WIN FROM STANDISH IN 3 TO 1 GAME

Tawas City completed the first half of the league season without defeat when the Standish nine fell at their hands last Sunday by a 3 to 1 count. A large number of fans witnessed the contest, which was played at the athletic field here.

All the scoring of the game occurred in two innings. Standish marked its lone counter in the second when Lucas was hit by a pitched ball, went to second on Tremlin's sacrifice, and scored on B. Christie's double. Tawas City's turn came in the fourth. In that frame, Zollweg's single, coming with Noel and Siefeloff in scoring positions, accounted for two of the local's runs. Zollweg scored the third run a moment later when Swartz smashed out a double.

Standish had a three-hit edge over the locals in batting and had men on the sacks in seven of the nine frames. Faulty base running, however, spoiled a number of their scoring possibilities during the game. Good throws by Siefeloff and Noel and a nice running catch by Quick, coupled with the heads-up baseball played by the Tawas City infield, proved to be enough to overcome the locals' off day at bat.

Moeller, local hurler, and B. Christie, pitching for the visitors, worked on quite even terms throughout the contest, and made the game a fine pitchers' duel. Moeller yielded nine hits and Christie six, while the former whiffed six men to his opponent's four. Moeller walked two men and hit one, and Christie passed three batters.

Manager Henry Neumann takes his Tawas City boys to Gladwin next Sunday to start off the last half of the season.

HOTEL ROOMS NAMED BY COLOR; ONLY ONE IN UNITED STATES

The following story appeared in a recent number of the Flint Weekly Review:

Lakeside Tavern, Tawas City, is the only hotel in the United States using the color scheme arrangements in naming its rooms. A hotel in Indiana names its rooms after presidents and another in Wisconsin uses the names of the states. Other hotels use figures.

Its twenty rooms each have a special color scheme, with every color combination meeting the requisites of harmony, of daintiness and richness. The tint of the walls match the arrangements of other decorations including the carpets, curtains, beds and covers, with no two rooms alike. Decoration experts, interior decorators and hotel keepers from all parts of the country, claim it to be the most unique color arrangement they have ever seen.

Lakeside Tavern is located on U. S. 23, next to the Court House, directly across from the Tawas City tourist park. Its front door opens to the Bay while in the rear flows Tawas river, one of the snappiest fishing streams in the state. Perch, pike and bass may be caught here. Boating on either the river or the bay. Excellent soft white sand beach running directly in front of the Tavern, safe for children.

This should be your route into the north... it's the best... and most interesting of all Michigan country. The Lakeside Tavern invites you to come and spend the summer, drink out of the healthy mineral water from a flowing artesian well, 125 feet deep. One hour and fifteen minutes drive from Bay City... you can't miss the Tavern, its mammoth stone porch is a marker... come prepared to spend several weeks or even a night meet Mr. and Mrs. Barnes. You will want to stay and when you leave you'll want to go back.

"SERO" WINS FIRST PLACE IN SUNDAY'S RACE

Much interest was indicated Sunday in the revival of sailboat racing on Tawas Bay. The initial race was over a 14-mile course. Another race will be run next Sunday.

The "Sero," entered by Katherine Schmelzer of Saginaw, won first place. The time was one hour, 33 minutes and six seconds.

In second place was James Nisbet's "Gamble," skippered by John North. On two legs of the course, the "Gamble" kept alongside of the "Sero," but on the third the "Sero" took an easy lead.

Adelaide Symond's "Duster" was in third place. This boat was from Saginaw.

Tawas Bay is an ideal water for sail boating and there are many in the two cities who are keenly interested in this sport. This year is an opportune time to revive sail boat racing here and the regattas will undoubtedly create a widespread interest in this section of Michigan.

BIRD'S RIVOLI OPENS SUNDAY WITH CANTOR

The New Rivoli (formerly State Theatre), under the ownership of Herman A. Bird of Grand Rapids, will open Sunday evening with Eddie Cantor in "The Kid from Spain."

Out of the confusion of clattering hammers, raucous saws and heaps of incongruous looking material on the floors, a handsome auditorium room has assumed shape at the Rivoli theatre. Carpenters, electricians, painters and plumbers, working night and day since last Thursday, have assembled the jig-saw puzzle and Saturday night the last piece will be in its place.

The wall covering of the auditorium is a cream colored material, with special acoustical properties, arranged along classical lines and supporting large panels of beautiful figured silk. The stage has been lowered and rebuilt. A new box office has been constructed and the walls of the lobby decorated to conform with the interior of the theatre. New draperies have been hung throughout the two rooms.

The most important changes have been made in the projection room. Two new projectors of the very latest type have been installed with Motigraph Wide Range Sound equipment. The various machines are arranged and adjusted to give correct talking pictures.

Mr. Bird invites the people of the county to visit the Rivoli Sunday evening to hear and see the incomparable Eddie Cantor in "The Kid from Spain."

The following is the program for next week:

Sunday, Monday and Tuesday—Eddie Cantor in "The Kid from Spain."

Wednesday and Thursday—James Dunn and Sally Eilers in "Hold Me Tight."

Friday and Saturday—Slim Summerville and ZaSu Pitts in "Out All Night."

