High School
 The twelfth grade Civics class is finding much interesting current material these days concerning the currency problems of the United States.

Several high school students have been absent because of prevailing contagious diseases during the past week.

Viola Burtzloff of the class of '32 was a high school visitor Wednesday afternoon.

The members of the faculty have suddenly taken a keen interest in the local banking situation. Well, we all know that teachers should be interested in the community in which they teach.

The Senior class recently selected a style of invitation to be used in connection with Commencement in June. Mr. Thornton will furnish the invitations.

A program was held Wednesday afternoon sponsored by a committee of four. The program was as follows: Song—Assembly; High School Roll Call—Dora Mark; We Wonder—?—Lulu Robinson; Scandal Sheet—Arlene Leslie; Jokes—Evelyn Frank; Song—Assembly. All learned something about himself and his classmates. The seventh and eighth grades also enjoyed the program.

On Friday evening, March 10, the Sophomores enjoyed a "puzzling" time in the high school. Several students brought along their jigsaws for the event, although those who did not wish to be "puzzled" played cards. Refreshments of ice cream and cake were served. The members of the faculty who attended were Mrs. Bigelow, Mr. Giddings, and their class advisor, Miss Brothwell.

Nathan Lincoln was absent on Wednesday for the purpose of securing a mental and physical examination in Saginaw.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

MARCH P. T. A. MEETING HELD LAST THURSDAY

The March meeting of the local Parent-Teacher Association was held at the school building Thursday evening, March 9. In spite of the inclemency of the weather, something over forty people were in attendance.

As the election of officers comes at the April meeting, the president, Mrs. A. A. Bigelow, appointed a nominating committee, consisting of Mrs. Baguley, Miss Thelma Brown, and Mrs. Wm. Brown, to act at that time. Mrs. Bradley and Mrs. King were placed on the program committee for the ensuing month.

The program committee for the month of March consisted of Mrs. Bing and Mrs. Musoff. Miss Gulliford gave a short sketch of Beethoven's life, followed by the interpretation of the sonata, in which field Beethoven stands without a peer. She then explained by the use of the blackboard the movement of the sonata, after which she rendered a sonata from Beethoven upon the piano. Mrs. Giddings next played an Irish melody. Miss Worden then introduced the speaker of the evening, Miss Hutzel of the Michigan Department of Health. Miss Hutzel proved to be a speaker that has an abundance of material and who presents it effectively.

The seventh-eighth grade room won the care of the flag and staff for the month. The next meeting of the association will be held on Thursday evening, April 13.

CHILD HEALTH MEETING HELD AT McIVOR SCHOOL
 The Iosco County Child Health Committee met at the McIvor school on Tuesday afternoon. Miss Margaret E. Worden was re-elected as chairman for the coming year. Mrs. Henry Jacques as vice-chairman, and Mrs. Sarah Brown re-elected as secretary. A short program under the direction of Mrs. R. C. Arn, local chairman of Sherman township, was given, followed by a talk by Dr. T. H. Johnston of the Consolidated Health Unit. Refreshments were served by the Sherman group.

MISTRESS vs. WIFE IN "THE ANIMAL KINGDOM"
 Ann Harding and Leslie Howard are again co-starred! This time it is in REO-Radio Pictures' adaptation of that delightful Philip Barry play that was last season's stage hit in New York—"The Animal Kingdom." Leslie Howard is playing the part he created on the stage. The same is true of William Gargan as the pugilist butler, and of Ilka Chase as a not-too-bright society woman. "The Animal Kingdom," showing Saturday, Sunday, Monday, March 18, 19 and 20, at the Family Theatre, East Tawas, presents a searching study of modern life. It shows, with almost clinical insight, that men's mistresses do not necessarily live out of wedlock—that many of them are those who preen themselves under the title of "respectable wife."

Miss Harding plays the mistress who turns out really to deserve the name of wife. Leslie Howard is, of course, the husband. Myrna Loy plays the seductive wife. Others in the cast not already mentioned are Neil Hamilton, Henry Stephenson, Leni Stengel and Donald Dillaway.

The picture has been beautifully staged and, with four beautiful women in the cast and the background one of culture and wealth, the gowns are something to rave about.

EAST TAWAS NOSED OUT BY TWO POINTS

In its opening game at the regional basketball tournament held last week end at Mt. Pleasant, East Tawas defeated the United States Indian School of Mt. Pleasant by a score of 18 to 14. East Tawas played cautious and conservative basketball. The Indians were unable to penetrate the East Tawas defense and resorted to "long toms," Chippewa, a forward for the Indians, scored ten points, while LaBell, a guard, stood out for them. Matt Haglund played a beautiful floor game for East Tawas, and Captain Schanbeck led his teammates in scoring with 12 points. Schanbeck also copied the regional high scoring honors with 21 points. Grant, of Reed City, was next with 20.

On Friday night East Tawas was nosed out of a regional championship by a two-point margin. This is the closest any East Tawas team has ever come to winning a regional championship. The contest could have been decided either way, both teams being matched up well in team play. However, Reed City players had a great advantage in height. The game was exciting from the beginning, and at half-time East Tawas led by one point, 7-6. With five minutes left to play East Tawas was two points behind, and at the three-minute mark was two points in the lead due to two field goals by Captain Schanbeck.

In the closing three minutes of play both teams played a fast but wild game. Grant, center of Reed City, broke loose and poked one in that tied the count, and a few seconds later he threw an over-head one-handed shot from the side line to win the game. When the whistle blew Captain Durant was in possession of the ball, headed for the basket with a clear floor ahead of him. Without a doubt Durant played the best game of his high school career. He broke up the opponents' play time after time and was the main cog in offensive play. Bean and Doak also played brilliant defensive ball.

The local fans that attended the game were proud of the showing the East Tawas team made. The record the boys made this season—19 wins in 20 starts—will probably stand for a long time.

It is also interesting to note that East Tawas placed two men on the Class C all-tournament team, and one on the second team.

Class C
 First Team—Grant, Reed City, and Chippewa, Indians, forwards; Schanbeck, East Tawas, center; Moffitt, Reed City, and Durant, East Tawas, guards.
 Second Team—Brooks, Carson City, and Urie, Carson City, forwards; Hill, Indians, center; LaBell, Indians, and Bean, East Tawas, guards.

EAST TAWAS SCHOOL NEWS
 Next Monday night the P. T. A. will hold its monthly meeting at the usual time. Election of officers will take place on this occasion. Mrs. Osgerby will talk and lead a discussion on several phases of Child Psychology, including habits and adolescence. A question box will be used and it is urged parents make use of this at the beginning of the evening. The pep band will furnish the special music.

The state sub-district speaking contest will be held in the Community Building about the first week in April. Harrisville, Oscoda, West Branch, Whittemore, Tawas City, and East Tawas will have representatives. In addition to declamation and oratory this contest will feature extempore speaking for the first time with two entries. Oscoda and West Branch will send representatives. It may also develop that the coach judging system will be given its initial trial. A coach will not judge his own entries. Due to the extended stay in the Michigan Debate League, East Tawas will be represented in declamation only, and Mary Askey won in the local contest last week. Mr. Swanson has been appointed as sub-district chairman.

A free band concert will be given next Wednesday night, March 22, at 8:15 o'clock Eastern Standard time in the Community Building. It was requested to have it on this night because the stores would be open. It is hoped shopping would be concluded in time to attend the concert and make it a big evening. Remember it is free and worth your effort to attend. This is just the second concert this year and several new features have been worked up which are listed on the program.

