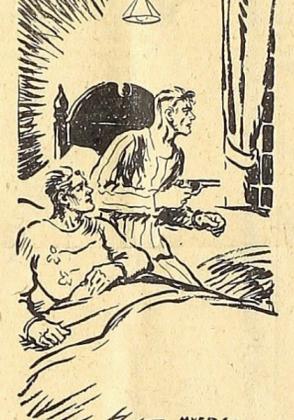

"Six-ten," he said to prove he was right.
"Five-ten. Wrong floor."
"Wrong floor? Not possible. That is six."

"Go to the elevator and begin all over."
"All right. I'll be back here. Six-ten."

"You come back here, and I'll pinch you. I'm a copper. On your way, brother. Take some advice of the elevator boy."

Stanton closed and locked the door. "Do you think that fellow was drunk?" Roberts asked.
"I wouldn't be so sure he was," said Stanton as he got into bed.

"I'd say he wasn't."
"He probably was. Touch of acting about him, but probably he had made a mistake in his floor and was trying to cover by seeming more stupid than he was."

"The Door," said Roberts.

"You're a good old Dogberry yourself, Stanton. That fellow had a purpose. He may have been only a bird dog. I never saw him before, but then they wouldn't use a fellow I ever had. If I had opened the door myself you'd have been awakened soon or later. It probably would have been by a draft through the open door, and you'd have stepped on me when you got up. They're working on the case. You can bet on that."

Stanton's response was to roll over in his bed and breathe heavily. From that on Roberts' troubles were his own until morning.

On the way to breakfast Roberts had Stanton turn aside with him to the desk.

"We were disturbed last night," he said to the clerk. "I have reason to question the explanation given by the disturber. We are in room five-ten. He insisted it was room six-ten. He had a key. Who occupies room six-ten?"

The clerk hesitated as if about to refuse to give the information. Stanton perceived his reluctance and supported Roberts.

"In the circumstances," said Stanton, "it is a fair question. As Mr. Roberts says, we were disturbed and were not satisfied with the explanation."

"Have you made any complaint?" the clerk asked. "I have been on duty only a half-hour."
"It isn't necessary to make a complaint," said the lieutenant. "We just want some information."

The clerk decided to give it. He looked at his board.

Rules for Pharmacist Under "Bluff King Hal"

A prominent pharmacist and physician of Henry VIII's reign named Bulleyn, who is said to have been a cousin of Anne Bulleyn, one of the king's numerous wives, laid down these rules for the practice of pharmacy, wrote Charles H. LaWall in "Four Thousand Years of Pharmacy":
"The apothecary must first serve God; foresee the end, be cleanly, and pity the poor. His place of dwelling and shop must be cleanly, to please the senses withal. His garden must be at hand with plenty of herbs, seeds, and roots. He must read Dioscorides.

"Room six-ten is occupied by Mrs. H. C. Carroll, of Providence, and her daughter."

"And room four-ten?"

The clerk turned again to his board. "Room four-ten by J. D. Adams, of Des Moines. That is Mr. Adams at the other end of the cigar counter." He indicated a man of slender build who was selecting a cigar.

"Our visitor could not have had either room. He was fat. He was, or pretended to be, confused by drink."

"Is it something the management should take up?" the clerk asked.
"No," said Stanton, "we are leaving today. It was only an incident, but we were curious."

"Just another thing," said Roberts. "Lieutenant Stanton was moved yesterday from the room he was occupying—what was it, Stanton?"

"Three-twelve."

"To room five-ten. Would the register still show him in three-twelve? Let's see if it does."

He turned back the pages of the book and found the line where Stanton had registered.

"Yes, it does. Who had room three-twelve after six o'clock?"

The clerk again turned to the board. "Mr. Peter L. Ashe, of Albany," he said.

"Ask Mr. Ashe, will you, when you see him, if he was aroused last night. We are going in to breakfast. Try to find out from him."

"It seems to me I should know why I'm making inquiries of our guests. If it is a serious matter the manager should be informed."

"If it's a matter of any importance it's only to us," said Stanton, "or may be. It's not likely to be to the hotel or to anyone else. Ask Mr. Ashe. Or we'll do it if you don't want to. You'll have a better opportunity."

"If I see him I will," said the clerk.

At breakfast Roberts explained that he had not registered his name but had assumed another. He was not on the books as himself. If the fat man had been a bird dog he would not have found Roberts. If the occupant of room three-twelve had any experience with a fat visitor or intruder it would make the incident at room five-ten understandable in only one fashion.

"Then you'll admit," said Roberts, "that they have begun. They've gone at it quick. The very night of the day they find me here."

"I've been encouraging your ideas too much," said the lieutenant. "They're improbable. The only reason I've taken any of them in is because I'm a bit fanciful myself. And I've known the copper type which won't see at all with the mind's eye. Eat your bacon and eggs, man. I don't want to take only a package of coffee and gin back home. Put a little food around your ribs."

"You still think I'm yellow, don't you?"

"I'm not wasting much time thinking about it. You probably know yourself better than I ever will. But if half the things you think are true happen to be true you'll need both nerve and luck to get through."

"I'll get by. I'm going out into the far Pacific. I'll get a couple of Malay knife-men who will be millionaires in their own coin as long as I'm alive. A few flower girls to go along with them. Some Chinese music and the Temple bells. Sixty thousand a year. It won't be so bad."