JERRY LOOKS FOR A PLACE TO BUILD

OF COURSE Jerry Muskrat was joking when he asked Peter Rabbit if he had come over to the Smiling Pool to help him build a house.

"Are you really going to build a new house?" asked Peter, his eyes wide with curiosity and interest.

"Of course," replied Jerry. "How do you suppose I would get along next winter without a house?"

"Use Your Thinker if You've Got One," Replied Jerry.

"I didn't know but you would use your castle in the bank," replied Peter.

"I could, but I don't want to," replied Jerry. "In the first place it is in the bank of the Laughing Brook, and that isn't where I want to be, I want to be down here in the Smiling Pool.

Of course Peter was all interest at once. "Where are you going to build it?" he asked.

"I don't know. Where would you build it if you were in my place?" asked Jerry.

"Why don't you build it right where the old one was?" inquired Peter.

"Use your thinker if you've got one," replied Jerry. "What happened to my old house?"

Peter remembered the spring flood and how the water had risen until it ran so swiftly that it had swept Jerry's house away in pieces, leaving Jerry homeless.

"I won't build at all if I can't find any but the old places," said Jerry.

"Perhaps there won't be any flood next year," said Peter hopefully.

"And perhaps there will," retorted Jerry. "Perhaps is a mighty uncertain word and I don't want any perches in my new house.

Jerry dived from the Big Rock into the Smiling Pool and Peter could see his little black head in the moonlight as he swam for the opposite shore.

Wailing Room Is Popular in This Movie Theater

Detroit.—The Hollywood theater here reported a record crowd in its "wailing room" during the showing of a war film recently.

Sixteen mothers repaired to the room to quiet 16 wailing babies. But they were not deprived the pleasure of listening to and watching the picture.

The wailing room, referred to in more dignified terms as the "sound-proof nursery," is located in the rear of the theater.

The management of the theater reports the room is always occupied during picture presentation hours.

ACCIDENTAL DEATHS SHOW DROP IN 1932

Motor Vehicles Still Lead as Mortality Cause.

Chicago.—Accidental deaths numbered 88,000 in the United States during 1932, thus registering a decline for the second successive year, according to "Accident Facts," just issued by the National Safety Council.

Motor vehicles still lead as a cause of accidental death. Automobile accidents took 29,500 lives last year, home accidents claimed 28,000, public fatalities (not involving motor vehicles) 18,000, and occupational accidents 15,000.

There were approximately 8,400,000 occupational injuries last year and the wage loss, medical expense and overhead insurance cost involved in injuries and deaths totaled $2,000,000,000.

Fewer Motor Accidents. Last year witnessed the first drop ever recorded in motor vehicle accidents.

The total of 29,500 deaths may be contrasted with 33,675 in 1931, 32,929 in 1930, 31,215 in 1929 and 27,996 in 1928.

The percentage decrease last year was about double the decrease in motor vehicle travel as reflected in gasoline consumption.

About 44 per cent of all traffic accident fatalities involved pedestrians.

In addition to the 29,500 motor vehicle deaths last year there were approximately 1,035,000 non-fatal injuries of which about 85,000 were permanent in character.

General 10% Reduction Made in '32 State Costs

Chicago.—Costs of the majority of state governments were reduced by approximately 10 per cent in 1932, according to a survey by the national organization to reduce public expenditures.

In seventeen scattered states, whose total operating expense was $907,324,886 in 1932, the organization now says there is reason to believe the combined expenditures will be $816,589,536, or a drop of almost $100,000,000.

Three of the seventeen states considered, however, show their expenses had risen in the last six months. They are Delaware, Pennsylvania and New Hampshire.

Both Delaware and Pennsylvania expect tremendous cuts in expenses for the coming year, members of the reduction body said. Delaware will reduce expenditures by $5,000,000, while Pennsylvania's costs are expected to drop more than $27,000,000.

States included in the survey are Arizona, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Mexico, New York, North Dakota, Ohio and Pennsylvania.

Three Wives to Stage Heated Contest for Wealth.

Philadelphia.—The three women who at one time or another were wives of John R. Fell, noted sportsman, will stage a heated contest for the $3,000,000 estate he left when he died of a mysterious knife thrust in Java last February.

The latest to join in the battle is his second wife, Mrs. Mildred Santry Fell, who claims to have documents proving her entitled to the bulk of the estate.

The third wife, Martha Ederton Fell, formerly of the Follies, seeks more than an income of $15,000 a year from a trust fund, while Mrs. Ogden R. Mills, who was Fell's first wife, seeks to keep the bulk of the estate for her three children.

Fell's will, filed April 25 in Norristown, left Mrs. Fell only the income from a trust fund estimated at approximately $110,000, while the rest of his $3,000,000 estate went to three children by his first marriage.

Apparently bent on fighting for a larger share of the estate, the former Martha Ederton has engaged Attorney Joseph Sharsin to represent her.

The widow, in striving for a more equal division, will lay claim to the $50,000 worth of jewelry and the lavish household furnishings of her husband, it is understood.

Fell, a grandson of the late Anthony Drexel, was married secretly to Martha Ederton, show-girl and dress-shop owner, in January, 1932. She was touring the East Indies with him when he met death, which authorities termed accidental.

