At a recent meeting of the Board of Education it was decided to close school for the holiday season on Friday, December 23, and to have it resume on Tuesday, January 3.

Wednesday afternoon Doctor C. F. Smith gave a health talk on immunity. It is the second of a series sponsored by the extension department of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor.

We desire to express our appreciation to our friends who patronized the all-school entertainment, Tuesday evening. While the program was not arranged for the purpose of securing money, we are pleased to say the sum of fourteen dollars remained as profit after the paying of expenses.

RENO'S 4-H POTATO CLUB HOLDS FINAL MEETING

Reno's Real Rural Russet Raisers held their final meeting Friday evening, December 2, at the Reno school building. The speakers of the evening were: Fred Papple, a club member, who spoke on the benefits of 4-H Club work; Alfred Anderson, president of the club, who spoke on the general plan of the project; Gerald Fournier, the club's secretary and winner of first place in the county, who read his club story; Hugo T. Swanson, superintendent of schools, East Tawas high school, who judged the boys' work and who has frequently visited the club during the summer months and helped the boys to a great degree in their club work; Fred Wolf, a member of the advisory board, who encouraged the boys in future efforts in their club work; and Samuel Barnes, who spoke as a father, giving his views as to the benefits his son has derived from his summer's work in the field.

This being the only club of its kind in the county, the County Champions were chosen as follows: First place, Gerald Fournier; second place, Alfred Anderson; third place, Dell Barnes.

The club finished the eight requirements of a standard 4-H club; and each of the ten boys finished his year's project, although two were unable to attend the meeting.

The club wishes to take this opportunity to thank Mr. Swanson for the effort and expense he has put forth in helping them this summer.

And like Mr. Kettunen, the State 4-H Club Leader at Lansing, states in a recent letter to Norman Sibley, local leader of the club, in regard to Mr. Swanson's services to the state department, "We certainly consider it mighty fine of Mr. Swanson to cooperate with us in this way."

FIVE GAME LAW VIOLATORS ARRESTED

Five game law violators were brought before Justice W. C. Davidson during the past week by Conservation Officer Arthur Leitz. Robert McMurray of East Tawas paid $25.00 for possession of illegal venison. Owen Barlow, Cecil Lovelace, Kelly King and Adolor Demont of Oscoda township received sentences of 60 days in the county jail for shooting and having in possession illegal deer.

TALLULAH BANKHEAD STARS IN EXCITING MELODRAMA

Against the romantic background of a seaport on the north African coast and the neighboring Sahara. Tallulah Bankhead, Gary Cooper, and Charles Laughton enact a dramatic story of love and jealousy in "Devil and the Deep," the new film which shows Saturday, Sunday and Monday at the State Theatre.

Miss Bankhead is seen in her latest film as Pauline Sturm, beautiful wife of the commander of a British submarine stationed on the Mediterranean. This man, genial and likable to his friends, is really obsessed to the point of insanity with a conviction that his wife is unfaithful to him. His suspicions finally drive her into a love affair with a young lieutenant in her husband's command, and faced with the proof of his suspicions, Sturm goes entirely insane. The method of his revenge carries the film into a melodramatic climax aboard a sinking submarine.

Miss Bankhead as Pauline, Cooper as the lieutenant, and Laughton as the crazed husband give performances of rare distinction, and help to make the film one of the most dramatic and exciting pictures in many moons.

IOSCO PIONEER DIES FRIDAY; 93 YEARS OLD

John Kobs, Sr., pioneer resident of Iosco county, died last Friday, December 2, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. John Anschutz, in Tawas township, after an illness of three days. He was 92 years and ten months of age at the time of death.

John August Kobs was born February 2, 1840, in Germany. In 1868 he immigrated to the United States and settled in Tawas City. The same year he was united in marriage to Louise Asmus, and after spending two years of their married life here they moved on a farm in Tawas township, where they lived until the death of Mrs. Kobs in 1902. Since then he has made his home with his children.

Six children were born to this union, of whom four preceded him in death. The surviving children are Mrs. John Anschutz and John Kobs, Jr., both of Tawas township. He is also survived by one sister, Mrs. August Grabow, 12 grandchildren and 16 great grandchildren, besides many other relatives and friends.

Funeral services were held Monday from the Emanuel Lutheran church, Rev. W. C. Voss officiating. Burial was made in the Emanuel Lutheran cemetery.

TWENTIETH CENTURY CLUB

Twenty-seven members of the Twentieth Century Club and several members of the East Tawas Ladies Literary Club were guests of the Ladies Literary Alliance of Whittemore at a meeting held at the high school last Saturday, December 3.

Following the business meeting in charge of Mrs. Margaret Danin, a fine program was given. Roll call—Pet economy; a play, "The Sweet Family," given by a group of eight women, brought forth much laughter; and an intensely interesting address on the social life in India was given by Mrs. L. A. Musser. Everyone greatly enjoyed Mrs. Musser's talk. A delicious lunch was served by the Whittemore ladies in the school basement.

The postponed meeting of December 3 will be held this Saturday, December 10, at the City Hall.

Buck Jones, Columbia's popular western star, is doing more perhaps than any other picture personality to fill today's crying need for more action and less talk in our screen entertainment. The latest proof of this is to be found in "White Eagle," the first big talking picture epic of the Indians in the old west, showing at the Family Theatre next Friday and Saturday, December 16-17.

This reviewer, after more than his fill of dreary drawing room drama, could imagine nothing more attractive than the prospect of seeing 'arin', tearin' Buck as a full-blooded Indian Pony Express rider. And "White Eagle" more than fills its promise of spine-tingling action and blood-curdling thrills.

The story is one of the hectic Indian-warfare days around Fort Dodge, Nevada. Briefly, it has to do with a band of crooks who have been sailing along unmolested under cover of false government credentials. It takes Buck to show them up for what they are.

RENO HOME ECONOMIC EXTENSION GROUP MEETS

The second year Reno home economic extension group held their second meeting Saturday afternoon, December 3, at the Reno town hall. A short business meeting was held. Mrs. Earl Daugharty was appointed to give the program skit at our next meeting. This program is furnished by the Extension Department of the State and is to be given to allow a short recess during the meeting. The meeting was then turned over to the leaders.

This meeting had been postponed several weeks on account of the delay of the McColl paper patterns. Each member had to adjust his patterns to correspond with the measurements taken at the meetings fit without any alterations. The patterns were then placed on the muslin which the threads had been pulled on and cut out. The front and back pieces were then pinned together, to be ready for sewing together before the next meeting. Leaflets on "The correct fitting of undergarments" were given each member. The next meeting will be held in several weeks instructing the correct method to fit the set-in sleeve.—Miss Alma Bueschen.