HOLBECK BILL WOULD DEFER DELINQUENT TAX PAYMENTS
 The following is the text of the proposed law introduced by Representative Fred C. Holbeck which would allow the deferred payment of delinquent taxes:

"And provided further, that, if the 1933 and 1934 tax upon any parcel or description of land or any undivided share thereof, shall be paid on or before September 1 of the year following the assessment, with all fees and penalties as in this act provided, the auditor general shall return to the county treasurer all general and special assessment real estate taxes returned to the state as delinquent for the years 1928, 1929, 1930, 1931, and for 1932 not heretofore sold or redeemed. The county treasurer shall transfer such parcel or description to a separate roll. In such event the said unpaid taxes may be paid to the county treasurer of the county in which the lands are situated, in ten equal annual instalments, without fees, interest or penalties, but with interest on the unpaid balance of balances at the rate of four percent per annum from December 1, 1935, until the date such payment is made, the first instalment to be due and payable December 1, 1935, and in case of the failure to pay any instalment and interest when due, then such parcel or description of land, or undivided share thereof, shall be offered for sale in accordance with the provisions of this act. Until the time of such deferred sale the said balance or balances may be paid in the same manner as heretofore provided by law. The return of such delinquent taxes and special assessments as herein provided shall not preclude the payment of the whole or any part of said taxes and special assessments, either to the auditor general, or to the county treasurer, without interest, collection fees, or other penalties, at any time prior to the time of payment specified and provided for in this act. The publication of the order and petition for the sale of lands delinquent for taxes for 1932 and prior years and of the description of such lands shall be prohibited from and after the taking effect of this act, so as to prohibit the sale of such lands for delinquent taxes for 1932 and prior years on the first Tuesday in May, 1934 and 1935."

Colorado's Story

Part of Colorado's $24,000,000 Sugar-Beet Crop.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

THREE additional "primitive areas" have just been set aside by the federal government in the mountains of Colorado to serve as vacation regions for those who wish to enjoy outings in the real wilderness. The designation has been made so that there will remain, even after further development of highways and railroads, parts of the rugged mountains untouched by the hand of man, a region free from concrete, steel, and even the wires of power lines and telephones. Each of the districts will, in addition, be a natural preserve for wild animal life.

Seventy-five years ago all of Colorado was a wilderness through which only a handful of trappers had wandered. The region which is now the state constituted a real barrier. Its vast eastern plains formed a typical part of the Great American desert, that geographic libel thrust onto American maps by forest-minded pioneers, there to stay for two generations.

And beyond the "desert" rose an immense rampart of "impenetrable" peaks with barren, rocky crowns. Appalling sights they were to men who had grown up among the friendly, rounded, verdure-blanketed mountains of the East.

So it came about that the early rush of trade and emigration that beat out paths to the West passed Colorado by. Its mountain barrier split this westward-faring tide of humanity as a huge boulder in midstream cleaves the waters of a river. The Santa Fe trail turned to the south, traversing only the southeast corner of the area that was to become Colorado. The covered wagons of emigrants Oregon-bound in the early forties, the great herds of thousands of Mormons in '47 and '48, and the rush of the California forty-niners passed chiefly to the north. Save for a handful of white trappers, Colorado was left to its few bands of wandering savages.

But not for long. Gold, always a magnet for men, dragged a horde of fortune seekers to the edge of the mountains almost over night in '58 and '59, and soon sent restless prospectors with picks and pans scurrying like ants over the whole mountain area. They found the mountain region was not a land of arctic wastes and icy solitudes. On the slopes of bare-topped peaks were noble forests; between were smiling valleys with grassy meadows.

"Desert" Now a Rich Region.

Here and there the valleys widened into spacious parks. Streams gurgled on every side, alive with fish. The forests teemed with game.

Into this land of unexpected beauty trickled the van of the emigrants, some to find other goods than gold. The barrier had had its first real breach. The "desert" now is a land of growing crops and fat cattle, criss-crossed by highways and railroads. Farther west the vigorous pioneers and their brothers in spirit who have followed after have thrust railroads through gorges, even hanging them on artificial shelves from sheer precipices.

They have gouged their way through the Continental divide and lesser ranges to construct long tunnels; and over the great sea of mountains, along the routes of Indian trails and the crude early roads of the miners, that cling precariously to steep slopes, they have flung an amazing network of modern highways.

Now, on any summer's day, on the heights which early pessimists called cheerless polar solitudes, one may see the gayly colored frocks of women and children fluttering from scurrying automobiles. They belong to visiting family parties, on picnicking bent, who are whisked over the mountain roads in a continuous stream. The once impassable mountains are a fair mark now for the wheeziest flivver.

The story of Colorado's swift development in the short space of one lifetime is crammed with romance, tragedy, and high adventure, with strokes of good fortune and ill, as are few chapters in the national chronicle.

One day the region was raw, virtually untouched by civilization. The next, almost, men were starting to make a state out of thin mountain air and dusty sagebrush flats; were selling town lots at auction; issuing newspapers; building homes, churches, saloons, and theaters; organizing stage-coach companies; talking politics!

Good Motor Roads.

As you explore Colorado's mountain region, rich alike in gold and superb scenery, you find excellent motor roads

Nellie Cashman

OUT of the bolsterous, red-blooded days of the Alaskan gold rush comes the story of Nellie Cashman, woman sourdough, "queen of the mines," who could mush her way behind the dogs over endless miles of trackless snow with the best of them, and gained more gold to show for it than most.

An "old maid" was Nellie, by her own definition. She needed no man about to help her when she undertook a man's job. Nellie had come West with her family in 1865. Then the wanderlust seized her. With a party of six men, adventurers all, she went to San Francisco. Here the flip of a coin sent them north. At Victoria, British Columbia, she learned that the scurvy was spreading disaster among the miners in the Cassiar district. With her six followers and as many men more, and with 1,600 pounds of supplies and medicine, she went to the rescue. It was a twenty-seven day trip on snowshoes. When news of her undertaking reached a neighboring military post, the commander was so sure Nellie could not survive he sent a detail of soldiers to the mines "to bring back her body for Christian burial." Nellie heard they were coming and climbed a tree to watch their approach. She considered it a good joke!

Such was her success at stamping out the scurvy that Nellie spent two years near the mines. In 1876 she returned to the States and opened a store at Tombstone, Ariz. Here she prospered and was able to stake several of Arizona's present millionaires on the gamble they would find gold in the mines then being developed near Tombstone. Nellie seemed to have settled down. But in 1897 word of the discovery of gold in Alaska summoned her irresistibly north again. She was among the first to reach Dawson, and subsequently "mushed" into the interior, prospecting and staking out claims. She is said to have realized over one million dollars from her claims on Bonanza Creek. During the World war she secured the aid of five citizens of Wiseman, which she then made her home, and started south to enlist as a Red Cross nurse. Before she reached the "outside," however, the war was over.

In 1921, when she was a woman of seventy, Nellie made her last trip to the States, 480 miles of it, the distance between Nolan and Fairbanks, by dog sled. She came, she then explained, to raise capital for the development of her claims at Nolan and in the Koyukuk district, from which she was confident she could "get a couple of million." Nellie Cashman died in 1925 and is buried in Victoria.

Grace Parsons

THE very first long distance horse back ride in American history was made long before the days of Paul Revere, and by a woman. And while the feat of Paul Revere has been given wide publicity, has been dramatized, poetized, burlesqued, the career of Grace Parsons, heroine of the days when Pennsylvania was still frontier and rife with Indian warfare, remains shrouded in mystery.

We know that she lived in Easton, in Northampton county, Pa., the daughter of an English cobbler, who migrated to this country in 1719 and subsequently rose from the shoemaker's bench to be appointed surveyor general of the state.