Mule Deer Become Tame Under Care of Rancher

Lindsay, Calif.—J. W. Stiner, Cedarville rancher, claims credit for doing what old-time livestock men said was impossible.

He has a herd of domesticated, ranch-reared mule deer, apparently contented on his place.

He started the herd, which now numbers nine, several years ago, when one of his cowboys found a deserted and starving fawn.

In the original and more famous French revolution, marked by the Reign of Terror, 2,500 Royalists were guillotined over a period of 15 months. In the revolution following the surrender at Sedan, in the Franco-Prussian war, 1871, 20,000 Royalists were executed in a single week.

Strain the mint from the sirup and garnish with a fresh sprig of mint when serving.

Do YOU Know—

THE AMERICAN FLAG AS ADOPTED BY CONGRESS JUNE 14 1777. That the flag as a military ensign, probably had its origin from the field standards of the Romans and other ancient nations who fastened a square piece of cloth to a cross-bar at the end of a spear. It may also be traced to the whip and its lash symbolizing the authority of a leader over men.

Bolingworth's Proxy

By R. T. M. SCOTT

©. by McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service.

BOLINGWORTH'S proxy was a valuable document. It would be worth millions at a board meeting in New York the following day. Jeffries and Sanderson motored out to Bolingworth's country house on Long Island to argue against each other for the document but, of course, they did not travel in the same car. Fat, old Jeffries took Aurelius Smith along with him to safeguard so valuable a paper, if he obtained it, up to the minute that it would be voted on the next day.

"I'll get the paper and you will keep it," rumbled and chuckled old Jeffries. "Together we'll lick Sanderson and his dirty crew."

As the two entered the big, country house, a feminine shriek rang out and Smith's long legs carried him up a flight of stairs without their customary indulgence. In a back room he found a pretty maid with her foot caught in a steel-jawed rat trap. He wrenched the jaws apart.

The business meeting occurred in the music room on the ground floor. It had to be short as Bolingworth was leaving by plane within an hour on his way to California. There was nothing immediately for Smith to do. He shook hands with Bolingworth and Sanderson and got their names mixed up as deaf people do—or stupid people, or people too lazy to think much. Few people could believe that so indolent a man was observing everything with almost photographic accuracy.

While the three men gathered around a little table, Smith wandered to the piano and ran his fingers over the keys, but stopped quickly so as not to disturb the conference. He stretched himself in a chair and smoked while he listened to the rumble and chuckle of his employer in argument against the rasping harshness of Sanderson's voice.

At the end of an hour Bolingworth signed a paper and Jeffries had won. Bolingworth had left the house at once after ordering luncheon to be served to his three guests. The proxy lay upon the table beside a heavy blue envelope. Jeffries inserted it in the envelope and sealed the flap.

At that moment the roar of a plane sounded outside. Jeffries dropped the envelope on the table and turned toward the window. Sanderson looked away also. The roar of the plane became louder and all three men walked to the window near the piano. Smith and Jeffries approached the window in advance of Sanderson. When they returned to the table the envelope was gone. There were other blue envelopes in a rack on the table, but they were all empty.

Sanderson laughed vindictively and offered to let Jeffries search him. The offer was accepted and Jeffries found nothing, while Smith wandered to the piano and again ran his fingers over the keys while he frowned as if trying to think. Suddenly he turned around on the piano bench as if an idea had at least been born, and said that he ought to make certain that the maid had put antiseptic on her foot so that she would not be poisoned by the rat trap.

"I didn't think I brought you out here to fiddle with maids' ankles," grumbled Jeffries. "Bolingworth is in the air and we can't get another proxy. We're dished."

Smith shrugged his shoulders and rang the bell. The butler summoned the injured maid who limped to Smith and talked in low tones with him while she secretly received a ten-dollar bill. The maid limped out of the room and shortly after she returned, Smith joined Jeffries and Sanderson in the hall where Jeffries had ordered his car.

"I can't understand you, Smith," said Jeffries, as the two walked toward the front door, leaving Sanderson behind.

"Have a little patience," returned Smith softly and opened the door to tell Jeffries' chauffeur to drive away and come back in half an hour.

Jeffries looked his astonishment as the car roared off. The two stood for a few minutes in the doorway, Jeffries too surprised to speak. Suddenly a yell sounded inside the house.

"Come on!" called Smith as he dashed back to the music room. Beside the piano stood Sanderson with the rat trap dangling from his hand while he cursed. Blood dripped from his hand to the floor.

"I knew that he must have taken the envelope from the table," explained Smith, "but I did not know where he had put it until I touched the piano keys the second time and found that three strings were dead."

Sanderson, desperately helpless, let Smith pry the trap from his hand.

"The maid brought me the trap," continued Smith, "and I placed it on the strings, under which he had slipped the envelope, and covered it with my handkerchief."

Then it was that Sanderson struggled to turn defeat into victory. He reached out into the piano and snatched out the blue envelope. With an exclamation of rage he painfully used his injured hand to tear the envelope into tiny pieces.

Jeffries started toward the maddened man but Smith pulled him back. "I substituted an empty envelope when the two of you first turned toward the window," he said. "The proxy has been in my pocket all the time."