LEGIONAIRES ENJOY VENISON DINNER

A venison dinner furnished by Sheriff Charles Miller, one of Tawas City's lucky hunters, was enjoyed by a large number of legionnaires at the billet at seven o'clock last Monday evening. After the regular business meeting, those present spent the evening playing bridge and pinochle.

JOE BROWN A COMIC MARATHON SWIMMER

More hilarious original gags and comedy stunts are said to be involved in Joe E. Brown's latest First National picture, "You Said a Mouthful," than any production which has been shown on the screen in many years. The entire story, which will be unfolded at the Family Theatre on Sunday and Monday, December 11-12, is based on a series of grotesque errors which lead to the most surprising and laughable incidents.

Joe, in the character role of an artless boob, is both afraid of the water and unable to swim. Mistaken for a champion swimmer, he is forced into a marathon race and comes out a victor through the most unusual lucky breaks imaginable.

Brown is said to be at his funniest, and as his co-worker, mascot, and swim mentor, that roguish imp of the "Our Gang," comedied, Farina, Ginger Rogers, the red-haired and peppery musical comedy and screen star, who played in a similar capacity opposite Brown in "The Tenderfoot," is again the leading lady, with Preston Foster. Sheila Terry, Guinn Williams and Harry Gribbon heading a strong supporting cast.

The annual Red Cross roll call is over, and as usual, the Iosco County Chapter has gone over the top!

The county was well canvassed by an active corps of workers, the result being 296 memberships secured and $60.48 in donations received, making a total of $356.48. As only fifty per cent of the memberships go to headquarters, we will have $208.48 for our own county.

MRS. CHARLES KASISCHKE

Mrs. Charles Kasischke, age 53 years, six months and 12 days, died Monday, December 5th, at her home in East Tawas after an illness of about four months.

Martha Wilhelmina Schroeder was born May 23, 1879, in Sherman township. On April 26, 1910, she was united in marriage to Charles Kasischke of Tawas City. They resided in East Tawas and have resided there since. Two children were born to this union.

She leaves to mourn her death, her husband, one daughter, Ruth, and one son, Charles, Jr. She is also survived by four sisters, Mrs. Richard Hermann, Mrs. John Henry and Mrs. Clara Jordan of East Tawas, and Mrs. Emil Hermann of Melvor; two brothers, William and George Schroeder of Melvor, and a large number of other relatives and friends.

Funeral services were held Thursday afternoon from the Zion Lutheran church, with Rev. F. A. Sievert officiating. Burial was made in the Zion Lutheran cemetery.

"ONCE IN A LIFETIME" IS BIG LAUGH HIT

"Once In A Lifetime," which is the attraction at the State Theatre next week Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, is one grand laugh from start to finish. It's theme is to satirize and ridicule almost everything that Hollywood holds holy. It pulls the curtains wide apart on a lot of inside stuff in picture making—handing out to fans the things they like to think are the things that make the wheels go round in a great big studio. But everything is done in fun. Where Hollywood pokes fun at itself, it is done for a laugh, and clocking the laughs in this one would produce about one every fifteen seconds.

Unlike "What Price Hollywood" and "Make Me A Star", it never attempts to become serious. Or if it does become serious that seriousness is only to accentuate the fun in the minds of the audience. Though there is a hint at it, there is no real drama to speak of. In short, it always stresses the absurdity of anyone trying to be serious in a place where the world refuses to believe anyone can be serious.

The story is based upon the adventures of three stage actors who try to crash the gates of filmdom, and is portrayed by actors who probably experienced it themselves when they were trying to make the grade themselves. Jack Oakie, Aline MacMahon, Louise Fazenda, Gregory Ratoff, ZaSu Pitts, Robert McWade and Jobyna Howland are all synonymous with the word "comedy."

THINK OF THAT

She—When I marry, I want to become some man's pet.
He—A wife is liable to become catty under those circumstances.

SERIOUSLY

She—Have you ever thought seriously of marriage?
He—I'll say I have. Ain't I single?

EASY TO FIND OUT

Mother—Do you know, dear, what your husband really is worth?
Daughter—if I don't, all I have to do is buy a new dress or hat to find out.

TO CONVERSE WITH A MAN

"And what did you say was the best way to converse with a man?"
"Simply to listen, my dear."

NOT DONE IN OILS

Artist—Say, Fred, have you ever been done in oils?

American Heroines

By LOUISE M. COMSTOCK

Nannie Hutchins

TALL, brown and strong the men, buxom and brave the women who earned heroism in the winning of the West, and strange it is to picture among that gallant company a little six-year-old girl with wide eyes and golden curls. Yet Nannie Hutchins is still a favorite when old frontiersmen gather to swap yarns of the 'eighties, and wrinkled Wichita braves will still recount over a slow pipe the debt their tribe owes this little yellow headed white girl.

Nannie was a daughter of a teacher at the Cheyenne agency near the site of the present city of El Reno, Okla. In 1873, when she was just turned six, a smallpox epidemic of startling menace broke out, and the red men, to whom smallpox means certain death, became terrified. Nannie's uncle, John D. Miles, agent at Cheyenne, sent to Wichita, two hundred miles away, for vaccine, and inoculated with it Nannie and as many of the Indians as he could supply. Then came frantic calls from neighboring agencies for vaccine to halt the raging disease in Indian territory outposts. But the supply was gone, and it would be two weeks before a freight wagon would arrive with more.

Then Doctor Given of the Wichita agency, who had hurried 45 miles to Cheyenne in his vain quest for vaccine, looked at Nannie's arm, all red and swollen with the recent injection. From it he could secure enough virus to vaccinate a great many of his own people. Could he take Nannie back with him? Mrs. Hutchins demurred. She was a widow and Nannie was her baby. Finally, however, she consented, and the doctor and the little girl, with Finlay Ross, an Indian fighter, set out on their journey along the famous Chisholm trail, where in those days the white man traveled in constant danger of Indian attack and frightful death. Many anxious hours later when they had gained Wichita in safety, the vaccinating began. Those safeguarded by the virus from Nannie's arm, in turn supplied virus for others, and most of the Wichitas and many of the Kiowas were thus saved.

A year later, when the Indians of that region were staging their last desperate uprising against the whites, Chief Kiowa and Chief Yellow Bird and 30 Wichita braves rode over to Fort Sill and volunteered their services. They wanted to fight, they said, on the side of the little golden-head who had saved them from the smallpox epidemic.

"Mother" Crim

MRS. ELIZA CLINEDINST Crim, who died recently at the age of ninety-four years in New Market, Va., the title of "Mother" was a term of military tribute. It was a title of honor earned at the Battle of New Market in May of 1864, when Mrs. Crim "mothered" as she nursed scores of wounded and dying boys, members of that famous band of Virginia Military institute cadets whose gallant charge is the high spot of this battle.

