

TAWAS CITY ❖❖

WIN EASY VICTORY FROM HARRISVILLE

Tawas City's ball chasers galloped away to an 11 to 0 victory at the expense of the Harrisville Independents last Sunday. The contest was played at Harrisville.

Things went along in fine shape for most of the game. The locals, after scoring twice in the second frame and once in the fifth, had a lead of but 3-0 until the end of the eighth inning. In the ninth Tawas City spoiled what would have been a close contest by turning the Harrisville diamond into a race track, scoring eight runs, to put the game on ice.

Boulder's performance on the mound for Tawas City was the outstanding feature of the contest. He allowed only three hits, walked one, struck out six, and permitted but one runner to reach third base. The fact that Boulder was in splendid form, coupled with his mates' "day on" in the field, made the shut-out victory well deserved.

In its attempt to stay the bats of the locals Harrisville used three pitchers. Lack of control was the main reason for their defeat, since together they gave ten passes and hit five men.

Boldt grabbed the hitting honors by collecting three doubles and a single out of six trips to the plate. The feature hit of the game came in the ninth with the bases loaded when Ed. Libka doubled to clean the sacks.

On Memorial Day, Monday, May 30, the Tawas City boys meet East Tawas at East Tawas. Fans are assured a tough battle.

SCHOOL NOTES

Prepared and Edited by a Committee of the Student Council

High School
The students on the honor roll for this month are: Viola Burtzloff, Elsie Mueller, Leona Ulman, Robert Hamilton, Sylvia Koskie, Nathan Lincoln, Doris Mark, Arlene Leslie, Theone Lincoln, Arnold McLean, Vernon Davis, Leonard Hoshbach, Norma Kasichke, Nelda Mueller, and Irvin Wegner.

School will be closed on Monday of next week in commemoration of Memorial Day. Some of the high school students will participate in the program which will be held at the Tawas City cemetery.

Reviews are now in order in preparation for the final examinations which will be given to all students of the high school during the last week of the semester. The grade obtained on this final examination will count about one-third toward the final grade of the semester.

The baseball team "broke even" in their games this week losing to Oscoda by the score of 8 to 9 and swamping St. Joseph School by the score of 19 to 8. Errors were the cause of our defeat by Oscoda. In the St. Joseph game Zaharias pitched a nice game of ball but was given no support by his teammates, who turned singles into two-base hits and doubles into home runs by their erratic handling of the ball. Oscoda comes here next Tuesday for a return game.

The reporter evidently forgot to make mention last week of the result obtained by the Tawas City high school scholastic team at the (Turn to No. 1, Back Page)

ELISSA LANDI'S BEST SCREEN PORTRAYAL

The strangest week-end you could hope to attend, at the palatial castle of an English lord, with a scarlet woman, a gambler, a prize fighter and a war vet as the honored guests, and with romance, shame, adventure and tragedy uninvited but ever present.

The party starts Friday and Saturday, June 3 and 4, when Elissa Landi's new Fox picture, "Devil's Lottery," begins its local engagement at the Family Theatre, East Tawas.

With the glamorous and exotic Landi in this dramatic production are such stars of the screen as Victor McLaglen, Alexander Kirkland, Beryl Mercer, Paul Cavanagh, Barbara Weeks, Herbert Mundin, Ralph Morgan, Halliwell Hobbes and Ruth Warren.

"Devil's Lottery" is Miss Landi's first picture since her recent return from Europe and according to advance reports gives her the strongest and most compelling role of her sensational career, exceeding in dramatic power even her portrayal of the Russian peasant girl in "The Yellow Ticket." Sam Taylor directed the production from the adaptation of Nabro Bartley's widely read novel.

Mr. Schreck is well known throughout this section of Michigan, having been supervisor of the Huron National Forest for a number of years. In selling, Mr. Tanner did not sever his connection with the business, but will continue with the plant as an employe of Mr. Schreck.

On Sunday, May 29, the Isoco Independents play East Tawas at East Tawas, and on Memorial Day they engage the Sand Lake baseball team at Sand Lake.

HUGHES AGAIN PRODUCES MIGHTY AIR SPECTACLE

Hailed as the comedy triumph of the year, "Sky Devils," Howard Hughes' latest film presentation will be the attraction at the Family Theatre on Sunday and Monday, May 29 and 30.

This picture, featuring Spencer Tracy, William Boyd and George Cooper in the title roles, and with Ann Dvorak, Hollywood's "latest Cinderella," as the chief feminine interest, has been acclaimed by metropolitan critics as the outstanding comedy achievement of the year.

It is a rapid-fire and thrilling tale of three aerial musketeers, and its brilliant comedy is embellished throughout with spectacular air scenes.

This is Howard Hughes' first comedy production since his inaugural laugh hit, "Two Arabian Knights."

"Sky Devils" combines both comedy and spectacle, and besides its rare humor, contains many air-thrills comparable only to "Hell's Angels."

The Balearics

Street Scene in Palma, Majorca Island.

(Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)—WNU Service.

ENTER more than four centuries of government by European nations, the Balearic islands, now Spanish-owned, are seeking autonomy under the provisions of the new Spanish constitution.

It is doubtful if there is in the world's geographic photograph album a family group whose members show as little family resemblance as do those of the Balearics. Majorca, the big sister, so well known to the world, sits in the center, full-grown and radiantly beautiful. Minorca, slight and delicate, yet with a grace that suggests a certain knowledge of the world, sits at her side.

While Majorca is manifestly a daughter of Spain, Minorca's features and person partake of the north—a strange mixture of English and possibly a little Dutch with the Spanish.

On the big sister's other hand, Ibiza, a charming peasant in bright apron, skirt and shawl, hung with barbaric jewelry, piques the interest of the genealogist, for in her a different strain, probably Arabic, seems to predominate. She gazes out of the picture with level, quiet eyes that are a bit mysterious and disconcerting. Her face is unsmiling, even slightly smug, but still peculiarly attractive. At her feet is Formentera island, one of the two babies, almost Ibiza's counterpart in face and dress.

It seems unkind to draw attention to Cabrera, the other baby, crouched at Majorca's feet, for she is a spare, pathetic little figure, maltreated since birth. In her plain face are to be read the signs of misery.

Such are the sister islands, and their description fits their people. The islanders are the pleasantest of folk to visit—simple-hearted, even-tempered, sober-minded, honest, and kindly.

The welcome accorded the traveler in the Balearics differs according to island. Majorca greets the stranger with easy familiarity, for she has known many tourists in the last few years; Minorca with quiet grace; and Ibiza shyly; but the warmth of welcome is never in doubt. Ask a passer-by to indicate the direction to a store or hotel; you will be escorted to the door and bowed in, and generally you must not offer anything more material than thanks in return.

The ideal Balearic climate contributes enormously to the traveler's comfort, and, in contrast to what one often experiences on the continent, it is a gratifying surprise to find the fondas, or inns, invariably clean and their meals wholesome.

Mahon Has a Fine Harbor.

One of the outstanding features of the Balearic group is the abundance and excellence of its harbors. Mahon, the principal city of Minorca, is an example. One's ship picks its way down a water lane, through pink and gray shores capped with rolling green, into what the Spanish government plans to make one of the finest harbors in the Mediterranean.

Ever since Mago, the brother of Hannibal, wintered in this harbor (which still bears his name, Portus Magonis, now corrupted to Mahon), it has been famed as a refuge for ships, and its usefulness will be greatly increased when the Island of the Rats, a small knob of rock in the center of the basin, is removed.