Howe About:

Better Amusements Our Failing Minds

Bernard Shaw

By ED HOWE

ALTHOUGH it is said abroad Americans are the greatest idlers in the world, it has finally been agreed among ourselves we have been working too long hours, and that in future we must play more.

And now the question comes up for discussion: What shall we do with our additional idle time? How find new enjoyments in our shiftlessness?

Why not try some new amusements? Why not rub up our knowledge of finance, and less frequently become the victims of sharpers? Why not athletic clubs to chase outlaws, now a real menace to our homes? And speaking of homes again, why not beautify them more, and add comforts heretofore lacking? Why not clubs of citizens to improve our public affairs? Half of us are dumb as to the real value of print: why not read more, and with greater discretion? Why not pay more attention to the joys and benefits of good health? Most of us gobble our food like pigs, and, lacking their digestion and shorter years, have become so quarrelsome, inefficient and dumpy that one-quarter of the population is now howling for public relief, with most of the rest of us looking on shamelessly, and thinking it may be a good idea for everybody.

Do races inevitably run out? Is it hopeless to struggle for their improvement and continuance?

It seems to me I am able to note a sad deterioration since the Civil war. Compare congress now with congress of 75 years ago, and how shabbily 1933 comes off! There isn't a man of ability in the present congress (or cabinet, or Supreme court) to compare with dozens who might be named within ten years of 1858.

The deterioration of races is interlectual. We are healthier now than ever before; we have improved our lamps and our buggies, but have shamefully neglected our minds.

It may well occur to every man that he is doing well enough physically, but that his mind is failing.

Bernard Shaw has his opinion of mankind, and expresses it publicly, instead of privately, as most other men do. For this he is cordially hated, although everybody knows his opinions of humanity are sound; at least, sounder than the opinions of other writing men.

My relations with Bernard Shaw are excellent. I do not know him, or wish to know him, and never write him. I hear he is polite enough to those who have good reason to call on or write him.

During a recent journey at sea Shaw went on deck early one morning, and found an old man leaning indifferently over the rail.

"How does it come," Shaw asked, "that you are the only man on the ship who has not annoyed me?"

"Because I do not want to know you, or talk to you," the man answered.

"Ever hear of me?" Shaw asked again.

"I know all about you," the man replied. "I have read nearly everything said about you, or you have written. You are one of my heroes. I admire you because of your impudence in saying what you think of everybody and everything. I think the same things and am afraid to say them. You save me the trouble. I beg you to proceed with your walk."

Silerus said in his memoirs: "In all my life I have known but one really intelligent and fair woman." . . . (As every other man will probably say he has known at least one such woman, there must be a good many of them.)

Thousands have known the true philosophy of life. And been so whipped by mob men that now no one dares be sensible. . . . All men are more intelligent than their actions indicate. Foolish quarrelling, and foolish, continuous quarrelling about it, have made fools of us all.

Considering the rough manner in which all men are forever trying to muss up all women, some women look very well.

It is well known that most men of discernment have poor opinion of the people en masse, because of their low average in intelligence, morals, politeness and fairness; because of their insistence on ruining every civilization the better men have attempted.

It is often said the English have no sense of humor. . . . An Englishman relates that a child on first seeing a rainbow, asked: "What is it? Advertising?" . . . Another Englishman is reported as saying: "The only time a horse scares nowadays is when he sees another horse." . . . As a contrast I quote two of the most popular American funny men: Eddie Cantor: "He hasn't an enemy in the world, but all his friends hate him." . . . Ed. Wynn: "A bachelor is a man who never made the same mistake once." . . . Of course all this is piffle, but perhaps it is less tiresome than the serious portions of the newspapers.

How often the bores write! How rarely the angels, with good news, take pen in hand!

Photography Is Hobby of Monarch of Siam

Operates a Movie Camera With Skill of Expert.

Washington.—Exotic, remote Bangkok, capital of Siam, where, for the second time in a year, a military coup without casualties has given the king an entirely new governmental personnel, continues its march toward westernization. One of the latest innovations is a palatial cinema hall which incorporates all the details of an up-to-date American motion-picture theater, says a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

King Prajadhipok is responsible for this new $75,000 building in the capital city, having secured part of the inspiration for its construction during his visit to motion-picture companies when he was in the United States two years ago.

"This theater, one of the most modern in the Far East," continues the bulletin, "is a welcome improvement to Bangkok residents who are interested in celluloid drama. All of the older cinema houses have been hopelessly inadequate since the advent of sound pictures, because most of them are barn-like structures, built largely of corrugated iron and possessing exceedingly poor acoustics."

"Besides directing the affairs of state in the country of nearly 12,000,000 people, the king finds time to operate several American-made amateur motion-picture cameras with almost professional skill. Even the queen, Rambairani, as well as many other members of the royal family and persons in official circles, are enthusiastic photographers in both still and motion pictures.

Filed by Royalty.

"Every year at its exhibition of paintings and photographs, the Siam Art club, which enjoys the patronage of the king, usually has a number of entries in superb monochrome and color work produced by one of the king's half-brothers. An amateur motion-picture club, of which the king is a member, was organized about four years ago. And on several occasions the club members have been invited to the royal palace to witness the showing of 'movies' made by their majesties.