In the spring of '64 the superior numbers and greater resources of the North were beginning to tell against the South. Two years earlier "Stonewall" Jackson's campaign in the Shenandoah valley had successfully cut General McClellan off from auxiliary troops and thwarted his plans. Now, hoping for similar results, General Lee sent General Early up the valley. In spite of heavy odds, Early won several victories and even threatened Washington before General Sheridan defeated him at Winchester and forced his retreat to the South.

It was in one of these victories that the V. M. I. cadets played their brilliant part. The little company, ranging from fourteen to nineteen years in age, had been hurried up from Lexington by a forced march of three days to be on hand in case of emergency. They were a spirited band, afire with patriotism, eager for action. Although it had been planned to hold them in reserve, the outnumbering forces of the enemy and their own insistence won them a place in the very front line. There they held their position for several hours, under heavy artillery fire and infantry attack, and at the decisive moment made a spectacular charge to victory! Years later Mrs. Crim described that charge: "I saw the terrible shells explode right in front of the line of cadets as they charged down Shirley's hill. The deadly fire cut gaps in their line, but they closed up and without flinching they moved forward to victory and death."

The wounded were carried to the old Rice home in New Market, now the Virginia Knights of Pythias orphanage. There Mrs. Crim took charge, nursing, comforting, mothering. One of her strongest memories was of the devotion of the cadets for each other. She told how Moses Ezekiel, later the famous sculptor of V. M. I.'s memorial "Virginia Mourning Her Dead," carried a wounded comrade into the house and held him dying in his arms. Mrs. Crim holds the only medal of valor ever awarded by the Virginia Military Institute.

Republican Turkey Is Nine Years Old

National Consciousness Is Rapidly Developing.

Washington.—New Turkey has just celebrated its ninth birthday anniversary at Ankara (Angora), the capital on the Asia Minor plateau which superseded intrigue-infested Constantinople, long the capital of the old regime. A bulletin from the National Geographic society outlines some of the forces that have been shaping the new republic.

"After nine years of strenuous reforms, the Turkish republic, because of world-wide depression, has a breathing spell in which to take stock," says the bulletin. "The apathy of its enemies and neighbors enabled it to escape partition. Fatalism, combined with the paucity of desires by the Turkish peasant, has been a constant drag on progress.

"Great strides have been made in developing national consciousness among the variety of peoples who are combined under the government of the Ghazi (the Conqueror). The first great step was the freeing of the country of its enemies, a military operation through which the Ghazi, Mustafa Kemal Pasha, gained political leadership. A complete separation from the Ottoman dynasty and the Caliphate, leading to democratic forms of government and a segregation of religion and government, was another important step.

"The country is wide, the population scanty, the state of education and literacy low, communications inadequate. These factors have added to a native inertia against which Turkey's leaders have labored with striking results.

Turned to Western Ways. The fez was abolished in order to prepare the Turk, through western dress, to ally himself with western thought. The visor of the cap, which became the popular head covering, could be reversed so that the forehead could touch the floor in prayer; but nonetheless a sharp cut was made with the past. The veil was not abolished, but those who abandoned it were favored.

"Another milestone was the adoption of the Latin alphabet. The old Arabic alphabet was closely related in thought with the Koran. With the advent of 'New Turkish,' the Turkish republic moved closer to all nations using the Latin alphabet, but severed a strong bond with religious forms. Not only had Turkey's alphabet been that of

Pay French President 3,600,000 Francs Salary

Paris.—While the French government is devising economies and studying the possibilities of raising more revenue through new taxation in a desperate effort to balance its budget, the Paris Midi has conducted a private investigation into the salaries paid to public officials. It appears that while French cabinet ministers receive a salary of 180,000 francs ($7,200) yearly, they cease to have the benefit of any allowance to which they may be entitled by membership in the chamber of deputies. They continue to receive 2,750 francs ($110) a month from the chamber, but this amount is deducted from their salary as ministers, so that they are paid for their cabinet labors only 12,250 francs ($490) at the end of each month, plus 4,165 francs ($166) for motor car expenses.

Should a cabinet remain in office only 48 hours—such cases have happened—its members are allowed two days' pay. The president of the republic receives an annual salary of 1,800,000 francs ($72,000), paid monthly in advance, plus 900,000 francs ($36,000) for his household expenses and a like sum for traveling and other outlays incidental to his office. Even 3,600,000 francs a year is not excessive when the expenses are taken into account. Very few presidents have left office richer than when they were inducted.

Housewives Earn

Cash Outside Home
Washington.—Of the American women responsible for the care of homes and families, 13.8 per cent had gainful employment in addition to their household tasks, the fifteenth census disclosed, according to information made available by the Department of Commerce. There were 28,405,294 families in the United States in 1930 reported as having "homemakers," and of these, 3,923,516, or one in every seven, had the homemakers gainfully occupied. Work at home accounted for 19.4 per cent of the total so occupied and work away from home for 80.4 per cent. A small number did not specify the place of employment. Hired housekeepers were not counted as homemakers. The largest proportion of homemakers with outside work, 24.4 per cent of the total gainfully occupied, were in the classification of "servants and waitresses."

government had started, but steel bands and better roads are slowly binding the country regions together. For centuries, a great trade route by way of Trebizond (Trabzon) and Erzurum reached from Persia to the Black sea. Commerce along that historic highway had declined, but through an improvement in the road-bed, commerce is again to be lured back to its historic channel between highlands and sea, between caravan and caravan.

"The Turk formerly was averse to participation in trade or commerce, and many professions were in the hands of foreign residents. But many trades and professions are now restricted to Turks, and from barber and waiter to tailor and stock broker, the Turk is being encouraged to look to his own people for aid. "The state has taken over many industries not only because of a lack of individual initiative but also from a desire to train the people in new pursuits.

"The United States occupies a peculiar place among Turkey's chief customers, since we spend three times as much for Turkish tobacco, figs and mohair as Turkey spends for American products. New industries are being fostered in the republic and the visitor with a taste for foreign foods is finding life harder or more expensive. Turkish foods, candies, tinned preserves, and even sugar and chocolate are supplanting world-famous brands.

"World-wide depression, slowing the material change, has not only forced Turkey to foster home industries and bar importations from the West, but has also given the Turk time to appraise the changes of the last decade."

Bring Down Weathercock From French Church Steeple

Daring Stone Masons Profit by Ancient Tradition.

New York.—American "human flies" who today find it hard to make money out of their exploits may borrow an idea from the French. The weathercock which tops the Cathedral of Sens, France, which maintained its perch despite eight German projectiles which hit the spire in 1914, was recently brought down from its perch to fill the pockets of the men who climbed to it, writes Samuel Chamberlain in American Architect.

Four stone masons who were repairing the tower remembered the tradition that whenever the peak of the cathedral had been reached by a steeplejack, the cock (Le Coq Gaulois) could be brought down and passed from door to door as a means of exacting tips from home owners, and they did it. As this is the bird's first descent in 120 years, the custom has not been overdone.