The islanders tell proudly how in 1798 Lord Nelson, during the war with France, came into Mahon with his squadron, seized the mansion that overlooked the port where his ships rode, and installed the lovely Lady Hamilton. But the town's historians smile rather sadly and admit that, while history is replete with incidents of Nelson's visit, it does not bear out the story of Lady Hamilton.

And then Mahon! That is the way it comes. Suddenly, as the vessel rounds a point, it bursts into view, a quick splash of pink and white on the hillside, tier after tier of quaint streets, splendid in the sunshine.

Mahon sparkles, as does the whole island. It is a maze of spitting up-and-down-hill streets of shining dolls' houses. From the steamer's deck the town, terrace upon terrace of white houses, with the spires of the inevitable churches dominating the mass, appears pure Spanish; but that is just Mahon's little joke on the visitor, for many of the houses show English features peering from under their Spanish sombreros.

This mixture of the English and Spanish gives Mahon a character of its own, which is shared by its people. It is the woman who refuses to conform. In continental Spain and in the other islands they take their places in the fields with the men and the beasts of burden. Not so with upstanding Miss Minorca! She believes that "woman's place is in the home" or possibly, as a concession to the march of the times, in the factory, but not in the field, and there she refuses to go.

Minorca Spurns Alpargatas. Quite as remarkable, the alpargata, the rope-soled canvas sandal of Spain and the rest of the Balearics, is practically extinct here. Whether it is that Minorca, producing a large proportion of the fine shoes sold in Spain, excludes this humble footwear from a feeling of local pride, or whatever the reason, the fact remains that Minorca wears shoes.

The Balearics are rich in relics, from the days of the prehistoric inhabitants of the Mediterranean countries on down to modern times. Castles, churches, palaces, forts, and watchtowers are seen so frequently that they become almost matters of course. In Minorca there are still standing more than 200 of the talayots, taulas and naus—stone structures generally supposed to have been used in connection with prehistoric religious ceremonies and the burial of the dead—and the cliffs and mountains are literally honeycombed with caves.

Within twenty minutes' walk of Mahon there is a fairly well-preserved talayot, a truncated cone of huge stones, probably 40 feet in diameter and 25 feet in height, with a large taula near by. Surrounding the talayot, and marking another age in Minorcan history, are the walls of a fort built probably of the stones of the talayot.

The surrounding fields are strewn with fragments of pottery from prehistoric times on down through the Phoenician, Grecian, Roman and Arabic occupations, and the high stone walls over which one scrambles to reach the charmed hilltop are capped with other fragments laboriously picked from the fields by the island farmers.

The deepest thrill for the visitor to Minorca is to be found in its prehistoric caves. A talayot, taula, or nau is an awe-inspiring sight when one realizes what it stands for, but it has not the instantaneous effect on the imagination made by one of those cave homes of no one knows how many years ago.

The Cove Caves.

The Calas Covas, or Cove Caves, comprise a group in one of the many coves that indent the Minorcan shore, and certainly a better location from a dramatic standpoint could not have been selected by the cave-men. The cove is a wild, winding gash in the shore, descending sharply from the interior tableland to the sea.

The approach to the caves is along a narrow path hedged by a matted scrub growth and by fragments of the cove walls, which during the ages have become dislodged and have crashed to the valley. At the water level these walls are high, jagged, and precipitous; the sea beats and snaps at them and the place itself compels awe. Wild deeds are plainly indicated. Add, then, to all this the effect of some forty black apertures extending from the water line to the tops of the cliffs—all made by man when the human forehead was lower and human life more precarious than it is now.

It is a meager imagination, indeed, that does not immediately people the cove with small, active men, wide between the cheekbones and as agile as monkeys. We can conjure up the picture and see them leaping among the crags to their eerie homes, chattering and bickering and certainly ready to make it most unpleasant for foreign invaders such as ourselves.

Palma, the principal city of Majorca, is snugly situated at the central point of a magnificent horseshoe bay. Like all other waters of these remarkable islands, the Bay of Palma could supply half the colors of an artist's palette. The left-hand prong of the horseshoe shore, as one steams toward the city, was the scene of the first fighting between Don Jaime I, the Conqueror, and the defending Moors in 1229 A. D., and it is on this prong that Palma's fashionable tourist section has sprung up, with stately Bellver castle, built by Jaime II, overlooking it from the top of a handsome wooded hill.

Palma itself is a country village of 100,000 people and of considerable commercial importance.

DAIRY FACTS

COWS NEED FREE ACCESS TO WATER

Should at All Times Have All They Will Drink.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture—WNU Service.)

Dairymen who want the most milk and butterfat from their cows should arrange to let them drink as much water as they want when they want it, says T. E. Woodward, of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Woodward, who is senior dairy husbandman in the bureau of dairy industry, has completed experiments to determine the relation of methods of watering dairy cows to their water consumption and production. The tests were run both in warm and cold weather and included both high-producing and low-producing cows. The results of watering twice a day and once a day were compared with results obtained when the cows had free access to water.

In these tests, according to Mr. Woodward, the cows drank more water when watered only twice a day than when they had water at will or when watered only once a day, but their production was highest when they had water at will. The production of the cows in this experiment averaged 2.8 per cent more milk and 2.1 per cent more butterfat when given free access to water than when watered only twice a day; and when watered twice a day they produced 1 per cent more milk and 1.4 per cent more butterfat than when watered only once a day.

Mr. Woodward also reports that the increase in milk production as a result of more frequent watering was more marked in the case of the good producers than in the case of the low producers.

Inferior Bull Never Worth Keeping in Herd

Many inferior bulls are finding themselves installed as herd sires these days, probably much to their surprise, because they are the kind that usually go to the stock yards at a fairly early age. In fact, a considerable number of these have been to the stock yards, only to be rescued by some kind-hearted truck driver and taken back out in the country as a herd sire. Of course, the fact that the truck driver is able to make a few dollars by saving him for a while may also be a contributing cause.

It's a good deal for the live stock trucker, but it's a tough deal on the dairyman. The bull in service now will determine largely the ability of the herd four and five years from now. It will mean the placing in the dairy barn of milk-manufacturing machines that lack the capacity to turn out large quantities of product or profit.

Spray for Flies

According to J. J. Davis, entomologist at Purdue university, a good homemade spray for keeping flies off cows can be prepared by mixing one pint of oil of tar with one gallon of used crank case oil.

Another recommended spray may be made by mixing one gallon of fish oil, two ounces of oil of tar, two ounces of oil of pennyroyal and one-half pint of kerosene.

The most satisfactory way to apply these is with a small compressed air sprayer that can be obtained at most stores handling spray materials.

There are several other reliable commercial fly sprays on the market.

Grain Sheaf Hay

Oat sheaves are very nearly equivalent in feeding value to a combination of equal parts by weight of threshed oats and oat straw. Oat sheaves alone are hardly a satisfactory dairy cow ration. The wheat sheaves will perhaps be a little more nutritious than the oats. Horses can be carried quite satisfactorily on either oat sheaves or wheat sheaves provided they are not at hard work.

Some extra grain for cows is needed while they are milking. A mixture of equal parts of barley, oats, wheat, wheat bran and oilmeal will prove very satisfactory.

Intestinal Trouble

Scours or diarrhea is merely the visible symptom of an intestinal irritation, either caused by food or parasites. Cows may contract a disease known as Johne's disease, or the trouble may be caused by faulty food. If you have much trouble, we suggest you see your veterinarian or write your state veterinarian. In the meantime, feed the cows one teaspoonful slaked lime, one tablespoonful whole flaxseed and a tablespoonful charcoal in ground oats once daily. A little sugar added will help also. Examine the hay for mold, or the pasture for fern, etc.—Maho Farmer.