"Siam is one of the best fields in the world for persons with the hobby of making pictures. The architectural features and the wealth of color in Bangkok's several hundred temples present inexhaustible opportunities for the artist, whatever his medium of expression may be. Here, certainly, the word 'unique' has significance, for nowhere else in the world does one find such a variety of mosaics in pearl, tile, and bits of glass; multiple roofs with dragon heads terminating their corners; or such flower-bedecked prachedis (or votive spires) as in Siam.

Fascinating Subjects.

"The many canals teeming with boat traffic, the fields where the country grows rice that places her third among rice-exporting nations, and the northern hills in which the valuable teak trees are cut and then hauled by elephants to streams to be floated to Bangkok, are fascinating subjects for a camera lens.

"Siam's religious ceremonies and state processions are many and varied, possessing the chromatic splendor of rich oriental costumes. Recently one of the princes gave a striking private showing of thousands of feet of amateur natural color film that he had made of the royal barge procession of the hundreds of fantastic boats used in bearing the king and his followers on a visit to present gifts to the Buddhist temples; the state processions by palanquin; and the annual round of ancient ceremonies. Not only had the pictures been taken by the prince, but the films were processed in his own laboratory."

Owner Defeats Dogs With Vacuum Cleaner

Monroe, La.—R. D. Swayze, city commissioner, was troubled last to death with fleas—on his dog, Peggy, and her pups.

Various remedies for extermination were tried, with negative results. Then the commissioner got a brilliant idea. He got out the family vacuum cleaner, gave the dogs the once over, and in five minutes every flea had been corralled for extermination.

Swayze wants all dog owners to know of his method.

Here's Jesse Owens of Cleveland, Ohio, East Technical high school track star, finishing a spin in much the same manner as he finished the 220 yards in the record time of 20.7 at the recent twentieth annual University of Chicago interscholastic track and field championship meet at Soldier field, Chicago. Owens also set a new record of 24 feet 9 1/2 inches for the broad jump, and equaled the world record of 9.4 seconds in the 100-yard dash.

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

The homemaker does not have to be penurious to practice little economies which mean pennies in the purse. She merely extends her purchasing power to other fields of necessity or pleasure. To the competent housewife, the thriftiness which brings about this desirable state of affairs is, in itself, a satisfaction. One source of such saving is found in careful management of household linens.

The making of six single sheets from four large ones means a decided saving without undue work. Buy the widest sheets, and remember that the 103 inch length gives best satisfaction, as there is allowance for tucking in at the foot of the bed. Divide the width of each sheet into thirds. Tear off one-third of each sheet. On each sheet of two-thirds the original size, finish the one raw edge with a fine rolled hem. You will have four of these excellent narrow sheets.

A Mountain Top Grave

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

Mount Mitchell in North Carolina is the highest point east of the Rocky mountains. At the very top of this mountain is a grave enclosed in an iron railing. Upon the grave is a brass plate which bears the following inscription: "Here lies, in the hope of the Blessed Resurrection, the body of Reverend E. Mitchell, D. D., who, after being for 39 years a Professor in the University of North Carolina, lost his life in the scientific exploration of this mountain in the 64th year of his age, June 27th, 1857."

The consecration to service whether as minister, professor or explorer, evidently made a profound impression upon the people of his day. Dedication of self to service in a chosen field has won recognition expressed in various forms. Many institutions bear the name of Pasteur, whose cure for hydrophobia brought a great blessing to humanity. The name of Lister, an English surgeon, has been signally honored for his discovery of antiseptics in surgery. The world owes a great debt of gratitude to Wilfred T. Grenfell, the medical missionary, for his wonderful work in Labrador. The self-sacrificing service of men and women who gave their lives for a great cause is today memorialized by chairs in universities and colleges all over our land. To many others various types of memorials have been erected.

A journey to the top of Mount Mitchell convinces one of the difficult task the early explorers must have had before the trails were made which now serve as a safe guide to the interested mountain climber. It is a long journey to the top, about 13 miles from the base. Ascent is permitted only up to the noon hour and descent is allowed after 2:30 p. m. The one way road is thus kept reasonably safe for travel. From the top of the mountain one can view for miles the beauties of North Carolina. (The writer had this privilege, wearing an overcoat, while elsewhere it was the hottest days in June.)

It is said that when natives could no longer carry the body of Doctor Mitchell by wagon up the steep mountain side, they transported the body by hand to the last resting place at the mountain summit:

"So when a good man dies, for years beyond his ken, The good he leaves behind him lies, Upon the paths of men."

The residents of the county enjoyed an unusual treat Monday when President Roosevelt and four members of his cabinet spoke over the radio to the C. C. C. men.

A large and enthusiastic crowd attended the sail boat races last Sunday.

Iosco county is fortunate to have so many employed on the roads.

The weeds seemed to do quite well in spite of the drought.