With the outbreak of the French and Indian wars Pennsylvania, still a border state, was plunged into the horrors of massacre and pillage. The settlers lived in constant terror of the red men lurking in the surrounding forests. One day word was brought to Easton of the massacre at Gnaden Huren in the Lehigh valley, not so many miles away, and the prediction that the Indians, spurred onward by their horrible success here, were bent on further raids to the east.

Panic descended upon Easton. Every resident who could deserted the town, transporting his family and household goods through the wilderness to safety in Philadelphia. Only William Parsons and his family, and a few other settlers, mostly older men and women and children, remained in the defenseless town. With neither stockade for refuge, nor ammunition, their only hope of survival lay in getting a messenger through to Philadelphia with an appeal for aid. No man able to make the journey could be spared. Grace Parsons volunteered to take the message.

From the tense moment at which she set out from her father's house, horseback, on her perilous journey, Grace Parsons' name disappears from historic record. No inspired writer found time in those days of turmoil to set down the details of her lone ride through the trackless wilderness, alive with menacing Indians, to reach her goal. No poet has sung her bravery in tripping couplets. We do have letters, however, which relate how word of the plight of the little band remaining in Easton was received two days and two nights later at the military headquarters in Philadelphia, and record that the needed arms and troops were subsequently dispatched and reached the harassed town. But the Indians, changing their minds, neglected to attack Easton after all!

Our Government—How It Operates

By William Bruckart

OUR FOREIGN SERVICE

PUBLICISTS and teachers and leaders everywhere agree, I believe, that the demand of our age is for the specialist. The farmer has to be a specialist in the several lines he follows; the professional man or woman can hardly rise above a minimum level without concentrating on a particular subject, and the industrialist who does not understand all phases of the business that is his finds the road full of ruts.

Our government is a leader in this field of specialization. It has experts here, there and everywhere and for this and that and the other subject, but I believe few of them receive more thorough training than do those who are classified as foreign service officers. I do not mean that they have the technical training required of the scientist, or the legal learning of the law divisions, or the skill and training of the type who draft plans for a battleship or a great post office building. It is another type of training, but just as intensive.

It has been less than a score of years since congress finally was willing to enact legislation to make our foreign service one of a career type, a service in which capable individuals might properly expect promotion. That has been done and now only our ambassadors and ministers to foreign capitals remain as political plums to be picked by the victorious party each four years. It seems to me that they, too, ought to be "career" men, but it has not happened. Some of the foreign nations maintain their ambassadors and ministers in that classification and it has long been the conviction of students of the subject that such diplomats are among the best to be found in the corps at Washington.

To get into the foreign service now, it is first necessary for the applicant to pass a stiff examination. It is not a test of grade school nature. The applicant has to know one or more foreign languages; he has to have a rather broad acquaintance with business and finance and he has to satisfy a board of examiners that he knows how to conduct himself when he meets people whether on the business of his government or in a social way.

After he has done all of these things satisfactorily, he starts to "school" under guidance of the Department of State which has a group of men who have been through the experience necessary to enable them to teach the newcomers what to do. The course of study entails not only study but work in the various divisions of the department where the applicant can see what is done and how and why it is done. He learns there all of the questions that have arisen between his government and others; he learns how they were handled and the results, and he is informed of how pending matters are viewed. In other words, the course provides a perspective of American policy respecting international affairs, and if he is good timber, the training he has received fits him to start shaping policy on his own initiative once he is assigned to a post in a foreign land. He has become a diplomat, equipped to look after the interests of his government and promote good will.

The young diplomat who goes abroad enters on his duties with special instructions concerning questions concerning the particular peoples and government where he is detailed. It is obvious that there are different questions to be considered in western Europe than in Latin-America. Likewise, they are different in the Near East than in the Far East. The Department of State, therefore, has divided its work so that one section supervises relations with a particular part of the world where the problems and the people have some common basis.

To accomplish this end and simplify administration, six divisions have been created in the department. They are the divisions of Far Eastern affairs, Latin-American affairs, Western European affairs, Near Eastern affairs, Mexican affairs and Eastern European affairs. It will suffice to show the scope of these groups to point out that China and Japan are among the nations included in the Far Eastern division; that all of South and Central America are included in the Latin-American list; that Great Britain and France are among those under Western European supervision; that Albania and Bulgaria are listed as Near Eastern; that Finland and Poland are termed Eastern European and that Mexico is dealt with alone in one division.

Acting under the general supervision of the secretary, or the under secretary, the chiefs of these divisions are the direct contacts of the foreign service personnel with their government at home. Of course, in a time of crisis, the secretary or the under secretary is kept constantly informed of every development, but the routine guidance of our foreign policy after all is quite generally conceived and executed in those divisions in conjunction with the diplomat at his post of duty, be it a few hundred miles from Washington, such as in Canada, or in far-away Sumatra.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK by WALTER TRUMBULL

It was when Rudolph Bischoff, now of New York's Westbury, ran the Trianon palace, at Versailles, that there arrived a short man, with a pointed reddish beard and a head as free from hair as a large, pink pearl.

"I like," he explained, "to change the color of my room in accordance with my moods."

But it became evident that the mind of the fish fancier was not at ease.

A week after his departure, Mr. Bischoff received a telegram. It said that d'Annunzio had a presentment that the fish was dying and asked for a report on its health.

Back came another telegram from d'Annunzio. It thanked Mr. Bischoff for his sympathy and asked him to bury the goldfish in the garden.

In some ways this is reminiscent of the Manhattan man and the canary bird, to which his wife was extremely attached.

that her husband got out and bury it. His idea was to toss the box in a garbage can, but every time he started to carry out that idea he imagined that passersby were viewing him with deep suspicion.

When Police Inspector Matt McGrath left County Tipperary, his male parent was much prejudiced against all forms of athletics, which he described as wasteful and exhausting nonsense.

A fashion editor assures me that women's bathing suits will be scantier this season than they were last.

A number of New York financial institutions would like to get out of the moving picture business, but are in the situation of the hunter who climbed the tree after the bear, caught it, and besought his companions to come up and help him let go.

HOWS AND WHYS IN RAISING CHICKENS

Questions and Answers That Cover Many Points.

By H. H. ALP, Poultry Extension Specialist, College of Agriculture, University of Illinois—WNU Service.

Twenty-four questions and answers cover most of the stumbling blocks which Illinois farmers will have to clear in the successful brooding and feeding of chicks this spring.

Q. What are the essential requirements for successful rearing of chicks? A. Healthy, vigorous chicks in a clean ventilated house on a clean range, not overcrowded, good feed, plenty of feeder space and the liberal use of good common sense.

Q. How much floor space should a chick have? A. There should be at least one square foot of floor space for every three chicks.

Q. What should the room temperature of the brooder house be? A. Generally the room temperature of the brooder house will vary somewhat with the age of the chicks.

Q. What should chicks receive their first feeding? A. As soon as they are put in the brooder house, long delayed feeding is likely to be followed by bad results.

Q. What are the most common mistakes made by the flock owner in rearing chicks? A. Not providing enough hopper space, keeping the brooder house too hot and losing interest after the chicks are six weeks old.

Cost Sheet Shows Egg Profits in Year 1932

Every poultry flock owner keeping cost records for the poultry extension office at North Carolina State college during the year 1932 made a profit above feed cost of $1.27 a bird, according to figures submitted by the owners and recently tabulated by C. J. Maupin, poultry specialist.

There were 214 flock owners who kept these records through the year and made a careful report month by month of the results being secured.

The average for each month shows 40-358 birds from which records were secured. This was an average of 188 birds for each farm for each month.

In October, the number of birds per farm reached 233 and the lowest was in August when records were received from 137 birds per farm. This indicates that some careful culling was done and that the average farm flock had been reduced more than 40 per cent in the first eleven months of the year.