Feeding Minerals to Cows

Tests at the United States dairy experiment station, at Beltsville, Md., indicate that if cows are allowed free access to a palatable bone meal, they will tend to adjust their consumption to meet their needs. Good producing cows fed a ration estimated to be deficient in phosphorus, ate generous quantities of bone meal at the experiment farm, while poor producers having a smaller demand for minerals ate very little.—Wallace's Farmer.

Roses for the Veterans

The mothers on the byways have looks of yearning sadness, And helmets by the stairways flood homes with memories; A sense of loss on gay days subdues the note of gladness, While winter with its gray days moans through the lonely trees.

And fathers on the May days pin on their scarlet poppies, And gratitude on pay days reminds of others' loss; Read "Christ in Flanders" Sundays and pass around their copies, Recall their boys in old days before they faced the cross.

Plant roses by the highways for boys that manned the trenches, Place stars along the skyways for aces of the clouds, And maples on the boulevards which grief with tears bedrenches; Let cedars in lone graveyards guard those our love enshrouds.

A wreath float on the sea wide which o'er their graves is mourning; Put lilies by the bedside of boys with limp and scar; And help them at the crossways where crowds rush in on scorning, And open all the doorways from which mangled limbs debar.

Forget-me-nots strew always along the veterans' marches, And keep the tombs and memories of loyal heroes green; So may the golden gateway, with glorious rainbow arches, Bespan the veterans' roadway that leads to the Unseen.

Nation's Gold-Star Mothers

American gold-star mothers in France for visits to the graves of sons who died in the World war gave an impressive background last year for the most extensive observance of Memorial day yet held abroad.

Troops fired volleys in salute of the dead at the American cemeteries throughout France. Taps were sounded, and dignitaries spoke. But the feature of the day were the trips before and after the ceremonies by the war mothers to the graves of those they lost more than 11 years before.

At Suresnes cemetery, outside of Paris, Ambassador Edge made the principal address, referring to them as those "who had given those who were dearest to them that others might live in the full enjoyment of their liberty."

"You mothers instilled into these young men the principles for which they laid down their lives," he said. "You taught them the fundamentals of loyalty, courage, truth and vision. You with the fortitude which mothers throughout the ages have mustered, held your heads high as you bade them good-by."

"Let us look upon the myriads of crosses," he concluded, "and realize with poignant emotion the magnitude of our responsibility. We seem to see the heroes of Chateau Thierry, Belleau Wood, Thiaucourt, St. Mihiel and the Argonne pointing forward, forward; we seem to hear the great chorus of their voices calling to us to carry on until mankind breaks through the shadows and eternal peace dwells on earth."

Lesson of Memorial Day

Memorial day is one of the most impressive, most touching and most typically American of the days we set apart. From earliest childhood one remembers the gathering of the old veterans, the march under the warm spring sun and the graveyard where gay flowers and the bright Stars and Stripes are placed at the headstones of the dead.

What hath this day deserved? What has it done That it in golden letters should be set Among the high tides of the calendar?

It is, indeed, an easier question for Shakespeare to ask than for the average person to answer. The day symbolizes so much sacrifice and recalls those critical moments so rare in the history of a great nation that words and phrases too often fail. But if we cannot express all that the day embodies, we can let it remind us that from the birth of the Republic there have always been men and women who have so richly prized America that they were willing to give up their all that America might survive.

If the blessings of peace which these dead gained for us make similar sacrifices on our part unnecessary, they should not blind us to the suffering which the soldiers of '61, '98 and '17 endured. Rather should they impel us to care well for the country they prized so highly. Pride in their achievements may, indeed, be ours on this day.

Their Deaths Not in Vain

An eagle's nest, befouled with the remnants of dead things, the relics of grim slaughterings for the preservation of life and comfort is an unsightly and unsavory object, still from its squalor emerges in due time the golden eagle, most glorious, and grandest on the wing of all the birds.

So from all the tragedies and sorrows of homes, fortunes and battlefields recalled to mind on Memorial day, we trust, to come the promise of a peace which is to soar far above all possible prospects of wars.

It adds to the thankfulness to bear in mind that those splendid ones whose steadfast valor and sturdy vigor won for us the victory we commemorate, won also for us and the future a promise of a peace which we trust will never be ruptured by war.

They whose loss we recall by no means died in vain, since they won the victory for peace and the right.

Could we but hear them from their places of rest, they would doubtless be declaring in unanimous chorus, that their discomforts, sufferings and deaths all made up but a trifling price to pay for a peace, which will assure to mankind an ending of all wars.

Honor Both Blue and Gray

As Memorial day approaches and we prepare to observe the beautiful custom long since established of remembering the heroic dead it is interesting to read the account given by a leading newspaper of the inauguration of that custom.

In an editorial written in 1877 we read: "Preparations for observing Decoration day were carried in this year upon a far more extensive scale than ever before. For three or four years attempts have been made to effect a co-operation between the survivors of the Federal and the Confederate armies and to insure an equal honor to the remains of the deceased Northern and Southern soldiers and sailors. This year for the first time in history the veterans of both armies will march together through the streets to strew with flowers the graves of those who perished in the great war. Such an event marks a new epoch. It is the apotheosis of the revived feeling of brotherhood. There has been a great deal of oratory on this subject and some charming verses have been written, but now the banner of fraternity is flung to the breeze without hesitation and with faith in public approval. The Blue and the Gray clasp hands above the tomb of their fallen braves, and in the great future of this reunited country there is to be no resurrection of sectional feuds and dead and buried bitterness. "The past is forgotten, and the country's future is everything. This is the lesson and the era of reconciliation."

Modern Contract Bridge

By Lelia Hattersley

No. 2.

Opening Bids of One

THERE can be but one opening or original bid on each deal. All bids which follow this first bid are designated by different terms and influenced by different factors. The opening bid may be made by the dealer, by the second hand after dealer has passed, by the third hand if both dealer and second hand have passed, or by the fourth hand if all the others have passed. Third or fourth hand original bids require greater minimum strength than such bids when made by the dealer or second hand. The original or opening bid is the most clear-cut in its requirements. In the approach-forcing system, the opening bid most often employed is the bid of one in a suit, because a sound suit bid, even a four card minor, is always preferred to a no trump.

An original suit bid of one in a major or minor is declared on the same type of hand. While neither ever shows a suit which cannot be played at the trump named, such a declaration must be regarded as primarily for the purpose of conveying information to your partner; information which he is expected to act upon throughout all the subsequent bidding and play of the hand.

When playing contract according to the approach-forcing system, Dealer or Second Hand looks over his cards and announces one spade, heart, diamond or club, he is practically "talking across the board." In language entirely fair and equitable, because it is understood, or may be, by every player at the table, such a bid says: "Partner, I have sufficient length in this suit to play it as trumps. It may be a four card suit with at least 1½ honor-tricks at the top, or a longer suit with less top strength. But most important of all, I have 2½ defensive tricks somewhere in the hand; tricks which should prove winners whether we or the opponents secure the final contract. This much I promise from my hand. There may be something more, but you can be sure there is nothing less."

Or if the declaration is one no trump: "Partner, I have at least 2½ honor-tricks distributed in three suits, and my hand contains no biddable suit." In the position of opening the bid third or fourth hand, the bidder shows a minimum of three honor-tricks. As the prime requisite for a sound opening bid is a definite number of honor-tricks, the primary need for a sound approach-forcing player is a thorough knowledge of honor-trick values.