SYNOPSIS

With his yacht, the Intrepid, abandoned by its crew, Felix Horton, millionaire, with his mother, his daughter, Nan, and Roy Stuart, puts into Squaw Harbor, Alaska, to recruit. Failing to secure sailors, Horton engages a bunch of nondescript stragglers there. A gigantic pole, Sandomar, Intrepid's skipper, is an old friend of Eric Ericsson, unemployed, but holding master's papers, and he engages to sail as chief officer. Horton is seeking uncharted islands. Nan and Eric indulge in a moonlight flirtation, which brings them both to the threshold of interest in each other, if not of love. The Intrepid is wrecked by one of Sandomar's crew. Eric takes command of a small boat, with Horton, his mother and daughter, Nan's maid Marie, and Roy Stuart. Unable to help, they watch Sandomar kill Captain Waymire and leave the ship with his crew. Waymire has thrown Eric a revolver. From one of the Aleuts, ashore, speaking a little English, Eric learns there is no communication with the outside world. Fireheart, priestess of the island, descended from a white man in the remote past, also knowing a little English, welcomes the castaways. Sandomar, backed by his crew, declares there shall be no law on the island, but Eric, having the only gun, crows them for the time, declaring he is the law. He lays out work for all, whites and Indians alike.

"Half again as much dried salmon, smoked meat, and bread-rot must be put aside for winter," Eric told them gravely. "Half again as many parkas and mukluks must be made. It means from sun to sun in good weather."

He paused, his gaze sweeping the crowd. Some of Sandomar's men looked woe-begone. Law and labor, their special abominations, were clutching them again.

Eric glanced at Nan, but some devil of pride glazed her gray eyes and set her lips in a grim line. "What would your highness have us do?" she asked bitterly. "Chew skins like the Eskimos?"

It must be all or nothing, life or death. "Something just as bad, perhaps. Yet I'm hoping that you, three white women can be spared the worst jobs, simply because they'd seem so much harder to you than to the squaws."

All work, both by brown and white, was to be under Eric's general direction. If disputes arose, he would settle them. He laid down the proposition that the soil belonged to the Aleuts, that the conquerors could exploit them, make them labor, rule them, but they must not starve them, steal from them, or shed their blood.

The sailors could have only Aleut girls of proper age who gave themselves willingly; they could share the hunters' wives, an old Aleut custom, only with the husbands' consent. If any man broke this law, or committed murder, or mutinied against the captain, he would be killed.

"There can be no appeal," Eric said in a low, grave tone. "There'll be no chance for a second offense. The lives of the whole party are at stake. I myself will sentence the law-breaker and carry out the execution."

Nan's look was sullen—all her life she had given commands, never obeyed them, and discipline was a word she did not know—but why did her heart leap up? Her gaze was dark with resentment, yet it could not turn from the viking form in the blowing mist, the bright erect head, the grave face for the moment alight with the flame of idealism, the eyes blue with the essence of the eternal sea. She almost hated him for dominating her, and despised herself for the thrill of it.

On Chechquo's advice, Eric divided his forces into three parties, the first to kill sea-lions hauling out to breed on the far beach, the second to gather eggs and net birds on the rotting, treacherous shale of the bluffs, and the third, mostly squaws, to spear, clean and dry a small early school of salmon that had escaped the half-built fish-trap.

Among the squaws at the drying rack was a lean little woman with lively motions. It was Mother Horton. With Marie's help she was cutting into strips and hanging the fish fast as her "slimer" could supply them.

The "slimer" had slender, once-lovely hands. Eric watched them a full minute before she looked up. It was Nan, and she had deliberately chosen the hardest, most disagreeable chore in sight. She was kneeling on the creek bank, cleaning fish. Her hands and face were blood-stained, and she was sobbing, half in fury, half in pain.

She saw him and sprang to her feet. With the sleeve of her parka she wiped her face of its stain and tears. "I wasn't crying," she told him angrily. "I got sand in my eyes."

"You'd better stop till you get it out. . . . And I didn't mean you to do this, anyway."

"I'm not doing it for you." Her drawn pale cheeks began to darken. "If you think I am, you're making the biggest mistake of your life. I'd have starved before I let you force me to do anything."

"It wouldn't have been for me, anyway," Eric said gravely. "It would be for Law, which I'm trying to represent. I have nothing to win or lose."

She whirled on him in swift fury, letting go everything. "That isn't what you told Sandomar last night. Would you mind saying which girl you referred to? I don't think it was Marie. You must know she's engaged to Wilcox—but perhaps that wouldn't make any difference to you."

"I'm Not Doing It for You." Her Drawn Pale Cheeks Began to Darken.

say the same to Marie and Wilcox. It would save a lot of trouble, make you two girls far safer."

"I'm not in love with Roy—yet. Nor with anyone."

"Try to fall soon, won't you? And now we understand each other, let me ask you not to clean any more fish. The squaws don't mind doing it; they'd rather sit down to a nice messy job like this than to stand out in the cold water. Take a spear and try your hand, beside your father. It's exciting and the sand won't get in your eyes."

Eric turned quickly, he could not wear the mask much longer. Pride! It was his own private devil. "For pride's sake he had cast away the most fair and starlit hope that had ever touched his heart."

That night he built a barricade for Nan's turf-house, and moved an old lone squaw so he could have a small hut to himself. It was centrally located, and by knocking out a block of turf, he made a window to hear Nan's or Horton's softest call. The oaken door was off a ship cubby, cast up by the sea long ago, and its bolt of stone could not be forced without giving an alarm. Here he, too, could sleep secure from a surprise attack.