The gross income from the eggs received from the flocks reported upon amounted to $102,281.20 or $477.94 a farm. The gross value of eggs for each bird was $2.53. The average price received for eggs was 19.9 cents a dozen and the average feed cost for each dozen eggs was about 10 cents.

What Pullets Cost

Records on 46,121 pullets, kept during a period of three years in six leading poultry producing counties in California, give the net cash cost of raising pullets to the sixth month of age as 70 cents.

When labor, depreciation, and interest on investment were added, the net cost of raising each pullet increased to 99 cents. The total cost was $1.36, but there was an income of 33 cents from sale of cockerels and pullets, of three cents from sale of eggs, and a miscellaneous income of one cent.

These figures, according to L. D. Sanborn, assistant farm adviser in Los Angeles county, were gathered by the agricultural extension service of the University of California.—Los Angeles Times.

Kind of Chicks That Pay

The chicks that grow without a check from hatching to maturity are those that pay best. The profitability of any lot of chicks raised depends on how many such there are in it.

When the parent stock is all carefully selected for type and vitality, and any weakly looking chicks are killed when taken from the incubator, growing good, healthy chickens is entirely a matter of proper care and considerate feeding at every stage of growth.

Many Like Turkey-Growing

When the revival of interest in turkey growing began shortly after the war, authorities on poultry agreed that it was a passing fad—a rich man's game. So far events have discredited their judgment.

Rich men who took it up have not tired of it as was expected, and their success encourages others to grow turkeys. Turkey growers generally find a certain fascination about the birds—in many ways so different from other poultry.—Boston Herald.

When CHILDREN —don't gain weight —don't grow strong —don't keep well

The stomach is not to blame when a child is finicky about food. Nor is every sluggish girl or boy constipated. Instead of a lot of medicine, give a little pure syrup of figs.

It's true, mothers, for it's Nature, California syrup of figs is bottled health for the little ones.

Pale, sickly children whose tongues are always coated, and who are never really hungry, are suffering from stasis. That means a sluggish colon; a colon clogged with waste.

They need the "California treatment." You can give this treatment yourself, any time, anywhere; it's simple. Every druggist has California syrup of figs all bottled, with full directions for a babe of two years or child in his teens.

Start tonight, giving enough to cleanse the colon of every bit of poisonous waste. Then a spoonful or so, every other day, until the child's appetite, color, weight, and general health tell you all sluggishness or constipation has been conquered.

When a cold or severe sickness has sapped a child's strength and stamina, remember California syrup of figs.

If you want to get real results, get the real California syrup of figs. Do not accept any bottle which does not say CALIFORNIA Syrup of Figs.

In the matter of the petition of John K. Stack, Jr., Auditor General of the State of Michigan, for and in behalf of said state, for the sale of certain lands for taxes assessed thereon.

On reading and filing the petition of the Auditor General of the State of Michigan praying for a decree in favor of the State of Michigan, against each parcel of land therein, described, for the amounts, therein specified, claimed to be due for taxes, interest and charges on each such parcel of land and that such lands be sold for the amounts so claimed by the State of Michigan.

It is ordered that said petition will be brought on for hearing and decree to be held at the city of Tawas City in the county of Iosco, State of Michigan, on the 28th day of March, A. And it is further ordered that in pursuance of said decree the lands described in said petition for which a decree of sale shall be made, will be sold for the several taxes, interest, and charges thereon as determined by such decree on the first Tuesday

Witness be Hon. Herman Dehnke, Circuit Judge, and the seal of the said Circuit Court of Iosco County, this 24th day of January, A. D. 1933.

Herman Dehnke, Circuit Judge. Countersigned,

Frank E. Dease, Clerk

State of Michigan

To the Circuit Court for the County of Iosco in Chancery:

The petition of John K. Stack, Jr., Auditor General of the State of Michigan, for and in behalf of said State, respectfully shows that the list of lands hereinafter set forth and marked "Schedule A," contains a description of all lands in said county of Iosco upon which taxes were assessed for the years mentioned therein and which were returned as delinquent for non-payment of taxes and which taxes have not been paid; together with the total amount of such taxes, with interest computed thereon to the time fixed for sale, and collection fee and expenses, as provided by law, extended against each of said parcels of land.

Your petitioner further shows to the Court that said lands were returned to the Auditor General under the provisions of Act 206 of the public Acts of 1933, as delinquent for non-payment of said taxes for said years respectively and that said taxes remain unpaid; except that lands included in said "Schedule A" for taxes of 1890 or prior years were returned to the Auditor General as delinquent for said taxes under the provisions of the general tax laws in force prior to the passage of Act 206 of the Public Acts of 1891, and which taxes remain unpaid.

Your petitioner further shows that in all cases where lands are included in "Schedule A" as aforesaid for taxes of 1890 or of any prior year, said lands have not been sold for said taxes or have been heretofore sold for said delinquent taxes and the sale or sales so made have been set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction, or have been cancelled as provided by law.

Your petitioner further shows and avers that the taxes, interest, collection fee and expenses as set forth in said "Schedule A" are a valid lien on the several parcels of land described in said schedule.

Your petitioner further shows that the said taxes on the said described lands have remained unpaid for more than one year after they were returned as delinquent; and the said taxes not having been paid, and the same being now due and remaining unpaid as above set forth, your petitioner prays a decree in favor of the state of Michigan against each parcel of said lands, for the payment of the several amounts of taxes, interest, collection fee and expenses, as computed and extended in said schedule against the several parcels of land contained therein, and in default of payment of the said several sums computed and extended against said lands, that each of said parcels of land may be sold for the amounts due thereon, as provided by law, to pay the lien aforesaid.

And your petition will ever pray, etc., etc.

A list of lands referred to as included in "Schedule A" is on file in the office of the County Clerk and subject to Public Inspection.

Dated January 19, 1933.

There is a reaper whose name is death
And with His cycle keen,
He reaps the bearded grain with a breath
And the flowers that grow between.
Shall I have naught that is fair,
Said He,
Have naught but the bearded grain.
Though the breath of these flowers
Is sweet to me,
I will give them all back again.

Audrey Maxine, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Johnson, passed away Thursday, March 9, of pneumonia. Less than 24 hours after she was stricken the little flower had faded and passed on to bloom again in a brighter world. Little Audrey Maxine was born December 27, 1932. Funeral services were held at the M. E. church, Rev. Musser officiating, with interment in Evergreen cemetery. The grief-stricken young parents have the sympathy of the community in their loss.

SYNOPSIS

"Tom" Belknap, big timber operator, ordered by his physicians to take a complete rest, plans a three months' trip abroad. Promises of advancement he has made to his son John are broken, and the young man is indignant. Paul Gorbelt, Belknap's partner, whom John cordially dislikes, is a bone of contention. Father and son part without a complete understanding. At Shoestring, his train delayed by a wreck, John is ordered to leave at once. He refuses. After a fist fight, his attackers realize it is a case of mistaken identity. John learns his father is believed to be out to wreck the Richards lumber company. Bewildered and unbelieving, he seeks employment with that company. At the office he finds Gorbelt bullying a young girl, and throws him out.

Gorbelt struggled, but the lock on his wrist was secure. He bent forward for relief as John opened the door. The cold night surged in on them, and then the one was running down the steps to regain the balance that the other's shove had imperiled.

At the bottom he whirled and lifted his face, normally handsome, now wrenched with rage.

"You swine!" he cried. "You'll pay for this!"

"Collect, then! But you stay away from here until you're sent for! Get that!"

He closed the door and turned back to the office, removing his cap as he went.