The approach-forcing system has discarded the old fashioned quick trick count in favor of a more accurate method of computing the probable value of honor cards held singly and in combinations. The standard table of honor-tricks follows:

THE DEFENSIVE VALUES OF HONORS
A K	2
A K J	Honor-tricks
A K Q
A Q
A Q 10
A Q J	1½
A J 10	Honor-tricks
K Q 10

Venice Honors Browning

The commune of Venice has bought the Rezzonico palace, on the Grand canal, where Browning wrote "Asolanando," and where he died on December 12, 1889. From the heirs of Browning the palace had passed to Count Hirschel de Minerbo. It had been offered for sale for some time, but on account of the difficult times had not found a buyer.

Thus abandoned, the palace had already given signs of falling into decay, and in the ceilings, frescoed by Tiepolo, marks caused by water and damp had begun to appear. The commune of Venice decided to buy and restore it.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Make-Up

MAKE-UP seems to be a topic of perennial interest to women. Many women have learned the secrets of applying rouge to apparently change the contour of the face, bring out the brightness of the eyes. They have learned how to choose the shades of their make-up to blend with their natural coloring and enhance their personality. But few women know that make-up should be changed with the seasons, as the color and tone of the skin changes, and that make-up should harmonize not only with the skin and the color of eyes and hair but also with the color of the costume one is wearing. Orange rouge, for instance, or rouge with an orange tone in it may be very flattering to some types. But this shade is absolutely taboo when a red dress is worn. This applies to lip rouge as well as cheek rouge and to shade and tone of powder, too. It may be necessary to have two or three different shades of rouge and powder, but the price is a small one to pay for true loveliness and harmony.

Make-up carefully chosen, deftly applied, skillfully blended can transform a plain woman into a very lovely one and make of a pretty woman a breath-taking beauty.

The purpose of make-up should be to enhance, to add gloriously to the natural charms. It should never be called upon to conceal.

After preliminary skin care and foundation comes the question of rouge. Choose it according to your type and coloring. It should blend beautifully with your skin, bring out the beauty of your eyes, harmonize with the color of your hair. Color harmony is the thing you are working for. It is the very key to perfection in make-up.

There are three types of rouge—liquid, cream, and compact or dry rouge. The first is the most difficult to apply and is usually used during the summer when the bathing season makes water-proof cosmetics desirable. The cream or paste rouge gives a warm, natural under the skin glow and lasts a long time. The dry rouge is the easiest to apply but does not "stay on" very long. The combination of cream rouge as a foundation and compact to touch up the make-up achieves a lasting and lovely effect.

The secrets of blending rouge are simple—but need practice. Follow your natural color line and have the edges as soft as possible so that the rouge seems to fade away very naturally. A two-minute bending exercise, a hot towel held over the skin for a minute, or a little brisk patting with skin tonic will tell you where your natural color is—or should be.

Powder and Color Harmonies

THE chief purpose of powder is to give a natural, well-groomed effect. For daytime, choose a shade that blends so perfectly with your skin that it is scarcely perceptible (the powder, I mean). An obviously powdered look acts as an aging mask. But a shiny nose would mar a Venus. The happy medium is a softened finish, without shine, but only the faintest layer of powder. The color of the skin is usually a blend of pink and yellow, with the proportions varying. Powders that repeat these combinations usually blend best.

Powder is perhaps the most important item in the toilette of the discriminating woman. It deserves as much thought as you give your most gorgeous gown.

A few years ago powder and rouge were the items chiefly used for make-up. Now lip rouge and eye shadow are found on the majority of dressing tables.

The majority of women find it advisable to limit eyeshadow to evening use, but skillfully applied it adds immeasurably to a woman's beauty.

There can be no hard and fast rules in make-up. Every woman is a law unto herself. Not only must your coloring be taken into consideration but also the tone and transparency of the skin.

Let us take the classic blonde type—just as she would choose delicate colors to complement her golden hair and blue eyes, she chooses a light pink rouge, a lip paste to harmonize, a pale yellowish shade of powder with a suggestion of pink in it (usually called flesh or natural)—blue eyeshadow for evening, a wee bit of light brown mascara or eyebrow pencil.

The in-between type enhances her coloring with a deeper rouge—a medium shade—with a hint of orange in it—her powder should have a more creamy color—her lips rouge must harmonize exactly with cheek rouge—if her eyes are a grayish brown, mauve or purple eyeshadow harmonizes beautifully; for hazel eyes green eyeshadow; for dark eyes brown eyeshadow—and light brown or dark brown mascara according to the shade of the hair. The olive-skinned beauty uses little rouge, but a vivid lip paste, deep brown eyeshadow and black mascara.

The dark brunette or Spanish type uses a dark rouge, a rachel powder, brown or purple eyeshadow and black mascara.

THE CHILDREN'S STORY

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

PATIENCE, be you young or old. Brings its own reward, we're told. Buster Bear doesn't believe it. He doesn't see it that way at all. He is willing to admit that it does sometimes, but not always. No, indeed, not always! Perhaps that is because the reward isn't always what Buster wants it to be. You know how it is when we set our hearts on a thing and then don't get it. The disappointment makes us overlook some of the good things we do get. I suspect that it was this way with Buster that day when he discovered Busy Bee in the Green Forest.

Buster had heard the hum of Busy Bee and then had discovered her at work among some flowers in a little opening among the trees right back of where he was sitting. Then she flew away. Now the sight and the sound of Busy Bee had awakened pleasant thoughts in Buster Bear—thoughts of honey. Can you imagine any sweeter thoughts? Buster knows a great deal about Busy Bee. Ever since he was a little cub he has been interested in Busy Bee. I am afraid it has been a selfish interest, but none the less it has been a real interest. It has led him to find out a very great deal about Busy Bee. He knows that Busy Bee makes honey. He knows that she gathers the sweets from the flowers of the Green Meadows and the Green

Forest and that in a secret storehouse she packs these sweets away in the form of honey. He knows that sometimes this secret storehouse is in a hollow tree, sometimes in a hollow log, and sometimes even in a cave among the rocks. He knows that Busy Bee never wastes any time, not a single minute, but from morning till night is at work gathering the sweets of the flowers and making them into honey. He knows, too, that she isn't a safe person to interfere with, that she carries the sharpest of little lances with her all the time, and little as she is isn't the least bit afraid to use it on even such a big fellow as he is. Yes, indeed, Buster Bear knows a great deal about Busy Bee.

When she flew away from those flowers in the little opening among the trees in the Green Forest, she went so suddenly that Buster didn't see in which direction she flew. "Never mind," said Buster himself, "she'll come back; and next time I'll be sharper and see which way she goes. This is a very pleasant and comfortable place, so I'll just wait until she returns."

So Buster sat down where he could watch those flowers, made himself comfortable and waited for Busy Bee

SO PLENTIFUL are the herring that make their way up and down the shallow waters of the famous brook at Pembroke, Mass., that the town has hit upon the novel idea of furnishing motorists with nets and then charging them 25 cents a dozen for their catch. It is estimated that over 120,000 herring make their way up this brook every day.

JUST BALANCING

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

A BIRD upon a twig, Just balancing, A bird not very big Or anything; Although the branches sway In every breeze, He sings, the best he may, His harmonies.

And what are we? Like him We dip and dance, Upon a swaying limb The sport of chance. The sky not always blue, The winds at rest, We sometimes live it through And do our best.