Twice in recent history an audacious alpinist has succeeded in climbing up the spiny surface of the spire as far as the rooster, without the aid of ropes or scaffolding. In June, 1731, an innocent-looking young man obtained permission to climb the winding steps leading to the bell tower. He dashed upward and passed through an opening on the highest platform before the startled sexton could catch his breath. Climbing like an ape from crocket to crocket, he finally reached the huge ball of copper which caps the masonry. By a heroic and almost suicidal effort, the climber got over this ball. Once on top of the ball the rest was easy. He performed a few gymnastics to the awestruck witnesses below, and then boldly unfastened the weathercock, strapped it on his back and crawled down to face the irate sexton. By this time all the population of Sens was a gaping, horror-struck gallery including, unfortunately for the intrepid climber, the bailiff who promptly clapped him in jail.

Mexico Rushes Work on New Highway to Laredo

Mexico City.—In order to concentrate all the government resources on completion of the Laredo-Mexico City highway, which is expected to be opened next summer, the department of communications has postponed all consideration of construction on the other main highway projects in the national road program.

The other principal highway projects are: Mexico to Acapulco; Matamoros to Mazatlan; Vera Cruz to Puerto Vallarta (on the Pacific) via Mexico City and Gaudalajara. Completion of the Mexico City-Acapulco highway, which already is in fair condition and much used by motorists, probably will claim first attention after the Laredo highway is finished.

Completion of all projects is estimated to require approximately $30,000,000.

Last of the Lawlers Quits St. Louis Police

St. Louis, Mo.—The "last of the Lawlers" is leaving the St. Louis police department, where a Lawler has been on the force for the past 100 years.

One hundred and six years ago William Lawler's grandfather joined the police force. Before the grandfather retired, William's father joined, and succeeding the father was William. William's uncle, Michael, also was a member of the force.

Now, after 34 years on the force, the last of the Lawlers has turned in his resignation. "I'm going to California to raise oranges," he said.

Cannel Coal's Properties

Cannel coal is a grade of bituminous coal believed to have originated from materials different from those ordinarily termed bituminous coal. It is characterized by its high percentage of volatile matter and its burning readily with a long flame. Cannel coal is used in the manufacture of illuminating gas and as a domestic fuel for open-grate fires. It is also used for steam production like ordinary bituminous coal.

Bees Dislike Black

Persons who have to handle bees are warned that it is best to avoid black clothing, since that color seems to excite bees; a black felt hat is especially to be avoided.

LITTLE STORY FOR BEDTIME

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

JOHNNY CHUCK HAS SOMETHING ON HIS MIND

JOHNNY CHUCK sat on his door step down in the far corner of the Old Orchard trying to make up his mind. Yes, sir, that is just what Johnny Chuck was trying to do and he was making hard work of it. You know how it sometimes is when you are a little undecided. First you think you will, then you think you won't, and finally you begin asking everybody around you for their opinions and wind up by being no better off than you were in the beginning.

The matter on Johnny Chuck's mind was whether he was fat enough to sleep comfortably all winter. That seems like a funny thing to have worrying one, doesn't it? But it wasn't funny to Johnny Chuck. No, indeed, it wasn't funny at all, it really was very serious. He knew that a great deal depended on the amount of fat stored away under his skin before he said good-by to everybody and went to bed deep in the ground to sleep until spring. If he were fat enough it wouldn't make much difference to him how cold the winter might be or how late sweet Mistress Spring might be in coming to wake him up. But if he didn't have fat enough tucked away under his skin he might not be warm enough, and if Mistress Spring should happen to be very late he would be so weak when he awoke that he might not have strength enough even to crawl out of his house. Or it might happen that hunger would awaken him before Mistress Spring arrived and then he might freeze to death trying to find something fit to put in a Woodchuck's stomach.

"I wish I could know if the winter is going to be hard and long," said Johnny.

So you see the matter was really very important to Johnny Chuck. The fat under his skin was both a blanket and food. That seems queer, but it is true. The fatter he was the warmer he would keep and the more comfortable he would be. In this way the fat was like a blanket. While he slept through the long, cold months of course he would eat nothing. In the first place he wouldn't be awake to eat, and you know people do not eat while they are asleep. In the second place there would be nothing to eat, anyway. So wise Old Mother Nature has provided that the fat Johnny Chuck lays up shall take the place of food.

You know how it is with food. We take it into our stomachs and from there it is taken into our bodies to build them up and to make the heat which keeps us warm. In Johnny Chuck's case Old Mother Nature has fixed things so that the body can get what it needs from the fat with which it is covered. It needs only a very little at a time during the winter, because you know Johnny is asleep; curled up quite motionless. A great deal of the food we eat is used up in what is called energy, which is the power of moving about and doing things. You know how it is when you are sick and cannot eat. In a little while you have no strength to move. You are very weak. But if you did not have to move at all you could live a long time with very little food, because none of it would be used for energy. It is the same way with Johnny Chuck. Sleeping and lying perfectly still, he needs no food for energy, and so his body gets all it needs by absorbing it from the fat. Absorbing means taking in the way a sponge soaks up water.

So you see it was quite as important to Johnny Chuck that he should be fat enough as it was to Striped Chipmunk that he should have his storehouse filled before the coming of Rough Brother North Wind and Jack Frost. It was this that Johnny had on his mind as he sat on his door step, that bright, cool autumn afternoon. There was still plenty of food. He could eat more if he really needed it. To be sure he was tired of eating. For a long time he had been eating, not because he was hungry, but to store food away in the form of fat. His neighbors didn't understand this. They watched him eat and grow fatter and they called him piggyish. Of course, this was very unfair.

"I wish I could know if the winter is going to be hard and long," said Johnny as he waddled over to a patch of clover. He was already so fat that he was roly-poly and waddled when he walked. "I'm sleepy enough to go to bed right now, but I want to be sure that I am fat enough."

Greatness

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

I LOOKED for greatness in a tree,
And found one very tall to see,
For rich the soil and warm the sun,
And much it had of either one.
And then, amid the sterile ground,
A cleft within a rock I found
That little soil or summer knows,
Yet in that cleft there grew a rose.

I looked for greatness in a man,
And found one who with gold began,
And all the nation knew his name,
Paid tribute to his purchased fame,
And then, amid the huts and streets,
I found a man who met defeats,
Yet made a little, millions less,
And did not think it was success.

I looked for greatness in a soul
And found a singing oriole
Upon the stage, whom crowds applaud,
Yet whisper when she walks abroad,
Then, by a little thoroughfare,
I found a spotless mother there
Whose songs, remembered by a son,
Had brought him to that Other One.

POULTRY

KEEP DISEASE OUT OF POULTRY FLOCK

Infection Can Be Spread in Many Ways.

If your neighbor gives you a chilly reception when you tramp into his chicken pens uninvited, do not feel offended. He merely is following one of the first rules of poultry sanitation.