Brighter lights burned now, for a cluster in the ceiling had been switched on. The girl sat at a littered desk in the middle of the room, pale, shoulders hunched, head bowed. He stopped, poised in surprise. She was the girl he had seen in the station waiting room, and with her coat and hat removed, in the jersey dress which exposed a graceful column of throat, she was as out of place in this office with its battered desks and dingy walls as a flower in a wood yard!

John spoke:

"He called me an eavesdropper. I guess, in a way, he was right."

"Fortunately, you heard," she murmured, and then looked up. "Oh! . . . Oh, I didn't know it was you!" She brushed at her soft, short hair nervously and managed a sort of smile. "I . . . I wanted to tell you how . . . how sorry I am that the boys did what they did. . . . Won't you come in?"

She rose, and he could see that she was rallying her composure rapidly.

"I feel like an intruder," he said, advancing. "I came over here on the chance that I might find the manager and ran into the late unpleasantness?"

"I am the manager," she said simply. And now surprise had him wholly; so completely that he blinked and laughed outright.

"What! You . . . Why, a girl in this mess?"

"She flushed deeply. 'I guess that's what it is: a mess. Even strangers know! I am Ellen Richards. This was my father's company. I've been trying to carry on for over a year now, since he . . . since he died.'"

"Oh," he said duly. "Oh!"—a bit longdrawn, this time, and in a sort of relief rather than amazement or stupefaction. Relief, because it was a girl on whom his father made war!

It simplified matters for a chap in an embarrassing position. A man, even in a pinch, might want to fight through to the finish on his own resources. A girl like this—the sort of girl you took to tea, and the theater and to supper clubs; a nice girl who looked as though she read books and played golf and would complete the picture of a smart roadster—would be needing help. Lots of help! Immediately! It was her tough luck that she had incurred the attention of an old tyrant such as his father was turning out to be; his good luck that she was in trouble, filled with animus as he was for old Tom, and aching as he was to show what he could do.

"Well!" he said as he took the chair she indicated, and in the third ejaculation was a deal of satisfaction, as of one suddenly rounding a dubious corner into an unexpected bonanza!

"It was terrible the way the boys met you," she said. "There's an excuse for it, of course. It can be explained by the fact that they're so worked up over what has been going on and so loyal to my father's memory that they do these things regardless of my wishes. I'm . . . I'm so sorry! I feel responsible for it, and for their hurting you."

He touched his cut lip.

"Don't mind me. As I understand the situation you seem to have troubles enough without worrying about a scratch on a stranger!"

Her eyes dropped. "And it was awfully generous of you to . . . to do what you did just now"—voice trembling ever so little. "First we hear that Tom Belknap's bully is coming here to harm more of my men and we beat you up in our excitement. Next, you walk in here to find Tom Belknap's partner demanding surrender and save me . . . embarrassment. There are some matters a girl can't handle . . . alone."

John stirred uneasily. To tell a girl who could speak of a man with such contempt and animosity that he was that man's son was a bit more of an ordeal than he cared to undertake, considering his objective. He had found her in a man's job, in a man's fight, confronted with a man's problems, but she was no man; a girl, with feminine reactions and prejudices, and to reveal his identity would terminate this talk abruptly.

His heart went down . . . and then rebounded. Sandy's letter rested in his bill-fold. Good old Sandy, so rattled at writing a letter of character that he left out the once-important, but now damning, third of his name!

He picked up her last words:

"Yes; a lot of matters a girl can't handle alone," but his steady gaze on her face was not one of sympathy or understanding. He was sizing her up, studying her in the light of a possible vehicle for that urge for vengeance.

"Throwing your caller out was simple. Maybe it won't be so easy to help you in other things. But that's what I came here for: to ask for a chance to try."

"Meaning just what?" she asked with an odd bluntness for a girl.

"That I understand you're looking for a woods superintendent and I'd like to take on the chore."

"And that . . . that's what brought you to Shoestring?"

Surely it was a surge of relief, the sudden dawning of an unlooked-for hope, which unsteady her tone then!

Well, now, a young man can't lie, can he? Not to a girl who, for an instant and even through the concentration of a savage purpose, seems peculiarly lovely to behold? No. . . . This young man could not; but for the sake of attaining his goal he may evade a little, may he not?

"I've just finished one job. I don't know how good I am; I'd like to find out. When I heard of the jam you're in here"—lifting one hand and giving it a little twist as though the explanation were self-evident—"I thought it might be a good place to see what I'm good for. . . . what I'm wound on."

A moment of silence followed. He could see the pulses leaping in her throat, and his own heart speeded a trifle. A girl in a corner should welcome such a chance, and he waited, anticipating that welcome, but it did not come. Instead of figuratively falling on his neck and hailing him as the savior of the day, she folded her small hands and looked at him with a gaze as searching as his was level.

"Perhaps you're asking for more than you understand . . . in the way of trouble, I mean. I need help and right away, but I wouldn't want any man to come to work for me without knowing just how desperate the situation is. That, you see, wouldn't be fair to . . . to the sort of man I need."

"People who have known this company for years figure that we are through. Even the men on the job have the notion that we're marked paid. Perhaps they are right; I'm trying to prove them wrong."

"I . . . It might be simpler if I knew just how much you have heard?"

He told her tersely the gossip he had listened to in the past hour, and she nodded slowly.

"Those things are all true. There's a fundamental problem of finance, however, which is behind it all. The Bank of Kampfest, now owned by Belknap & Gorbelt, holds enough of our paper to make our statement look very bad. We can hope for nothing but embarrassing demands there. The only way we can meet those obligations and keep from being sold out to satisfy them is to keep the mill sawing. I can borrow on lumber in the yard from Milwaukee banks, largely because we have some very favorable contracts. However, the contracts will be voided unless we are prepared to meet their terms of regular and prompt deliveries."

"The way out now goes back to keeping the mill logged and running. Things haven't been any too smooth at the woods end; you know what we are up against in the matter of transportation, evidently. We can't spend a dollar for more equipment. We must keep afloat with what we have . . . or go down."

She paused and John had a queer feeling; annoyance at her apparent competence.

"Snow came early and we're going to have trouble with it. We have fourteen miles of railroad through chopplings where drifting will be certain. I was worried tonight and went looking for Tiny and Way-Bill—my engineer and conductor—to have them take the plow out if it didn't let up. That's how I happened to see your reception."

The snow has stopped; we're safe for tonight. How long we'll be safe, no one can tell. Without fighting snow we've been unable to build up a reserve of logs in the millyard. A three-day shut down would ruin us."

She paused again and her eyes shifted a moment from his intent scrutiny. She talked like a man, a business man, but that change in her face indicated to John that she was playing up to a part, downing her weaknesses and limitations with an effort which gave her a superficial veneer of coldness, hardness.

"No, things haven't been going so well in the woods. I kept Royce, my father's old superintendent, on because I could trust him absolutely and I . . . I need men I can trust"—the shell she had built about herself giving way ever so little for the moment.

"We were just getting along when Mr. Belknap himself came up to Kampfest."

John's mouth tightened and his brows gathered closer.

"He seems to have arranged things very well. For a year Mr. Gorbelt, his partner, has been asking me to put a price on the property. I have refused. After Mr. Belknap left, the process of forcing us out began. They overtaxed our railroad with their logs; then Mr. Belknap's hired thug put my superintendent out of the picture. The camp foreman, Mark Saunders, isn't up to the job. Two others who are good loggers won't come, now that the story has got around that Tom Belknap is after the Richards hide."

"That is the situation," she ended abruptly. "That's what a superintendent will have to confront. Who are you to do it?"

He smiled, despite the unpleasant conviction that this Ellen Richards was going to be amazingly hard to deal with, and reached into a pocket for his bill-fold.