Tired from the day's toil, Sandomar's gang went to their hut at sundown. Though they might plot and threaten, they would make no trouble tonight.

He wakened with a heavy heart just before dawn. What if he did win this island war with the elemental powers? For the others—life, freedom, the pursuit of happiness; for him, what gain? Only a succession of other wars with wave, storm, and crag—continued bondage to his idealism—the search for the distant light-house that ever faded from his sight. Love? He had denied it. No girl like Nan would ever cross his trail again; she was the one girl whose steel could strike fire from the flint of his soul, whose greatness called to his own greatness since the dawn of time; and he had been afraid to fight for her!

It must be that his viking blood had paled in his veins, that the high place in the world he had willed to win was a fool's dream; or otherwise he would have his way to Valhalla for a mate like Nan!

Suddenly he was called from his thoughts by a subdued sound outside his window. Save for the stillness of the hour he would never have caught it, and there was no earthly reason why his heart should fling against his side. . . . But there was an unearthly reason. In the deep of his sailor soul he knew that this was destiny. All was not lost—he was to be given another chance.

A dim white figure stole by his hut and vanished in the dusk of the creek-bank.

Slipping on his parka and mukluks, Eric quietly followed, but he was withing fifty yards of the stream before he saw the ghost again. It looked almost too bulky for a river spirit, but presently it moved weirdly, lost all animate shape, and then seemed to separate into two entities. One of these, and Eric knew it was a discarded parka, fell and collapsed on the ground; and the other stood for a few brief, breathless seconds in silhouette against the dark water.

Eric did not turn and creep away. By Thor and Woden, such folly was behind him! He waited, breathless, his presence unguessed, and a soft voice came stealing through the dark.

It was Nan's, and she was addressing pagan gods. "I am not asleep," she said bravely, as the icy flood almost took her breath. "I am not dead. I am alive."

A moment later she had slipped on her warm fur parka and was hurrying back to the turfhouse. She did not see Eric till she was almost upon him, then she flung back with a gasp. He did not speak, but she recognized him instantly.

"Spying?" she whispered, bitterly. "Yes, and glad of it."

"I thought at least you were a gentleman."

"I didn't come any nearer than this, although I wanted to. I don't ask you to forgive me—I'd do it again. But I do want your forgiveness for the lie I told you today."

"What lie? I'm cold, you can tell me in the morning."

"I want to tell you now. It was the blackest, biggest lie of my life. I said that I didn't mean my declaration to Sandomar. I did mean it, from the bottom of my heart. I am in the field. I want you for my own."

Nan stood very still. Her eyes were long black shadows in the white blur of her face; but he could not guess their message. "If it was a lie, what you said today, I'm glad you took it back," she told him quietly, at last. "I think you are a gentleman—after all."

"And you are loveliest, the bravest girl I've ever known. I knew it when I saw you by the salmon pool—but I tried to dismiss you as unattainable. But I'm going to fight for you now. I'm going to try to win you away from Roy. You are my mate—and if I lose you, I lose all the world."

Nan gazed long and dreamily across the water to the glimmer of dawn. A child's sweet look was on her lifted face. "I'm glad you want me," she told Eric at last. "It almost makes me think that there is something to me after all—not just a spoiled young helleon—but Eric, it will be a hard row. The odds are all against you, you see that. This island adventure is only an interlude in our lives. Some day we'll go back . . . and you must stay by the sea and the snow. Besides, you're competing against a dominant man, a man who always takes what he wants, and who's got a head start."

Eric's heart only leaped the stronger. "But you are mine for the winning?"

"For the winning, yes. I take back what I told you today, there's no insurmountable barrier. I'm going in now, Eric. I'm not cold any more, but I'll see you in daylight."

"It's daylight now," Eric's low voice had a jubilation she had never heard. He looked out to the grim headlands, just emerging from the dark. "It's the most beautiful summer day I ever saw."

She smiled, and stole away. Exultant, Eric walked down the beach, the seawind in his hair, the glimmer of a new dawn in his eyes.

In the next day's toil, Eric had cause to remember Nan's expressions of Roy. This deep-thinking cynic was no fish out of water, but a power to be reckoned with, a dangerous rival for Eric's leadership. He had found his bearings and was coolly setting out to master his environment. If he were so strong here, how could Eric compete with him on his own ground?

Roy had called Eric's attention to a black bog behind the bluffs. "It's a low grade of peat," he said, "I've seen the like in Ireland. Get the men to cut out squares and set 'em out to drain. In a few weeks we'll have a new fuel and can divert considerable quantities of animal fat into the larders."

Eric rejoiced, without a trace of jealousy. This might spell the difference between plenty and famine in the grim months to come. But the gulf between the leaders remained unbridged.

As they were helping the hunters complete their fish trap, ready for the salmon run, Roy proposed that it be extended so that it cover the channel. "Then we'll get every fish that comes up. As it is, at least a fourth will get by."

"We've got to spare enough for breeding stock," Eric answered. "Salmon come back to the stream where they spawn. If we catch them all, four years from now there won't be a fish to be seen."

It was another clash of viewpoints. "Do you expect to be here four years from now? Thank God, I don't! Let's take the cash and let the credit go."