An all too common method of spreading infectious diseases in poultry flocks is by visitors to the flock who may have come from other flocks where diseases are present, declares Dr. Charles Murray, chief of the veterinary investigation section at Iowa State college.

Doctor Murray's advice is as follows:

1. Never discuss your neighbor's disease situation with him in your own or his poultry pens.
2. Never permit a buyer of poultry, a peddler of remedies, or a culler to visit your poultry houses or yards unless he disinfects his shoes or slips on a pair of overshoes you have for him.
3. Keep newly purchased stock or that which has returned from shows, fairs, or egg-laying contests in quarantine several weeks before placing it in the home flock.

Maintenance of Proper Body Weight Important

According to the agricultural extension service, University of Missouri, pullets frequently lose weight after two or three months of heavy egg production and if prompt attention is not given, they are likely to cease laying and molt. If taken in time, this condition can usually be corrected without serious loss in egg production by giving a supplementary feed of moistened fattening mash some time during the day, preferably at noon, until the pullets have regained the weight lost because of rapid laying.

The following mixture fed daily at the rate of three to five pounds for 100 pullets will usually produce the desired result:

Fattening Mash—six pounds corn meal, three pounds shorts and one pound dried milk.

The daily feed of this mixture should be moistened with enough water to form a crumbly mash and fed in the mash feeders or long troughs so that each pullet can get her share. If skim milk is available, it should be used to moisten the mixture and the dried milk may be omitted.

English Egg-Laying Contest

"The national" egg-laying contest at Milford, Surrey, England, is said to be the world's largest egg-laying competition, with 3,311 pullets of various breeds competing. The eighth month has just been concluded. In that period 405,914 eggs have been laid, an average of 127.4 per bird. A pen of 12 Black Leghorns at present is highest, with 1,828 eggs to their credit, an average of 152.3 eggs per bird in the eight months of the "trials," as they are designated in England. A Single Comb Rhode Island Red pullet leads the individual bird record of special and first-grade eggs with a total of 213 of such grading. Another Red pullet has the best record over all birds with 218, 36 of which, however, were below the required two ounces in weight.

Timely Poultry Hints

Mangel beets do not rank as high as poultry feed as in the past. Some poultry men believe that the feeding of mangels injures the hatchability of the eggs. Possibly the hens that fill up on succulent mangels do not have room for the green feed which contains the vitamins that improve hatchability. We find that alfalfa is about the finest green feed for hens and believe that every poultry man should plan on raising or buying a few loads each year for winter storage for the poultry. Carrots seem to be a more useful succulent feed than mangels and a lot of carrots can be raised in a small space in the garden.

Winter Laying

To insure winter laying, on which so much depends, early-hatched pullets are important. Chickens reared in the early spring with ordinary attention develop into sturdy robust stock and mature satisfactorily for autumn production. White Wyandottes, Buff Plymouth Rocks and Rhode Island Reds are breeds that have established fine reputations as winter layers. Being of the middle-weight class, they are also able to produce fine, plump birds for the table.

Breeding Hints

Males should be placed in the breeding pen so as to give them plenty of time to accustom themselves to new surroundings and will also allow about 60 days for the birds to be mated and in production before eggs are saved for hatching purposes. Too much time cannot be spent in selecting these breeding males. Before turning them in to the breeding pen be sure that they are vigorous birds with proven performance, and conform to the standard of the breed.

DAIRY FACTS

TEN "EXCUSES" FOR HOLDING UP SCRUB

Costly Boarders Arouse Ire of Economist.

By C. R. ARNOLD, Rural Economist, Agricultural Extension Service, Ohio State University.—WNU Service.

Moratoriums may come and go, yet there never can be a moratorium on the feed consumed by inefficient, unprofitable cows. Such animals, however, have certain excuses for existing at the expense of the farmer. Although I believe the scrub cow runs up costly board bills without making adequate returns, I think the lazy farmer's reason for keeping her might be listed something as follows:

1. She consumes a lot of cheap feed so that I need not haul it to market.
2. She reduces my taxes, as her value is low.
3. If she dies I do not lose very much.
4. It takes very little time to milk her.
5. She is dry a large part of the year and doesn't require any care.
6. She never yields much milk and does just about as well on corn and fodder as she does on balanced rations.
7. It makes little difference whether or not I milk her on Sunday.
8. I am never pestered by neighbors who want to buy her.
9. She keeps down the surplus of dairy products and in this way is no small economic force in the agriculture of the nation.
10. I never have to sit up nights worrying what to do with all the money I get from my cream check.

How Low Butter Prices Lead to Better Herds

How present low butterfat prices force dairymen to keep better cows, is clearly demonstrated in Special Bulletin 152, by E. A. Hanson, extension division at Minnesota University farm. Calculations based on a large number of records kept in Minnesota Dairy Herd Improvement associations show the relation between high butterfat production and the profit which a cow can make for her owner.

When butterfat sold for 50 cents a pound and feed was valued at the prices prevailing from 1924 to 1929, a cow producing 100 pounds of butterfat a year returned $10 over feed cost. A 200-pound cow returned $52 a year over feed cost, and a 300-pound cow $92. However, with butterfat at 25 cents a pound and feed costs as of March 1932, the 100-pound cow loses her owner $11 per year; a 200-pound cow returns $9 over feed cost; and a 300-pound cow $27. These figures make it very clear that the lower butterfat prices are, the more careful dairymen must be to keep only high-producing cows.

Why Are Cows Culled?

In studying the answers of the cow testers to the questionnaire sent out by the Oklahoma agricultural college, we find that out of 147 cows removed from the herds in 1931 the following numbers and causes were given: Contagious abortion infection, 5; reactors to tuberculin test, 2; unprofitable producers, 45; sterility in cows, 4; old age of cows, 5; accident (automobile) 16; udder trouble, 3; sold for dairy purposes, 52; died, 13; slaughtered for meat, 2. This proves that tested cows can be easily converted into money, since 52 were sold for dairy purposes. The next highest disposal of cows comes in line with the boarder cow which cannot remain in the cow testing association herd. The accident loss shows too high in relation to the others. Fifteen of these were killed and maimed in one herd. Soon the total state summary of this study will be published.—Hoard's Dairyman.

Care of the Dairy Cow

A good dairy cow is one of the hardest working animals on the farm, for her system is severely taxed in converting hay, grass and grains into milk and butterfat. How great the strain of producing milk is seen in high producers getting thin and in an unthrifty condition just before the close of the lactation period. When these high producers are fed carefully, this condition is less noticeable, but thin cows should then be allowed to go dry for the time necessary to build up body reserve. Tests along these lines have demonstrated that a good cow will produce enough more milk following a six to ten weeks dry period to pay for the feed and care given while the animal is not being milked.—Dakota Farmer.