Our hold on joy is poor, And winds are strong, And little is secure For very long, And yet to heaven's Word Still let us cling, As bravely as a bird Just balancing.

to come back. And while he waited he dreamed—day dreams, you know—and they were very pleasant dreams. They were sweet dreams, the very sweetest of dreams, for they were all of honey. He dreamed of a great hollow tree and that he had climbed it and with his great strong claws had torn it open and found more honey than he could eat all at once, and Buster can eat a great deal. He smacked his lips quite as if that honey were real, and not just dream honey.

So Buster sat and dreamed and watched the flowers and waited for Busy Bee to return. He waited and waited. He was very patient, was Buster Bear. With such pleasant dreams it wasn't hard to be patient. You see, he felt that patience might make those dreams come true. When Busy Bee should come back for more sweets he would follow her straight to her secret storehouse. So he waited and waited.

The Jolly Little Sunbeams were very comforting and pleasant. It was very, very still and beautiful there. His stomach was reasonably full. Altogether Buster Bear was very comfortable. He blinked at the flowers. He nodded. Presently he lay down, and then—well, then those sweet day dreams became still sweeter sleep dreams. Yes, sir, Buster Bear fell asleep. And while he slept, Busy Bee returned and went away again, not once but several times. The Black Shadows had begun to creep through-out the Green Forest, when at last Buster opened his eyes. He scrambled to his feet and shook himself. Then he growled a rumblingly grumpy growl of disappointment. He knew that Busy Bee would not return again that day, but had gone to bed for the night. His patience had brought no

BACK YARD GARDEN

A LITTLE garden at the back of the city lot, a bit of space where green things may grow in neat rows, a half dozen tomato plants, bush beans, carrots, radishes and onions—what a joy it can add to one's life. Even where space is not such a factor a small garden near the kitchen where it may be tended is to be recommended.

A garden south or west of the house gets more protection from cold winds, and better sunlight. Any kind of soil with proper handling will make good gardens. Place the rows so that they get as much spacing as possible, making the garden look trim by the proper spacing and placing of seeds. Plan the crops so that the soil is working all summer. The time to plant depends upon the date of the last frosts, which is not always reliable, but many of our vegetables like lettuce, radishes, turnips, spinach and parsley are not afraid of a little cool weather.

Where one has space for corn, it must be planted after all frost danger is past. Corn is one of the most satisfactory of vegetables to raise. In good soil, with plenty of moisture and heat, with a few hoeings, a crop will respond that will delight the heart. There is nothing equal to the fresh juicy golden bantam or the country gentleman, and later the luscious milky ears of the evergreen.

When the last frost is over plant early beets, onion seed, carrots and such tender vegetables as the bush bean. Now the tomato plants may be set out, the cabbage and eggplant as well as pepper plant and cucumber seed may be sown, also melon and squash. Do not have these near enough to mix the pollen, or the melons will not be of good flavor.

THE STORY

(WNT Service.)
Copyright by William Byron Mowery.

Six barrels board the steamer, Midnight Sun, tied to the bank of the Mackenzie, hold up Father Claverly and other passengers, kill Jimmy Montgomery, formerly of the Mounted, and get away with gold dust and furs. Corp. Bill Hardscock reports the crime to Sgt. Alan Baker at the Mounted Police post at Fort Enchiridion. Baker has a dispute with his incompetent superior, Inspector Haskell, over plans for the capture of the bandits. Baker starts out with five men. At MacMillan's trading post, Joyce MacMillan is alone, awaiting the return of her father. She is thrilled to see Baker. She had hoped to marry him, but had been stunned by news of his engagement to Elizabeth Spaulding. From his talk she learns that the marriage is not certain.

CHAPTER IV

Rifles in the Prow

During the meal, as Joyce sat at the head of the table pouring coffee and watching a pan of biscuit in the stove, Alan kept studying her, wondering how any girl could stand the isolation and poverty and lonely battle she was enduring. Two whole years here, two years out of her young womanhood, the choice time of her life, sacrificed at this isolated trading post, giving up everything that a girl holds dear! She was too fine to be leading a life like this. She ought to get out of it. There was a limit to her bravery and spirited strength.

As the men were pushing back their chairs and reaching for pipes, he felt some one prodding him with a boot under the table. Looking up, he saw Larry elevate an eyebrow at him.

"Wants to talk with me alone," Alan surmised; and he gave Larry a slight nod. To the other men he said rather sharply: "You men, put away your pipes and police up these dishes. Don't leave a stack like this for Joyce. Bill, you see to that."

Casually going outside a few moments later, he glanced around and saw Larry waiting for him a dozen yards away, over near the storage shed. Sauntering across, he asked quietly:

"What's up now, Larry?" Larry flipped his cigarette aside. "Come in here with me, Alan. I want to show you something."

Producing a pocket flash, he played its yellow shaft upon a pack of furs on a low shelf.

"Alan, you see that wolf skin they're wrapped in? That's what caught my eye. It's a Yukon animal, probably from the Kayukuk headwaters in the Endicott mountains. It made me curious, so I pried into the pack and saw these dark otter. They came from the Yukon, too. I thought to myself, 'There's no wolf or otter like them in Dave MacMillan's trading territory.' But say, Alan, look—(hold the flash a minute)—look here. Larry pulled out several of the rich, dark-gleaming otter pelts and rolled back the fur at the broad end. "Take a good look at them blue stamp marks."

Alan bent closed and he suddenly gasped.

"Good Lord! They're L. & H. furs! What're they doing here, Larry—in Dave MacMillan's possession?"

"Stolen! What else? What's more to us, Alan, I checked on them serial numbers, and this bunch is one of the packs stolen from the Midnight Sun!" He added slowly: "Maybe we don't know yet who them six strangers are, but now we surer'n h—I know who's directing 'em!"

In low tones, there in the darkness, they talked the situation over.

Larry finally asked: "You're going to arrest him, Alan? An accomplice that way, even if he didn't have a hand in the actual killing, they'll give him the limit. It'll be h—I on Joyce."

Alan stirred. His voice was torn with pain. "I don't know what I'll . . . But I'll have to do something about it."

After a little silence he directed: "Larry, you go down and relieve Ped. Don't tell these other men anything about this yet."

When Larry had gone, Alan left the musty-smelling shed, and walked up along the side of the trading hall to Joyce's widow. As he came up, purposely cracking a stick, he had a glimpse of her whole room. Its furniture was a dresser, a chair originally straight but with a pair of rockers fitted to it, a sheet-iron stove with woodbox against the wall, and a bed which he knew had been a condemned barracks cot. But Joyce had somehow lifted the bleak room almost to cheeriness. There were birchbark creels of great-spurred violets and Arctic primulas and adder's-tongue on the dresser, some spigs of bright-red berries above it, a wolf-rug across the foot of the bed, and on the dresser a picture of herself, of her former employer down in Ottawa, of her dad and mother.

She had heard him and turned toward the window and recognized him in the weak light.

He said: "Joyce, I've got to talk with you. Maybe you'd better come out here where we'll be alone."

She stepped to the window.

As Alan helped her down, trying to say lightly, "It's unbecome, Joyce, to come through a window that way," he felt the hard pulse of that little bulge automatic pressed against him. At least his gift was still protection to her.

He suggested: "Let's go a little farther away, Joyce. I don't want that long-eared Whipple overhearing this."