"A fellow doesn't like to polish his own medals," he laughed, a bit nervously, as he considered the thin ice on which he was treading. "I've only held one job that amounted to anything"—fingering through the papers in the wallet. "I've had four years in forestry school, but the value of that remains to be proven, I suppose."

He handed over Sandy's letter. "I don't know what you expect in the way of personal qualifications. I swear when it isn't always necessary; I smoke cigarettes; I've been known to drink some. I don't know all that there is to know about hardwood logging by a long shot."

She was not reading the letter; watching him, instead, as though his words or manner intrigued her.

"I'd be interested in this job principally because it would . . . would show what I could do, and I'm curious to know how good or how bad I am. I've done my best to size up my own shortcomings; as for the rest, I'll leave it to Sandy McIver"—gesturing towards the letter she held.

The girl's eyes dropped to the scrawl and her mouth twitched. It was coming now, he felt! She was going to jump at the chance of getting help! He leaned forward a bit.

"That's a fine letter, Mr. Steele," she said. "Witch Hill. . . . I don't know the company." She looked at him as if slightly puzzled and paused a moment. Then, decisively: "I'd like to have you go to camp with me tomorrow morning. After a few hours on the job I'll give you an answer."

She rose with a manner of dismissal and John Belknap, masquerading now as John Steele, got to his feet, annoyed and confounded.

"Fair enough," he said; it was all there was to say. "What time?"

"Seven sharp, in the mill-yard. Good night. And once more: I thank you for . . . for what you did here."

"That was all right," he said. "I'd be glad to take on a row with a hand like Gorbelt!"

He did not heed the slight inquisitiveness that had been in her voice, indication that thinking back to her encounter brought a recurrence of fright. He did not care what went on in the mind or the heart of Ellen Richards except for what she might think or feel of him as an applicant for a chance to show his father, indeed, what he was wound on!

CHAPTER III

He was in the mill-yard early, watching Ellen, clad in Mackinaw and breeches and pacs, as she watched the loading of camp supplies. She was crisp, intent, business-like and greeted him almost curiously.

Tiny Temple reached down from the locomotive cab to shake his hand; Way-Bill took a moment to apologize again for the trouble of last night, and John could see that both were watching him closely, probably wondering about his errand.

He strolled about; watched the mill saw; looked over equipment in the yard. With the train under way he sat alone in the "dog-house" of the way-car while Ellen remained below, talking earnestly with the conductor.

Her words reached him occasionally and always they were of the country, savoring in phrase and inflexion of the timber. She was a daughter of the camps, for certain; Jerry from the same stock which had given him birth.

Out to the northward they toiled, up mile after mile of stiff grade, and after seven miles they crossed the main-line branch, with its water tank and tender's house.

From the crossing they rocked and clanked down long grades towards the distant timber, stopped at the Belknap & Gorbelt camps, spotted cars and then went on another three miles to Richards Camp Sixteen, woods headquarters.

He just followed her around. He met men: Saunders, the foreman; Jack Tait, the barn boss; the cook, the scaler, the clerk, Jerry Tubbs, fat and asthmatic. He heard her talk to these men as he himself would have talked to men in his employ: directly, tersely, in their own language. But now and again he heard items which indicated the sorry deficiencies in her experience for such a task as that confronting her. He kept his eyes as well as ears open; he asked questions of Ellen occasionally and of a man here and there; but all the time he was restive, up on the bit, growing hourly more provoked with a girl who needed him but who would keep him waiting!

But in late afternoon, when she led the way into the office, deserted for the moment, she changed; ceased to be the assured young business woman, filling a man's shoes more or less competently.

The crude office was silent, and John closed the door.

She dropped to a chair as though suddenly weakened and her mouth worked. Then she looked up with a wry little smile and asked:

"Well, what do you think of it?"

"Hay-wire!" he exploded. "It's slow, costly . . . a joke! No wonder you're in trouble, with a woods job run like this one!"

"Well . . . what would you do?" she asked, trying to put some tone of challenge into the words and failing.

He stood there and told her what he would do and why, item by item; told it emphatically, almost as though she were disputing him; told it with a thoroughness and his agility of interpretation.

She watched him, lips parting as his conviction carried him away and when he stopped, again standing before her, saying, "Those are a few of the things I'd do until I dug up more to do," she looked away into the sunset, filtering through the naked tops of maple and birch and beech and her eyes misted.

"I'm glad you're looking for a hard job, John Steele!" she said calmly. "I think . . . I think I'm going to depend on you from now on."

He laughed then, as a man will who is coming out of a fright.

"I'll do my best," he said.

Now when a young man, wholly mad, is out to show what he can do, and who has had an opportunity of displaying his capacities dangled before his eyes tantalizingly for a day that seemed like a week, he is bound to go fast, once started.

Ellen Richards' new boss went like the wind, like fire, like a wild horse; by day he drove his crews; by night he sat in the office at camp or in town and laid plans for further driving.

The winter's operation had been confined to a long, narrow ravine into which, because of the contour of the country, steel could not be laid at justified expense. The haul was along the bottom of this sharp depression to its lower end and thence up a hill, where a tow-team worked every hour getting loads to the top. From there the sleighs doubled back on the high land, paralleling the first part of the haul to reach the landing.

Over three miles, it was, and at one point the steel came within forty rods of the rim of the ravine.

"We should be dumping right here!" John exclaimed to Saunders when he saw the place.

"Yeah. But we don't haul by airplane yet!" the foreman growled.

John said no more but his mind was busy. In the mill-yard was an old steam loader, long discarded. It was not in bad shape, and three days later it was in the woods; men were building a road through the deepening snow straight up the side of that pot-hole and on to the adjacent steel. The jammer was set down, skidded to the brink of the steep pitch and a cable bent to the drum. Teams left off the long journey by lead roads, took their sleighs down the pitch to the skidways, brought them, loaded, to the foot of the incline, unhooked and came up ahead while the power of the Rapid's steam engine snaked the loads to the top.

The tow-team was liberated for the haul; each sleigh was able to move an extra thousand a day; costs were cut. Daily the size of the decks at the new landing increased; log production was stepping up; a fundamental shortcoming was being overcome, and as he stood on the third afternoon following the initiation of his new plan, John muttered tightly:

" . . . see what I'm wound on, Tom! See what I'm wound on, yet?"

Yes, the Richards operation had new life, new vigor as long as John had his fingers on each phase, but a man can't be in more than one place at a time; each day has only its allotted hours.

He had had the train crew with him from the beginning and did not need to worry about getting the best out of what equipment he had there. Tucker, the roadmaster, was spry enough, eager enough, it seemed, but there were times when John felt that he could not wholly trust the man. Nothing he could put his finger on; no delinquency he could point out. Just intuitive distrust.

He won Jack Tait, the barn boss, as a stalwart friend by sitting up through one bitter night to help minister to a sick horse. The horse died, but its distress had not been John's primary motive in going without sleep. He needed the staunch support of his men, as any executive needs the faith and loyalty of those at his command. No business will succeed unless divisional heads are behind the management heart and soul; the backbone of an army is its non-coms.

But the uphill pull commenced to show progress. Forty thousand a day, John must put to the mill to keep the band-saw fed. He began to do better than this; by holiday time the reserve decked in the yard had crept up a trifle; a two-day cut was there, waiting for an emergency; a three, enough for four days.

Not time, yet, for a long breath, but time to let yourself hope . . . a trifle. . . . show you what I'm wound on!" he growled between set teeth as he watched a load going on to the deck instead of directly into the hot-pool.