Silage in the Ration

How much silage a cow should be fed each day during the winter depends on the weight of the animal. A cow will consume about three pounds of silage to each 100 pounds live weight. In addition to this feed, each animal should have all the legume hay she will consume with a grain ration based on the amount of milk produced. Equal parts of ground limestone and steamed bone meal should also be fed at the rate of two pounds to each 100 pounds of the concentrate ration.

The Black Box of Silence

By Francis Lynde

Illustrations by O. Irwin Myers

(WNU Service)
(Copyright by William Gerard Chapman.)

SYNOPSIS

Owen Landis, young inventor, in the little town of Carthage, has developed an extraordinary "silencer" which is stolen from a safe in his laboratory. Landis tells Wally Markham, his chum, the only person, beside himself, knowing the combination of the safe, is Betty Lawson, daughter of a college professor, with whom the inventor is in love. Markham takes a plaster cast of a woman's foot the night before, and identifies Betty tells Markham that she had dozed in the car. Markham does not tell Landis of his discovery. Vaguely suspicious of Landis's honesty, he searches his hotel room, in his absence, finding two loaded automatic revolvers and a complete set of burglar's tools. Canby brings the revolvers and burglar's kit to the hotel clerk, claiming to have just found them in his room. That night the safe in the bank of the small town of Perthdale is blown open and looted, the noise of the explosion being unheard. Satisfied that his "black box" is in the hands of crooks, Landis, with Markham, goes to Perthdale. Three strangers, claiming to be business men of Louisville, are the only possible suspects.

"No; not wasting their time or mine. Those Perthdale people didn't have a thing on these chaps; nothing more than that they happened to be driving a car that looked like one somebody had seen going through their town. With fifteen or twenty million cars chasing round over the country—"

"Sure," said Markham; then, "Did these men say which route they were taking to the West?"

"No; I didn't ask 'em. But if they're making for Colorado they probably took the National to St. Louis and Kansas City."

Entirely at a loss as to what to do, other than to wait for the news of another mysterious robbery, Markham and Landis spent the greater part of the forenoon making guarded inquiries at the various garages and filling stations in the hope of hearing something which might indicate the direction taken by the black touring car in leaving Terre Haute, but black touring cars passing through, in all directions, were as plentiful as falling leaves in autumn.

"Well," Markham announced, "I've got one more shot in the locker. I've just remembered that I know the telegraph editor of the Chicago News and I'll wire him to let me know if anything breaks. He'll do it, I'm sure."

Markham wrote his message and dispatched it, and within the next half-hour an answer came. Early in the morning, too late for the news of it to get into the morning papers, a bank had been blown up in the small town of Smithbury, Ill., and nobody had heard the noise of the explosion. A hasty examination of the route map located the small town three-fourths of the way across Illinois, and a start was made at once. By hard driving the scene of the new devastation was reached a little before dark, and inquiry proved that the Perthdale raid had been repeated, this time, however, with a murder added. The body of the town watchman had been found in the debris of the wrecked bank with a bullet through his heart.

Again, as in Perthdale, the accepted theory seemed to be that a hitherto unknown and noiseless explosive had been employed. At this, Landis, with a growing sense of his culpability as the inventor of the box of silence, insisted that it was no more than right that he should tell the story of his invention and its loss, regardless of the consequences to himself. But to this Markham objected strenuously.

"It wouldn't help matters in the least, and it would most likely mean all sorts of trouble for you," was his emphatic protest. "You are no more responsible than is the inventor of the nitroglycerin or dynamite these yeggs are using."

"But am I not withholding information that the authorities ought to have?"

"They would doubtless say you were—and give you the third degree to try to get more out of you. No; thus far, we have the only clue that promises anything at all, and these city sleuths would only make a hash of it if we should pass it along to them. We'll get a bite to eat and go on."

"Where to, from here?" Landis queried.

"I'll show you, after we get a lunch put up. We can eat as we go." It was still early in the evening, and, driving out of town to the southward, Markham made a half circle, cutting all the roads leading to the westward. At each intersection he made inquiries at the nearest farm house, and by this means they were once more upon the trail of a black touring car answering the description given them by the Perthdale banker. An early rising farmer had seen such a car; it had stopped opposite his gate to change a tire. Markham questioned the farmer closely.

"How many people were in the car?"

"Couldn't tell. There was two men changing the tire, and another inside. That was all I saw."

"Could you see them well enough to describe them?"

"Not all of 'em—just one. Tall fellow, smooth-faced, pretty well dressed. Had somethin' the matter with one ear—looked like what you read about them prize fighters' ears; I forgit what you call it."

"Cauliflower ear," Markham supplied. "What kind of clothes was he wearing?"

"Here the farmer was at fault; couldn't remember about the clothes except that they were neat and citified."

Markham let the clutch engage and the blue roadster sped on to the westward. Throughout the evening they had little difficulty in tracing the black touring car. A garage keeper had talked with one of the men, and he had said he and his companions were from Louisville and were on their way to Colorado on a business trip. Asked if he had heard of the Smithbury robbery and murder, the garage man said he had; that the tire buyer had told him about it.

"Some nerve, and it chimes in pretty well with your notion of a bold, bad bluff," was Markham's comment, as they drove on into the night. But now Landis was beginning to admit a doubt.

"We are taking an enormous lot for granted, Wally, don't you think? The men are not acting like robbers."

"You may be right, at that," Markham conceded. "It is all a raw chance, I'll admit. But now we are on the way, we'll keep going until we catch up with them and give them the once-over."

At Hannibal they learned the number of the black car with the Kentucky license plates.

Their stop for the night was made at a late hour at Chillicothe, and as Markham drove into the garage near the hotel he was assigned a space beside a dark-colored touring car, dusty and wayworn. As he was giving the garage keeper directions about putting the blue roadster in condition for an early start in the morning he chanced to glance at the number plate of the dusty car.

"That car standing beside mine; who owns it?" he demanded.

"I don't know," said the garage owner; "bought it today from two fellows who drove through from Louisville. I got a bargain off 'em."

"Two, you say? Weren't there three?"

"No, only two. It's all straight. They had a bill of sale, giving the motor number and all. To make sure, I wired the Louisville dealer who'd sold 'em the car, and got his answer. They gave me the dealer's name and address."

"You say they took the train. Do you know where they were headed for?"

"Somewhere out in Colorado, they said. They took the four o'clock—or I s'pose they did."

"Can you describe them?"

"Why—I don't know as I could; nothing unusual about 'em except that the tall one, the one that did most of the talking, had a queer looking bunch on one ear. Excuse me, but what are you two, anyway? Detectives?"

"Not exactly. But we are interested in these men."

"No chance that this is a stolen car, is there?"

"Probably not, since you have traced it to the Louisville dealer who sold it. Did the men have any hand baggage?"

"Suitcases—couple of 'em."