Rather aimlessly, he led her a stone-toss west of the storage shed to a little clear place in the spruces. Trying to prepare her in some measure, he told her of Larry going into the shed, happening to notice a strange pack of furs, examining them, seeing the L. & H. marks and the serial numbers. He hesitated a moment then, with Joyce frowning perplexedly at those strange furs being in the shed; but there was no mercy possible now, and he took the final step.

"Joyce, I hate myself for telling you this. But you've got to know. Those furs in your father's shed are one of the packs stolen from the Midnight Sun."

"Stolen? From the Midnight Sun? But Alan! What—what's it doing here?"

"This afternoon while you were asleep, Joyce, your father, or else one of these bandits, put the furs in there. That pack is—it must be his share in the arrangement. Joyce, your father is somehow connected with these bandits."

Realization came slowly to Joyce. Then sharply, like an instinctive defense, came passionate disbelief and anger; and she drew a little away from him.

"I'm sorry, sorry," he said in heartfelt sympathy. "You father used to be my friend. And he's your father; that's what hurts the worst."

Joyce drew still farther back from him, with her eyes flashing, with a defiant toss of her head. He believed

As Alan finished his reluctant indictment, her resolve hardened. . . . She was going to fight for her father and defend him with every weapon in her power.

One way shot into her mind. Her proud head dropped a little, and she asked hesitantly: "Alan, do you have to arrest him? Only you and Mr. Younge and I know about these furs being here. If you could—if we could some way cover it up—"

She checked the plea. She could not bring herself to put Alan in so fearful a dilemma. Looking up, she met his gaze squarely again. "No, I can't ask that of you. I'd never ask that."

He chose his words very carefully. "The question with me, Joyce, is this: How deeply is your father involved? I can't think he'd go the whole length with these bandits. I can't think he'd countenance murder or even so brazen a robbery as these men staged. Perhaps they deluded him about their intentions. If they're caught, they're going to lie and throw as much of the blame on him as they can. But if I can have the truth as a working basis, I can nail their lies. We can't hope to save him from a penalty, but we maybe can save him from the—the worst."

Joyce blanched at the last word, at the specter it aroused. Her father stood charged with murder. In her heart the Law suddenly became a tangible and fearsome thing.

Alan went on: "You stand a better chance of getting the truth from him than I do, Joyce. He'd suspect me if I tried to talk to him. But with you he'd be more frank and open. When he comes in, won't you try to find out what you can?"

"You mean I'm to watch him and gather what hints I can, and perhaps ask questions that seem innocent?"

"That's exactly it, Joyce. Exactly what I meant. If you'll do that for me, if you'll help me do that . . . Joyce, don't you see why I told you this? Don't you see it's because I'm going to stick with you? I won't see your dad railroaded. I'll help him to the limit I can—because he's your father."

He was facing her in the ghostly morning light. Again he was conscious that his four months of absence, breaking the friendship between them, had invested her with an aura of strangeness to him; and that all during this brief fateful visit he had become aware of her in a quickened sense. How brave and comradely a girl! And in spite of her hard life here, in spite of her efforts to be a good bush-logger, how winsome and girlish and adorable she was!

her father guilty! He had gone prying around for evidence! He was blind! Heartless! A man-hunting wolf! Inhuman! Worse. . . .

Alan was thoroughly surprised. He had seen Joyce handle insolent Indians and breeds, shooting their dialects at them like fluted Yellowknife arrows; but with him, with Bill, with her father, she had always been as quiet as a summer wind. The way she was assailing him now, defending her father, revealed a new depth to her nature.

Without a word of reply or self-protection, he took all she had to tell him. He felt that her anger was not so much against him personally as against the inexorable duty he represented.

"Joyce, please don't," he begged. "Please listen. Maybe I am inhuman and a wolf, and've got sawdust where my brains ought to be. But also I'm . . . Don't you understand how I'm between the devil and the deep sea?"

She looked up, with tears still glistening on her cheeks.

"Alan, I don't believe—oh, I can't believe—about that pack. Alan, say it isn't so!"

He bewildered misery tugged at Alan. He wanted to comfort her with some lie. But he dared not build up any hope, for he knew it would only prove a tragic disappointment to her in the end.

"Joyce, we've got to believe. The pack is there. No use going over to see if it is. Larry and I made no mistake. We mustn't blind ourselves to the truth."

She suggested eagerly: "Don't you think these furs might have got there some way besides—besides. . . . Alan! Don't you see—that pack was planted there! Those men knew you'd find it, and stop, and investigate, and arrest my dad! That would give them time and chance to escape—"

As gently as he could, Alan interrupted her. "No, Joyce. Your dad wasn't framed. Larry and I talked that possibility over. If those men had reasoned as you suggest, they'd have put the furs in a conspicuous place where we'd have been sure to find them. The pack wasn't planted. Let's not delude ourselves."

"Joyce, let's try to look at the evidence as others will see it. Your father is absent, and has been for four days, just at this particular time. There is the question of these bandits being strangers and yet getting about this country so well. There's the fact that he was bitter against the big companies and probably was tempted to retaliate against them in the only way in his power. And, Joyce, there's the bale of furs; that evidence alone is enough to prove a connection. . . ."

Joyce listened to him piling up the evidence, but the entire staggering total of it did not sway her. Against it she set all she knew of her father's nature. In her whole life she had never seen him enter a penny of false debt against the most ignorant Indian, or deviate a hair's breadth from his word of honor. She often had thought that the only person in the world her dad had ever wronged was himself. Though he had been drinking heavily and taking up with none-too-unwilling Indian women, it seemed contrary to his whole nature to plot with bandits, to gang with murderers.

As Alan finished his reluctant indictment, her resolve hardened. . . . She was going to fight for her father and defend him with every weapon in her power.

One way shot into her mind. Her proud head dropped a little, and she asked hesitantly: "Alan, do you have to arrest him? Only you and Mr. Younge and I know about these furs being here. If you could—if we could some way cover it up—"

NOTED CASTLE NOW RESTAURANT

Mansion Once a Favorite With Prussian Kings.

Potsdam.—One of Prussia's finest mansions, Castle Marquardt, near Potsdam, is the last victim of the economic crisis. In its heyday it was the favorite sojourn of Prussian kings, haunted by a ghost which historians now believe to have been a faked one. Castle Marquardt will be turned into a restaurant and week-end hotel because its present owner, a German industrialist, cannot afford its upkeep.

Castle Marquardt's history goes back to the Fifteenth century, when it was owned by the Baron Zabel von Schorin. In the following centuries it frequently changed hands.

In 1795 Castle Marquardt came into the possession of its most famous owner, Gen. von Bischofswerder, the declared favorite of King Frederick William II of Prussia. It was then that the ghost made its first appearance—a ghost which was to play a prominent role in Prussian history.

The ghostly apparition was first seen, or rather heard, in a small stone building, the so-called Blue grotto, adjoining Castle Marquardt. Hidden away among thick shrubbery in the beautiful Eighteenth century park, the interior was laid out with azure stones. The grotto received its only light from a costly crystal chandelier, which, together with the blue of the azure stones, produced mystic and beautiful color effects.

It was into this setting that Gen. von Bischofswerder used to lead the romantically inclined Prussian king to attend ghostly midnight sessions. As soon as the king entered the grotto mysterious off-stage music could be heard apparently coming from nowhere. When the ghostly tunes had subsided, the king would invariably address the ghost, asking him how best to rule the country. As if by magic, an invisible voice would answer in muffled whispers. More often than not the king would follow the apparently heaven sent counsel.