Not time, yet, for a long breath, though. The night watchman at the mill reported that in making his rounds an unidentified skulker had run out of the locomotive stall. A wrench was found, dropped in the doorway, and John put on a special man to guard Tiny's old relic, their only hope.

Three days later, running for one of the stiff grades with four loads of logs bound for Kampfest, Tiny Temple looked back to see a car leave the rails, to see the splintered ends of ties pop up through the snow, to see the car take the ditch and go over before he could stop.

Wrecking tools were in Shoestring, and it was necessary to make the run in for jacks and replacers. They got the car back on and the track repaired, but a day was lost and the margin of safety for the mill shrank instead of growing.

Way-Bill and Tiny came to John.

"A brake-beam on that car'd been monkeyed with," the conductor said. "You could see the fresh wrench marks on the nuts."

"What do you make of that?"

"They know we're doin' too well. Fixed to spill us to make trouble. They care a d—n about getting their logs moved! The Kampfest yard's full, and if we keep on the main line won't be able to clean out the switches at the crossing. More dirty work!"

John called Tucker into the conference, but the roadmaster smiled and shook his head doubtfully.

"Fairly story!" he said. "You couldn't tell within two weeks when that beam'd been repaired."

Way-Bill spat and big Tiny eyed Tucker with a look that was not just pleasant. John wondered, feeling a bit uneasy. Thereafter, he kept wrecking equipment in the way-car.

And now Gorbelt's men commenced dumping at two landings, which meant that it would be necessary to spot two strings of empties daily, more minutes taken from the time of Ellen's train crew. A man must take it and grin, though. John knew that; he had read the old contract by which Richards agreed to transport those logs.

Find Wisconsin Peat Bog Dates From Glacial Age

An investigation into the origin and development of an age-old peat bog in Wisconsin has been made by experts of the botanical department of the State university. The conclusion reached was that the bog began as a lake in the period when glaciers swept over the state.

The botanists found 25 kinds of fossil pollens, of which ten were significant in determining the history of the bog. A layer of water mosses next to the clay in the deepest part of the bog lent support to the lake theory.

Evidence that the development of the bog was not an uninterrupted process was found in the disclosure of layers of oxidized peat or muck, indicating striking climatic changes during the long process of formation.

Peter

PETER, or as everybody called him, Pete, was big and square shouldered with that kind of red hair that seems always to have been rumpled by a stiff breeze. He was stubborn and pugnacious when there was anything to be stubborn and pugnacious about, but usually he was easy going and gentle.

Pete was as putty in the hands of Daphne Baker, but no one but he knew it. Daphne was so fragile that he thought she must have stepped from a Watteau canvas—Pete had once seen a Watteau canvas in London. Her hair was like spun gold.

Sometimes Daphne treated Pete with all the sweetness in the world and sometimes she seemed to regard him as just a big, solid doormat. Pete absorbed her kindnesses and forgot the rest. He felt reasonably sure that in the end Daphne would give herself to his safekeeping, and he waited patiently.

Nobody but Pete knew that just outside the city limits on a sunny hill there sprawled a bungalow, with wide lawns and flower gardens and a fountain playing against the glorious distance of great trees. He pictured Daphne there, and, of course, himself somewhere close by.

Daphne had heaps of flirtations. What pretty girl has not? But always she drifted back to the great bulwark that was Pete.

He had not worried much about these affairs until the advent, on the screen, of the handsome, soulful-eyed Geoffrey Collins. Daphne simply went wild about him.

During these fascinated days Daphne looked at Pete's unruly red hair and his big useful hands and his broad grin with comparisons in her mind that did not bode well for Pete.

When Pete took her across a crowded street, he simply took her arm in his strong hand, guided her swiftly and surely to where he wanted to take her and then let her go. Now, Geoffrey, on the screen, of course, would look questionably and most soulfully into the eyes of his ladylove, take her arm gently and wait most gracefully for the traffic to clear before risking his own and his ladylove's life in crossing.

And invariably when Pete took her to dinner he did all the ordering. He made her eat a huge steak, some fine vegetables and a good pudding.

"No," he declared at her protestations. "Girls require more than hearts of lettuce and sardines for dinner. You eat that—all of it." And Daphne did.

On the other hand, Geoffrey would have toyed daintily with some tid-bits that might have satisfied a Persian kitten.

So, when the great announcement came that there was to be a combined society and movie garden party for the benefit of the unemployed, and that Geoffrey was to dance with all and sundry, Daphne knew that the great moments of her life were approaching. But just to make sure, she got herself appointed on the refreshments committee. It was to be a tremendous affair and the whole of the city would flock to see the favorites of the screen in varied forms of charitable performances.

"No," declared Pete, adamant in his decision, "I'd rather go fishing than doll up on a hot day like this. You put on your best frock, look your prettiest and have a dozen or so dances with the great Geoffrey." He knew Daphne was annoyed, but he wanted to give her free rein. In his heart Pete feared for the first time, for Geoffrey seemed like a man of real charm.

Pete felt that his castle of dreams might tumble that day, and he went off to fish, far up the river.

Daphne was exquisite in a silvery wisp of a dress, and a wide droopy hat shadowing the deep violet of her eyes. No wonder that Geoffrey gloried in his partner when it came Daphne's turn to dance with him. Daphne's heart had pounded when she stepped forward to meet him, but no sooner were they on the floor actually dancing than she became her normal, level-headed self.

Geoffrey was delightful. He was a wonderful dancer. He gazed soulfully and respectfully into her eyes but there was the faintest bit of make-up beneath his eyes and a becoming tint of sunburn that the sun had not produced on his face. Daphne smiled softly as she finished her dance with him, then fled swiftly from the garden party. She didn't take time to change her clothes but hurried to her little roadster and drove recklessly far beyond the city limits. Then, parking her car, she walked quickly along the river bank to a tiny grove of trees with some great rocks that lay out on the river. Pete sat there fishing, but even if a whale had been on his line, there would have been no joy in it. For Pete was seeing Daphne in the arms of Geoffrey Collins.

"Pete—dear!" Daphne hurried herself into Pete's arms. There wasn't a soul in the world in sight and her white, silky arms went up clingingly about Pete's neck and she lifted her lips to be kissed.

The fishing rod floated down the river while Daphne gloried in Pete's strong arms, his rumpled hair and his rugged face with its broad grin. Pete knew his voice would tremble if he spoke, so he only tightened his grip and visualized the bungalow on the sunny hill.

How to train BABY'S BOWELS

Babies, bottle-fed or breast-fed, with any tendency to be constipated, would thrive if they received daily half a teaspoonful of this old family doctor's prescription for the bowels.

That is one sure way to train tiny bowels to healthy regularity. To avoid the fretfulness, vomiting, crying, failure to gain, and other ills of constipated babies.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is good for any baby. For this, you have the word of a famous doctor. Forty-seven years of practice taught him just what babies need to keep their little bowels active, regular; keep little bodies plump and healthy. For Dr. Caldwell specialized in the treatment of women and little ones. He attended over 3500 births without loss of one mother or baby.

J. H. TAYLOR'S PITCH SHOTS

J. H. TAYLOR's ability to "cut the feet" from under the ball on mashie shots opened up a new way to lower scores. Before his era golfers were quite content to get the ball on the green. But Taylor's method of making the cut shot was soon copied by many though few matched his ability. His pitch shots would drop the ball within the vicinity of the flag time and again, requiring but one putt to get down. Accurately sizing up the distance to the green, he would keep his eye on the ball and play for the

THE CARELESSNESS OF JOHNNY CHUCK

THERE is a certain time when little folks, all kinds of little folks, are neither very little nor very big; they are half way between. But they don't feel half way between. Goodness, no! They feel quite grown up and all too often are quite sure that they know all there is to know. It is at that age that usually they get into the most trouble. No one can tell them anything.