"No other baggage?" Markham pressed.

"Nothing but a camera. One of 'em, the short one was carrying that in a shawl strap."

"What kind of a camera?"

"I didn't notice, particular; only that it looked too big for a kodak and not big enough for a movie machine."

As they left the garage Markham said, "Well, Owen, maybe it isn't such a wild goose chase after all. What do you think now?"

"There have been three men in that car all along; I'm wondering what became of the third man."

"So am I. Also, I am wondering why they sold their car."

Landis was silent for a moment and then he burst out excitedly, "I've got it, Wally—I'm almost sure I've got it! It was a bluff—it's been one all the way along. These men are the men we want, and they're going to stop off at some small place and wreck another bank! That's why the third man didn't show up. He was left behind to either buy or steal another car!"

"Too late to prove up on that guess tonight," Markham said. "We'll find out bright and early tomorrow morning if your guess is right."

They were up betimes to go in search of the proof or disproof of Landis's guess. At the place to which they had been directed they found the auto dealer just opening his door. Markham introduced himself and asked his question.

"Do you mind telling us if you sold a car yesterday?"

"I sold two of them; one on the installment plan, and one for good, hard cash on the nail."

"It is the cash sale that we are interested in," said Markham, with his most engaging smile. "Did you know your purchaser?"

"Never laid eyes on him before. He just blew in and said he wanted to buy a car. I showed him a new eight we'd just got in, and he counted out the money, climbed in and drove off, just like that," with a snap of his fingers.

"Could you describe the man?"

"Yes, in a general way; medium sized and height, somewhere along in his thirties, I'd say, light complected, sandy hair, smooth face, fairly well dressed. Nothing wrong, is there?"

"Er—we don't know—yet," Markham said. "You say he drove away at once? How about the license plates?"

"I lent him a pair of my own—dealer's plates, you know. He said he'd be in his home state in a day or so and didn't want to buy a Missouri license for such a short time. Said he'd send my plates back to me when he got home."

"Well, where are we now?" Landis asked, as they returned to the hotel.

"Up in the air again," Markham replied shortly. "If your guess is right, there was probably another bank smash last night, somewhere; but if there was, it may have been either east, west, north or south. We're stuck again until we can get hold of a news wire."

Landis's inspirational prediction of the night before had a startling confirmation. The night operator at one of the railway stations had just come in, and he brought the news. A bank in a small town some fifty miles west had been blown up early in the night; and again, so the wire report said, the explosion had not awakened people.

"Well, I guess that knocks the last lingering doubt for the count," was Markham's comment upon the railroad telegrapher's story of the latest foray. "The two who took the train dropped off at the agreed-upon place, and the other drove the new Fleetwing. Finish your coffee and we'll check up on the guess."

A ninety-minute run brought them to the scene of the latest raid, the market town of a farming community. At the railroad station they questioned the agent. The man's answers confirmed Markham's guess. Two men, carrying suit cases and something that the agent thought was a camera, had arrived on the local train of the previous afternoon, and, instead of going uptown, took a waiting auto and drove away.

"This was late in the afternoon, wasn't it?" Markham asked.

"Along about dusk. Forty-three was held up by a freight wreck and she was away late."

They took their leave. When they were again whipping the miles to the rear, Markham said, "Simple enough, isn't it?"

"Perfectly. They drove away and waited until the town was asleep. Their job done, they went on west—for a guess. That's the way they've been heading all along. We've been missing one bet as we came along, Wally; the names of these three men. We could have got them from the Terre Haute sheriff, or from the auto dealer in Chillicothe."

"Nothing to that. If they're the crooks we think they are, they'd use aliases, of course; and different ones in different places."

"No, you're wrong there. So far as we've been able to learn, they have been posing consistently as three business men from Louisville right from the beginning. And you'll remember that two of them gave the Chillicothe garage man a Louisville address to which he could wire."

"That's so; I'd forgotten that. It's either a clean slate, or the nerviest bluff that was ever put up, Owen—and I'm still believing it's a bluff."

Inquiring as they went, they heard no word of a Fleetwing Eight until they reached St. Joseph. But here the submerged trail came to the surface again. A garage man's memoranda showed that a new Fleetwing Eight had stopped for gas. Driving on into the city, and to a hotel, they found that three west-bound tourists, hailing from Louisville, had come in shortly after midnight and had gone immediately to bed. They had checked out after breakfast and had resumed their journey.

Looking up the names signed in the register, Markham made a note of them; and a little later a wire of inquiry went to the cashier of a Louisville bank. The answer was in the nature of a sudden bucketing of cold water.

"Here's where we get it in the nose," said Markham with a sheepish grin, as he handed the telegram to Landis.

Landis read the few typewritten lines:

"To Walter Markham, 'St. Joseph, Missouri.

"Parties named are prominent business men this city stop They left for Colorado, driving, some days ago stop Understand they are interested in Western mines.

"A. J. Westover."

He was watching Markham's grin when he passed the square of yellow paper back across the table.

"I guess that settles it definitely. You said, in the beginning, it might turn out to be a wild-goose chase, and it has."

"I'll say it has!" Markham grunted. "Just the same, there are still a few things that need explaining. These men started from Louisville for Colorado; why are they taking this roundabout route?"

"There may be a dozen good reasons."

Christian Element In Christmas Is Lacking

CHRISTMAS festivities, as the modern world observes them, owe much of their warmth and charm to the survival of pagan customs, Prof. William Warreu Sweet of the Divinity school, told a University of Chicago group. Speaking at a noon-time service in Bond chapel on the campus, Doctor Sweet, who is professor of the History of American Christianity, analyzed the history of the Yuletide celebration, and asked that the small Christian element in it be kept uppermost.

Exchanging gifts at Christmas time is a practice taken over from the Romans, and the Christmas dinner, the holly wreaths, and even the Christmas tree customs can be traced back to the barbarians of northern Europe, Doctor Sweet said. America's contribution to the occasion has been chiefly its commercialization.

"It was not until about the middle of the Fourth century after Christ that a day was formally set aside by the church at Rome for the observance of his physical birth," Doctor Sweet pointed out. "As it was first observed by the church, Christmas was purely a spiritual festival. There was no gayety; no bells announced the coming of the glad morn; there were no garlands; no tables heaped with good cheer."

"But it was not to remain long in the upper air of pure devotion. There were too many pagan influences about it, one of the most important of which was the feast of Saturn, which began on the 17th of December and lasted until the 24th. Saturn was the oldest and most benign deity of ancient Italy and his fabled reign on earth was supposed to have brought peace and happiness to mankind, and so the feast dedicated to him was full of joy and feasting. The schools were closed, public places were decked with flowers, and presents were exchanged.