When they came out of the dining room a bellboy asked them to speak to the clerk.

"I saw Mr. Ashe," said the clerk. "He says he was called on the telephone some time after midnight and asked if he was Lieutenant Stanton. He said no and that was all."

"That's satisfactory," said the lieutenant. "It explains all we need know. Thank you."
"We'll pack and get out," said Roberts as they came to their room. "Pretty plain what was up last night. Your Dogberrys must have stuck with Blair and Ashley for about two minutes. I thought you were rather simple about that."

"Mister, I'm always simple," said Stanton. "It's my trusting nature. Did I mention the fact that I'm not a detective?"

"You don't need to mention it. Why don't you call up the police here and ask them what they mean?"

"Where Blair and Ashley are? What do you think we're interested in?"
"I don't give a d—n where Blair and Ashley are just now."
"Well, I do. There's a train up from Beacon on the other side of the river at ten. We're taking it. We'll get started moving and keep moving."

From then on until Stanton had him behind the drawing room door in the car of the train they took in Albany his nervousness increased. It had become acute just before train time. He was certain that he had sight of Blair and Ashley in the station.

"SICK HEADACHE?"

It is not necessary to give-in to headaches. It is just a bit old-fashioned! The modern woman who feels a headache coming on at any time, takes some tablets of Bayer Aspirin and heads it off.

Keep Bayer Aspirin handy, and keep your engagements. Headaches, systemic pains, come at inconvenient times. So do colds. You can end them before they're fairly started if you'll only remember this handy, harmless form of relief. Carry it in your purse and insure your comfort while shopping; your evening's pleasure at the theatre. Those little nagging aches that bring a case of "nerves" by day are ended in a jiffy. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking Bayer Aspirin! You'll find these tablets always help. If you get real aspirin, you'll get real relief. In every package of genuine Bayer tablets are proven directions which cover headaches, colds, sore throat, toothache, neuralgia, neuritis, sciatica, rheumatism, etc.

The tablets stamped Bayer won't fail you, and can't harm you. They don't depress the heart. They don't upset the stomach. So take them whenever you need them, and take enough to end the pain.

Prized Gray Hairs

Went Into Discard

A young advertising man has long been handicapped by the fact that, while young, he is not nearly so young as he looks. His youthfulness of appearance has often caused persons in authority—such as traffic policemen—to treat him with a degree of condescension rather than respect. His office boy, whose appearance is one of slightly premature maturity, is everywhere treated by subway guards, box office employees and garage attendants with infinitely more respect than he ever can achieve.

This persistent youthfulness has worried him, mildly, for ten years or more. It was, therefore, with something near real pleasure that he welcomed the first gray hairs. He envisioned himself as, at long length, attaining the dignity of appearance he had come to covet—partly because so many people absent-mindedly addressed him as "boy." The gray came along nicely. It spread along the sides of his head. He approached maturity. Then his wife, embarking on one of her periodical campaigns to smarten him up, insisted that he keep his hair cut shorter. He explained the need to the barber.

He emerged from the shop pleased with the idea that he now looked like an alert young executive. He dropped in at a soda fountain and sat waiting the busy dispenser. Finally the dispenser, a lad of about twenty, turned to him.

"And what is yours, young man?" he inquired.

The advertising man looked in the mirror. The barber had cut the gray away.—New York Sun.

Having none of the same suit he may lead any suit.
15. If either adversary leads out of turn, the Declarer has the choice of treating the card as exposed or he may call a lead from any suit he names from the first adversary who has the lead after the error is committed.
16. In every case a lead out of turn shall stand as regular if the next hand to the left plays before the error is noted because each side is then equally guilty of playing out of turn.
17. Playing Out of Turn: When a lead is made from either the Declarer's hand or the Dummy hand and the Fourth hand adversary plays before the Second hand adversary, the Declarer may call for the highest or lowest card of the suit led from the Second hand, or he may demand that the Second hand win or lose the trick by trumping or omitting to trump; or, in event he requests the highest or lowest card of the suit led and the Second hand has none he may require the Second hand to play his highest card of any other suit. Having none of this second suit named the Second hand may play any card he wishes.
18. When Declarer plays from both his own hand and Dummy before Second hand has played, the Fourth hand may play before the Second hand without penalty.
19. Bids Out of Turn: If any player bids out of turn and the error is called before the player on his left also bids out of turn it automatically bars his partner from further bidding in that hand. If the player on his left also bids out of turn there is no penalty. However, if the player on his left was the proper in-turn bidder the penalty stands.
20. Pass Out of Turn: If any player passes out of turn when no bid has yet been made, he can not bid until a bid has been made by some other player and this bid has been doubled or overcalled by another player.
21. If any player passes out of turn after a bid has been made, he can not bid until the last bid made has been doubled or overcalled.
22. Insufficient Bids: When any player bidding in his proper turn names a suit but fails to bid high enough to overcall the last previous bid he may correct himself without penalty by making the bid sufficient in the same suit if he does so before any other player calls attention to the error.
23. When an insufficient bid is made and attention is called to the error by any other player before the bidder has corrected himself, the opponents may demand that the bidder make the bid sufficient to overcall the last previous bid by bidding any suit he chooses but his partner is barred from further bidding in that hand.
24. An insufficient bid stands as regular, however, if the opponent on the left of the insufficient bidder bids before attention is called to the error.