Boyhood Dreams

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

I LOOKED on in boyhood days, and Bill looked on the same. He to wealth and wealthy ways, and I to hills of fame. I have never climbed so far, nor he so much acquired. Here we were, and here we are, whatever we desired. Fate may treat us kindly yet, though fate so long delays. I may have my coronet, and he his wealthy ways. Then, I wonder, what the dream, and what the vision then, What the fairest thing will seem to be to musing men?

He may have a house of stone, to me a crown belong. He for riches may be known, and I for but a song. I may stand upon the hill and he amid the mart. Each according to his will, according to his heart. Yet of something we shall dream, when sitting there o' nights, Will it be a larger scheme, and be the greater heights? I may win a world of praise, he all the wealth there is— I'll look back to boyhood days, and he'll look back to his.

And there is another age when people are no longer young, but have become set in their ways and find it difficult to learn new things, and are very sure of their opinions. Once more they are inclined to think that they know all there is to know. Now when any one, young or old, thinks he knows all there is to know you may be pretty sure that old Mr. Trouble is waiting for him just around the corner. Johnny Chuck had been all through the first period. Of course, Johnny has grandchildren, if you must know. And now Johnny was at that second period of knowing all there is to know. He wouldn't have liked it at all and would have indignantly said that it wasn't so if you had told him that this was the case. But the truth is he was set in his ways and because he had done certain things in certain ways for so long, he had come to think that those ways were the only ways. He had come to think that because Reddy Fox and Granny Fox and Old Man Coyote and Hooty the Owl never had caught him, they never would be able to. He considered himself so much smarter than they that he had nothing to fear from them.

Now, when any person, big person, middle-size person or little person, gets to thinking that way, carelessness is just bound to result. And so it was with Johnny Chuck. He intended to be just as watchful as ever. For new dangers he was as watchful as ever. But for old dangers he had so much contempt that he was careless.

When he had built that house down in the far corner of the Old Orchard he had made the entrance between the roots of an old apple tree and these roots made it impossible for Reddy Fox or Old Man Coyote to dig him out if they wanted to. So there had been no need of a backdoor so far as they were concerned. No one ever had tried to dig him out there and he and Polly had lived with a delightful feeling of perfect security.

Very likely this was the reason that when he dug his new home up there by the dusty road he didn't think it necessary to dig a backdoor, although there wasn't anything under the sun to prevent any one digging him out who might want to. Johnny had got it in his head that because no one had tried to dig him out in the old home no one would try to dig him out of the new one. I suspect, too, that the fact that digging was harder work than it used to be for him had something to do with the matter. Anyway the fact is there was but one entrance to that new house, and any Chuck will tell you that to live that way is pure carelessness.

Then, too, Johnny hadn't stopped to think that while that old stone wall might be a protection in some ways, it was a decided cause of danger in another way. It gave enemies a chance to creep, unseen, right up behind him. But Johnny didn't think of this, where-

GOOD OLD RECIPES

WE LIKE to try recipes which our friends have cherished and handed down in the family for years. They may not appeal to all tastes, but it is a most commendable habit to cultivate a liking for all foods that are wholesome and well cooked.

Paprika Schnitzel.

Take small veal steaks—one for each serving—dip into flour and fry in butter after seasoning well. Mix one teaspoonful of paprika, one tablespoonful of flour, one and one-half cupfuls of sour cream and one-half cupful of stock. Strain over the meat and simmer fifteen minutes. Serve garnished with fried noodles.

Sauer Gedampftes Rinsfleisch.

Take five pounds of lean beef from the rump, rub with salt, pepper and a teaspoonful of ground cloves, with one-half teaspoonful of allspice. Put into a stone crock and cover with good cider vinegar, one-half of a thinly sliced lemon, one onion cut into pieces and one bay leaf. Leave three or four days, turning several times so that all parts of the meat are well seasoned. Now wipe dry and place in a scotch kettle, add a little fat, cover and cook slowly as for a pot roast, using the vinegar for the liquid instead of water; add very little at a time. This is well liked sliced cold, but is usually served hot.

Cheese Pie.

Mash one cupful of cottage cheese and add two tablespoonfuls each of cream and butter, one-half teaspoonful of salt, three-fourths of a cupful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of flour, one cupful of milk, one egg, one teaspoonful of vanilla or the juice and rind of a lemon. Beat well and bake in a pastry-lined plate in a moderate oven.

Salmon Salad.

Take one can of flaked salmon, add one-half cupful of freshly grated coconut, three small pickles finely chopped, add a small amount of mayonnaise to hold together well and serve in curled leaves of head lettuce, masked with a generous spoonful of mayonnaise garnished with chopped, green olives.

It is shown once again how careless folks who are set in their ways may become.

For a third thing, Johnny had got it in his head that no one really dared attack him now that he was so big and strong. This also made him careless. He didn't begin to watch out for Reddy Fox as he used to when he was younger.

All these things Reddy Fox had discovered, and he and Mrs. Reddy grinned as they made their plans.

Curls Are Order of Hour in the Newest Coiffures

Curls are again the "order of the hour for the woman of the moment," says Antoine, and he usually has the last word about the coiffure that the fashion spotlight picks out each season. Hair should be short, but not too short. His slogan is, "Fit your coiffure to your personality" and you will have distinction.

If your dressmaker has this same religion, you will evolve, when they have both finished with you, a creature fit for the pedestal about which human he-gods gather to give thanks and worship!

"The only thing that can cross a street in safety now-a-days," says mad-dog Ren, "are the painted traffic lines."

POISE CALLED FOR BY SOCIAL EDICT

Enthusiasm No Longer Takes Center of Stage.

Enthusiasm has lost prestige. It is no longer fashionable to be exuberant. Poise is the correct pose. Though you happen on an old school friend with whom you have shared doughnuts and beaus, you must not show your joy in meeting her after the lapse of years. You may shake hands if you think she expects it, if not, simply bow and talk about impersonal things. She must not be bored with reminiscences which lay claim to intimacy or betray her age!

Perhaps it is just as well that we are not all interested in the same things. What bores one person may be exceedingly interesting to another. We are not often bored by the things that we like. And we are bored by many things which we do not understand. If we know nothing whatever about baseball or football except that the one team is composed of nine while the other uses eleven players, we do not take particular interest in listening to games reported over the radio.

If we do not know the difference between a symphony and a popular song we do not attend symphony concerts, or turn on the station which specializes in symphony. If we do like such music, we are bored if our companion sleeps during the performance. If we have no children, we are not interested in Johnny's perfections and the condition of his adenoids and other childish troubles. If we possess good health, we are more than bored by the recital of the details of operations and such. If we care not for books, it is a bore to be confronted with constant references to the classics.

We are bored by the woman who recites her social triumphs and exploits her ego; who reels off her genealogy by the yard and explains her title to high position; on the other hand, we are bored by the person who looks blank, and responds to our own initiative by monosyllables. Some young people are bored by the mere presence of old people, and show it in their faces; others are interested in the viewpoint of experience and listen to the conversation of their elders with more interest than mere polite usage demands.—Indianapolis News.

DIDN'T LIKE THE JOB

One of the daughters of a large family was recently planning the details for her wedding, which was a formal church affair. She desired to have all her sisters take part in the ceremony, so little Joan, three years of age, was chosen ringbearer.

All went well until the evening before the ceremony, when all the participants went to the church for a rehearsal. Little Joan started bravely with the ring embedded in the heart of a crimson rose, but after the first dozen steps had been taken down the long aisle, she dropped the rose, ring and all and rushing to her mother's arms, cried: "I don't want to be a rain barrel!"—Indianapolis News.