"Another festival which influenced the celebration of Christmas was the feast of the Kalends of January, which marked the beginning of the Roman civil year, and three days of merriment followed it. Mummies clad in women's clothes and animal skins paraded the streets. Presents were given to dear ones. 'Honeyed things, that in the year the recipient might be full of sweetness, lamps that might be full of light; copper, silver and gold that wealth might flow in.'"

Among the early colonists in America Christmas was observed as a festival only by the Church of England adherents and the Roman Catholics. Professor Sweet said. The Puritans, rejecting it because of its pagan origins, banned any observance of the day. On May 11, 1659, the General Court of the Colony of Massachusetts passed the following law: "Whosoever shall be found observing any such day as Christmas or the like, either by forbearing of labor, feasting, or any other way, as a festival, shall be fined five shillings."

This statute was repealed twenty years later, but for more than one hundred years the great "evangelical" religious groups, the Baptists, Congregationalists and Presbyterians officially refused to recognize Christmas. Professor Sweet reported that he has been unable to find any reference to the festival of the nativity in the literature of these churches up to the Civil war. Shortly after the war a religious organ objected to the observance of the day on the grounds that there was no evidence to establish exactly the date of Christ's birth and that there was nothing in the New Testament to indicate that the birthday should be celebrated. "Ten years later, or about 1880, Christmas issues of church papers show a decided change in their attitude," Doctor Sweet said. "Christmas advertisements make their appearance, Christmas poems, and editorials. From this time onward the religious significance of Christmas has been growing in all evangelical churches."

"The Christmas with which we are familiar today is a strange combination of imported pagan and Christian traditions. Though I dislike to say it, it seems that about all America has added to Christmas is its commercialization. Certainly all of us have every humanitarian and Christian incentive to make Christmas less pagan, less commercialized, more Christian."

All of Us Apt to Tire of "Old Saws"

Constant Repetition Bound to Become a Serious Strain on the Temper of Ordinary Individual.

There are certain trite expressions which have crept into the language that now have been worn threadbare. When first they made their appearance they were so pat that people are weary of them, even though constant repetition has made them downright irritating. Maurice Chevalier tells a story on Charlie Chapline which illustrates the point. Upon meeting the comedian for the first time Chevalier remarked in all sincerity, "I'm so glad to have met you in the flesh," and was surprised to see the little man wince. Mr. Chapline explained that he had met thousands of people, and not one had omitted to make the obvious remark. He had learned to listen for it in fear and trembling, and when it came he evidenced all the symptoms of an incipient nervous breakdown.

I know many people who brace themselves on December 1 for a long winter punctuated daily with somebody's cheery greeting. "Is it cold enough for you?" And again on June 1 they get ready for an endurance test comprised of listening to its sister remark, "Is it warm enough for you?" The tragedy of the thing is that, sooner or later, they hear the hated phrases rolling smoothly off their own tongues, for such is the force of habit.

Moving day has produced an immortal remark that shows no signs of decrease with age. No matter how many times you move your effects, some woman is sure to say "You never know how much you have until you move." The first time you hear the phrase it stirs you to great eloquence, and you swap yarns about the curious accumulations of years, the tyranny of inanimate possessions and what not. You even go as far as to chat about the way your clothes swell after you have been on a vacation, and how difficult it is to get the self-same garments packed back into the suitcase which they fitted so nicely on your departure.

But after you have made your second and third moves, you flinch when you meet the hoary remark, still posing as a bright young thought.

"It's a small world after all." Now here is a phrase which should have been buried long ago with military honors. Its extraordinary longevity is a pain in the neck. The worst of it is your own uncontrollable impulse to say it yourself upon meeting your best friend in some out-of-the-way corner of the world.

Children come to hate the oft-repeated remark, "My! How you have grown!" At first it fills them with a sense of great personal prestige, but as the years stack up they become accustomed to their increase in stature, and sicken of the fuss people make about it. When mother has a tea party all the children hide out to escape exposure to the worn-out observation. If you think you're immune from such obvious remarks, see if you can refrain from the same bright saying when you see your friend's baby after its had a year to grow in.

"It never rains but it pours." This one has become a proverb which owes its long life to the half truth it contains. "Troubles never come singly," and "Everything happens at once" belong to the same group. There are hundreds of old saws among the proverbs that now have grown tiresome from years of usage. They only are amusing when people get them mixed up and say, "You've buttered your bread, now lie on it," or something like that.

For example, I know a runaway couple who got married over the family veto. Their earnest friends gathered round and encouraged them with all the trite sayings they could muster. Eventually some one produced the gem of the occasion by admonishing them to stick to their guns until the cows froze over. Yes, change is always charming, provided you are not the one who has to do the changing.—G. S. C. in the Indianapolis News.

The Ill and the Cure

He—"Yes, dearest, but my bank account would mend."

What makes a baby turn out to be

PERFECT?

★ Well-shaped head.
★ Sound teeth in well-formed jaw.
★ Firm tissue.
★ Straight, strong bones.
These are points physicians look for, in judging a baby. How will your baby compare?

WILL that precious little one in your arms be a perfect specimen? Handsome? Happy? Healthy? Will he grow up so strong and fine and well that he'll be pointed out as one of Nature's lucky ones?

Of course, there are many things that play their part in shaping his future. Heredity. Pre-natal care. Favorable conditions at birth. But, more and more, physicians are stressing the importance of his early food.

If your own milk fails, what food contains the elements he needs in a form his baby stomach can digest with greatest ease?

Physicians make test with fifty babies

Recently, in a famous clinic, two specialists in infant diet fed a group of 50 average babies on Eagle Brand over a period of months—comparing results with other groups of babies similarly fed on other foods. Eagle Brand was the only food these babies received, except for the usual supplementary foods* now given even with mother's milk. Regularly, X-ray pictures of bones were taken. Tooth development was watched. Weights and heights recorded. Blood counts made. And at last came the verdict: Measured by every scientific test, the result was favorable to Eagle Brand. This simple diet—

Eagle Brand with the usual supplementary foods*—had proved equal to the building of 100% babies!

Send for FREE baby booklet

If you cannot nurse your baby, this test will mean a great deal to you. Try Eagle Brand Milk, following the easy directions on the label, and supplement this nourishing, easily digested milk with the supplementary foods* told of in our FREE booklet, "Baby's Welfare." This booklet—whose 80 pages are filled with guidance in all matters of baby care—has helped many a mother raise a healthy, handsome, happy baby. Mail the coupon for your copy. A report of the physicians' test will be sent your doctor, on request.

*The usual supplementary foods, of course, are orange or tomato juice, and cod liver oil or other source of the anti-rachitic vitamin D.

The

play was sponsored by Mrs. E. A. Hasty. Much credit is due the actors for the way they portrayed their parts, both in singing and speaking, and many praises are due them as a result of the musical numbers rendered. The time kept in these numbers showed much training and talent, especially in the way those musical instruments were handled. At the close of the meeting ice cream, cake and coffee was served. About ninety members and guests were present.