It was not long after the general's death that Castle Marquardt's pet ghost was unmasked. It was found that the Blue grotto, scene of the ghostly sessions, had double walls behind which a man of flesh and blood could comfortably hide, play a harp and answer any questions put to him. Thus, with the aid of a co-plotter, the crafty general for a while ruled the destinies of Prussia.

After changing hands several times, Castle Marquardt was finally bought by Dr. Peter Louis Ravene, descendant of an old French Protestant family which fled to Germany in the days of the wars of religion and received the special protection of the Prussian king. The present day Ravene is a leading industrialist. Hard times are forcing him now to let the historic mansion to a British wine merchant, who is turning it into a restaurant for Berlin's week-enders.

Another German palace, that of Count Hermann Griebenow in Berlin, has closed its gates and the luxurious building in rococo style will be sold at auction. In prewar days Count Griebenow, with a yearly income of $250,000, was one of the richest men in Germany. War inflation, and the crisis ate away the Griebenow fortune.

Bringing City Methods to Forests

Modern firefighting apparatus is introduced in remote mountain districts of British Columbia to combat the blazes that have proved so disastrous in the past. A number of these light trucks have been put into service by the Canadian government's parks department. The motor engine is used to operate the automatic pumps which can throw a powerful stream upon the blazing bush.

South Africa Offers a New Kind of Cow

Johannesburg, South Africa.—The farmers of South Africa are interested in a new hybrid on the ranch of Captain Helme, a settler of Westminster in Orange Free State.

A cross between an eland, one of Africa's giant antelopes, and an ordinary domestic Friesian cow has yielded the first authentic "Frieland."

This new hybrid promises to be an animal suitable for the more tropical regions of the continent.

Frat Initiates Member Voted in 56 Years Ago

Berkeley, Calif.—Fifty-six years after he was voted into membership, Dr. Edmond O'Neill, emeritus professor of chemistry at the University of California, was initiated into the Phi Delta Theta college fraternity.

Nearly three score years ago, when the professor was a sophomore at the university, he was pledged to the fraternity and accepted for membership.

But, before the ceremony was performed, the Phi Delta Theta house was burned and all records destroyed.

It was five years later that the chapter again became active, and during that time, Professor O'Neill had been graduated from school.

His initiation was urged by alumni recently, so the professor, who was graduated in 1879, again became a "frosh" in the fraternity.

California Makes New Mark as Healthy State

Sacramento.—With a death rate of 11.3 per thousand population, California established the best health record in the history of the nation.

There were 67,513 deaths last year as compared to 66,178, an increase of only 1,335 despite an estimated gain in population of 200,000, records of the state department of public health show.

The state's death rate has decreased steadily since 1906 when the rate was 14.4 per thousand.

Royal Parrot Deletes Sea Quips From Talk

London.—King George's pet parrot is no longer a debutante. She is forty, and was bought in Port Said when the king was in the navy.

Originally, Charlotte knew some of the less publishable nautical phrases and talked a little French, but lately she has confined herself to asking visitors to the palace: "What about it?"

No More Tea Parties?

Boston.—Boston Harbor no longer may be used as a "wastebasket." A law, effective this month, prohibits throwing of refuse into the harbor, under penalty of fines of $20 to $100.

Will Give Mourners Feast

Swansea, Wales.—Morgan Curtiss provided in his will for a hotel banquet to mourners who attended his funeral.

Hero of Plane Crash Is Given 4 Months in Jail

London.—During a flight over Iraq, in 1925, a Royal Air Force airplane crashed in flames from 4,000 feet. The pilot was badly burned and the observer, Ridley Oake Stanton, twenty-five, carried him through the desert for two days. The pilot died at a dressing station. Stanton was in a hospital for six months.

Early this year the same Stanton climbed over the roofs of several houses near marble arch and jumped ten feet from one roof to another, with a 50-foot drop between, to steal ten shillings' worth of jewelry.

He was bound over to be of good behavior, but normal life becomes dull to a man who must have thrills. Recently he climbed up an elevator shaft at St. John's wood, crawled along a narrow ledge to a bedroom window and stole a fur coat worth $1,250. He was sentenced to four months.

Burglars Steal Used False Teeth From Store

Memphis, Tenn.—Police are wondering what the burglar gained by taking two upper sets of second hand false teeth from the store operated by J. Cabay, furniture dealer. Nothing else was missed.

Test New Anemia Treatment

Experiments Being Watched by Medical Men.

Cincinnati.—New light has been thrown upon the cause and treatment of pernicious anemia by members of the staff of the college of medicine, University of Cincinnati, through investigations whose preliminary results were announced at the university.

Studies along this line have been carried out by Dr. Roger S. Morris, professor of internal medicine, and his associates. They emphasize that it is still in an experimental stage.

As a result of these observations a new treatment for pernicious anemia may be developed, the announcement stated. Medical authorities throughout the country are said to be watching the work with interest.

Findings will be reported by Doctor Morris in a paper to be presented before the Association of American Physicians, meeting at Atlantic City. Early stages of the work have been outlined in the Cincinnati Journal of Medicine and the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Explained in nontechnical terms the medical college experiments have shown that when a concentrated solution of normal human gastric juice is given by intramuscular injection to anemia patients almost immediate improvement sets in.

Results are manifested by an increase in the number of red blood

Air Travel Advocate Never Rode in Plane

Cleveland, Ohio.—Congressman Robert Cresser of Cleveland, one of the nation's foremost advocates of air travel and author of the pending merchant air ship bill in the house of representatives, never has been up in an airplane. However, he has ridden in blimps and he considers this lighter lighter-than-air way of cruising one of the safest, regarding it as the future way of getting to Europe, or Asia, in a great, big hurry.

Forest Rangers in West Will Carry Radio Sets

Pasadena, Calif.—Forest rangers working out of headquarters here will be equipped this year with portable receiving and transmitting radio sets strapped to their backs, Chief Dispatcher V. P. Vetter has revealed. Each receiving set will weigh only ten pounds, and will enable the fire fighters to keep in touch with headquarters. They were proved valuable in field work last year.

The pilot was badly burned and the observer, Ridley Oake Stanton, twenty-five, carried him through the desert for two days. The pilot died at a dressing station. Stanton was in a hospital for six months.

Early this year the same Stanton climbed over the roofs of several houses near marble arch and jumped ten feet from one roof to another, with a 50-foot drop between, to steal ten shillings' worth of jewelry.

He was bound over to be of good behavior, but normal life becomes dull to a man who must have thrills. Recently he climbed up an elevator shaft at St. John's wood, crawled along a narrow ledge to a bedroom window and stole a fur coat worth $1,250. He was sentenced to four months.

Test New Anemia Treatment

Experiments Being Watched by Medical Men.

Cincinnati.—New light has been thrown upon the cause and treatment of pernicious anemia by members of the staff of the college of medicine, University of Cincinnati, through investigations whose preliminary results were announced at the university.

Studies along this line have been carried out by Dr. Roger S. Morris, professor of internal medicine, and his associates. They emphasize that it is still in an experimental stage.

As a result of these observations a new treatment for pernicious anemia may be developed, the announcement stated. Medical authorities throughout the country are said to be watching the work with interest.

Findings will be reported by Doctor Morris in a paper to be presented before the Association of American Physicians, meeting at Atlantic City. Early stages of the work have been outlined in the Cincinnati Journal of Medicine and the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Explained in nontechnical terms the medical college experiments have shown that when a concentrated solution of normal human gastric juice is given by intramuscular injection to anemia patients almost immediate improvement sets in.

Indianapolis Nearing Completion

Scene in the shipyards at Camden, N. J., showing the U. S. S. Indianapolis, first of the two new light cruisers to be built for the American navy, as it nears completion. The vessel is 610 feet long with a beam of 66½ feet and will have a cruising speed of 32.7 knots.

NEW DESTROYERS WILL BEAT ALL IN THEIR CLASS

Washington.—The five American destroyers now under construction will be the fastest and most powerful vessels of their class ever built in the United States, according to naval officials. These vessels will have a designed speed of 36½ knots, or approximately 40 miles an hour, compared to the present 35-mile speed of the fleet's best destroyer types.

The new warships will have five five-inch guns, compared with four four-inch guns on the rapidly deteriorating destroyers on the naval list. According to Rear Admiral E. B. Larimer, chief of the bureau of ordnance, the new vessels excel the present boats in speed, stability, armament, greater engine power, and seaworthiness.

The new vessels also have center line gun and torpedo positions, thus increasing the field of fire, power operated ammunition hoists, new fire control apparatus, and improved torpedo control machinery.

Whereas the old destroyers carry no machine guns at all, the new ones will come equipped with five 50-caliber and three 30-caliber machine guns. The horsepower of the new speed boat destroyers will be 42,800. Their radius of action also has been enlarged.

Of the 100 needed by the fleet to modernize its destroyer tonnage, but four are building. One more will be laid down this summer or fall.

Seven others now authorized and one appropriated for were pigeonholed by President Hoover.

Naval officers stated also that an experimental flying boat and a single seater pursuit plane have been developed which represent a distinct advance over earlier types. The bombing plane has four engines and without a load can travel 3,000 miles. It can go 1,000 miles with a load of 4,000 pounds of bombs and return. The pursuit plane will have a speed of 212 miles an hour. British planes now in use for pursuit work have a maximum speed of 214 miles an hour. Four of the big flying boats, known as patrol planes, will be built next year, according to naval plans.

Color Blindness

Some persons are unable to distinguish colors and are therefore called "color blind." This defect may be inborn or a result of long strained attention to colors. It is incurable and no glasses have ever been perfected to remedy it. Extreme cases can distinguish no colors other than black and white, but the majority are color blind to only one or two colors.

ECLIPSE OF SUN EXCITES INTEREST OF SCIENTISTS

New York.—A new record for the number of astronomical parties observing a total eclipse of the sun will be set on August 31 of this year, when the moon's shadow passes across eastern Canada and New England.

Word has already been received of 16 institutions whose representatives will be in the path of the shadow, and probably a number of others will also send astronomers to make observations only possible when the moon hides the sun. Hundreds of other professional and amateur students of the heavens will go to see this rare phenomenon, generally regarded as the most impressive of natural spectacles.

Eight of the scientific parties now planned are from American institutions, two from Canada, four from England, and one each from Russia and Japan. The path along which they will be located is about 100 miles wide and passes south of Hudson bay, across Quebec, over the St. Lawrence river from a point about eight miles west of Montreal to one about twenty-five miles east of Three Rivers. Both of these cities are therefore well within the band of totality.

Entering the United States, the path is across northeastern Vermont, all of New Hampshire except the southwestern corner, southwestern Maine, the northeastern corner of Massachusetts, and Cape Cod. The shadow will cover all of the Atlantic coast between Salem, Mass., and Boothbay, Maine.

The most northerly accessible point from which to observe the total eclipse is Parent, Quebec, on the Canadian National railway, about 185 miles northwest of Montreal. Two expeditions, those of the Dominion observatory at Ottawa and the Royal observatory at Greenwich, England, are expected to make this town their headquarters.

At Sorel, Quebec, on the St. Lawrence river, close to the center of the path, the expedition from the McCormick observatory of the University of Virginia will be located. Astronomers of McGill university at Montreal will make observations from their own city, where they will be joined by a group from the University of London. Astronomers from Cambridge university will go to Magog, Quebec.

Most of the parties located in the United States have chosen the vicinity of Conway, N. H., including North and Center Conway, and Fryeburg, Maine, as observation points. Groups from the Lick observatory of the University of California and the Sproul observatory of Swarthmore college will go to Fryeburg. Near Center Conway will be a party from the Van Vleck observatory of Wesleyan university. Representatives from the Franklin institute, Philadelphia, will go a little further west, to Conway, according to tentative plans. The group from the Perkins observatory of Ohio Wesleyan university will locate at Douglass Hill, near Sebago, Maine. At this same location will be a party from the Royal Astronomical society, London.

Other expeditions from the Mount Wilson observatory, the University of Indiana, the Kwasan observatory of the Kyoto Imperial university, Japan, and the Central Astronomical observatory at Pulkova, Russia, are expected.

Most of the observations to be made by these astronomers, if cloudy weather does not make the elaborate preparations in vain, will be photographs of the solar corona. The corona is the outermost part of the sun, so faint that it is generally invisible because of the great glare from the light of the inner part. When the solar disk is covered by the moon, at the time of a total eclipse, the corona becomes visible.

In addition to direct photographs, in black and white, natural color and motion, made through cameras ranging from small kodaks to huge astronomical instruments as much as 85 feet long, spectroscopic photographs will be made of the corona to determine its composition and motion. Other spectroscopic observations will be of the flash spectrum, seen when the last sliver of sun is visible just before the moon completely covers it, or when the first bit reappears just after the total phase is over. Such observations give valuable information about the sun's atmosphere.

Still other observations to be attempted will be photographs of the shadow bands which appear on the ground before and after the total eclipse, and of the shadow of the moon as it sweeps over the earth. One observation that has engaged the attention of astronomers at recent eclipses will be lacking, however. This is the photograph of stars close to the sun, to determine whether their light is deflected by the solar gravitation, as predicted by Einstein. There will be no stars sufficiently bright in the sun's neighborhood at the time of the August eclipse.

THE FORMALITY OF MARRIAGE

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Emeritus Dean of Men,
University of Illinois.

The savage and the civilized, when at their best, have always emphasized the seriousness of the marriage relation by surrounding it with ceremony and dignifying it with music and color and garments befitting an event of importance. Haste and informality even in the case of the most illiterate savage were not tolerated. Time was involved when marriage was contemplated. There was always elaborate preparation which gave opportunity for deliberation and which left in the minds of all concerned the seriousness of the obligation which was about to be taken. One has only to read the accounts of these preparations among the most primitive tribes of all countries to realize how important an event marriage was considered even among peoples whose sociological development was very incomplete indeed.

The church, especially those churches which make any attempt at ritualistic form, has always made marriage much more than a legal contract. It has given it dignity and surrounded it with ceremony. Music and lights and flowers and formal dress have emphasized and dignified it.

There lies before me now a formal announcement that the parents of a young woman with whom I am acquainted wish to make the public acquainted with the fact that their daughter has entered into an engagement to marry a certain young man. Sometimes such an announcement seems like broadcasting one's private affairs, but it is not so. The custom is an old one, a dignified one, and one which might with propriety become more common.

There are too many informal marriages, and their result is likely to be disastrous.

There was a formal social function in town not long ago which two young people had driven a hundred miles to attend.

"Let's get married," the man suggested to the girl when there was a lull in the social activities. She was not to be outdone, so they were off and routed out the county clerk, and waked up a justice of the peace, and amid hilarity and laughter they were married. There was no serious consideration of what they were doing, no solemn ritual; they were simply putting on a vaudeville stunt at a social function. I wonder how it will turn out.