But Eric stood by his guns. "It's not our island. We're invaders, but we're not Huns, to destroy as we go. Moreover, it's only too possible that we may be standing on this very bank not only four, but ten years from now, waiting for the salmon run, and we don't want it to fail!" He turned to Chechquo, his bailiff. "Tell the men to build the trap as usual."

"I don't understand your point of view," Roy said. "Surely you aren't trying to pander to the natives?"

"I was pandering only to my sense of right and wrong," was the grave answer. "That may seem laughable to you, but it's a fact. And it's true I'm trying not to antagonize the natives any more than I can help." (TO BE CONTINUED.)

ANGKOR—A Mystery

A Cambodian Temple Dancer.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

FAR up in the jungles of French Indo-China, some 300 miles from the doorstep of the world as measured in distance, a thousand years in the past as measured in time, and aeons back in the unknown as measured in history, is Angkor, one of the most puzzling works ever contrived by the hand of man.

Temple and town and network of dim and forgotten shrines, it represents a culture that must have been far in advance of anything coeval with it and a power that must have been virtually irresistible even in Asia, where men at arms were plentiful and warfare was a favored business.

But the culture died and the men who had built it disappeared, and for hundreds of years the forests of banyan and bamboo hid from the eyes and memory of the world what had been a metropolis of a million inhabitants.

Two generations ago a French naturalist broke through the wall of jungle in a search for specimens of tropical life and came upon a spectacle such as the slaves of the lamp might have contrived for Aladdin. Before him, in the quivering silence, rose the five towers of a vast step pyramid, a stone tapestry representative of an art and architecture like nothing else within the ken of man.

A moated wall surrounded it and a cloistered gate opened upon a causeway that led to its rocketing staircases; and, for all that jungle growths were close about its lower stage and odd clumps of verdure grew from its arched roofs, it seemed that life had been in its shadowy galleries only a moment ago. The temple was virtually intact.

Still an Unsolved Puzzle.

It is now more than seventy years since the stunned eyes of Mouhot, the naturalist, looked upon the magnificent heights of Angkor—more than seventy years since the greatest detective story in the history of the world was laid out with its million stony clues to puzzle the savants. Today, with its principal remains classified and ticketed, its inscriptions translated, and its monuments lifted out of the jungle, Angkor is still the vast and silent mystery that it was in the beginning.

But the monuments are there and no mere shutting of the eyes will dispose of them: Angkor Thom, a walled city within whose metropolitan area at one time must have lived more people than were to be found in the Rome of Augustus or the Carthage of Hannibal; and Angkor Vat, supreme architectural effort of this strange culture, not only the most grandiose temple of the group, but one of the most stupendous undertakings begun by man since the cornerstone was laid for the Tower of Babel.

About Angkor Thom are scattering remains of earlier edifices, and far in the jungle are capital cities built and abandoned with that prodigality which seems always to have been characteristic of oriental monarchs. Traces of this lost civilization have been found wherever a lean tributary of the Mekong river branches out toward the north.

Once a Splendid Metropolis.

Here at Angkor was the finest metropolis in Asia—a town whose swarming splendor is permanently embossed in temple wall and tower and terrace. It was the perfect expression of a race of conquerors and must have been as wealthy as Babylon under Nebuchadnezzar. And yet, for some cause which an archeologist can only guess, the populace walked out of it and never came back. The jungle moved in and engulfed it for five centuries.

There begins and there ends the mystery of Angkor.

Little enough is known about the origins of the race that evolved the culture which centered in Angkor Thom. The people were called the Khmers and were either of Hindu extraction or the diligent pupils of Hindu teachers. That about sums up the available information concerning them. There is mention in Chinese records of a kingdom under Hindu direction if not domination, in Indo-China as early as the year 238 of our era, and there is evidence that the Khmers were still flourishing in the Thirteenth century; but, strangely enough, their civilization, wonderful as it was, made little impress on the neighboring nations.

It seems impossible that a culture such as that which built the pyramid of Angkor Vat could have perished without a word of its demise reaching the civilizations with which it must have been in constant touch. But such appears to have been the case.

Two generations ago the modern world had never heard of Angkor. A dense forest spread across Indo-China. French trade was confined to the coast, and there was no commercial traffic on the Mekong river north of Pnompenh for the reason that Cambodia's resources, the same resources that had given this region a possible identity as the Golden Chersonese of legend, were as deeply carpeted with useless verdure as the hidden cities of the north.

Pnompenh, the capital of the Kingdom of Cambodia (western portion of the Indo-Chinese peninsula), was a village of nipa thatch and bamboo, a comic-opera metropolis, where a despot ruled in fear of his life over a semi-savage, if not completely savage, people.

Early Stories Not Believed.

Saigon, the present capital of French enterprise in the East, was just rising from the marshes south of Annam. What might lie hidden in the masses of foliage to the north no one knew. The world had heard, but had forgotten, the tales of Portuguese missionaries of the Seventeenth century, that marvelous cities with leaping towers stood dead among the trees of the Tonle Sap. Wherever there is unexplored territory one is certain to hear of such cities, and the world had grown too wise and too skeptical to pay attention to such nonsense.

True, there had been a Chinese traveler, Tchou-Ta-Quan by name, who had written what purported to be a chronicle of his service as ambassador to some kingdom in the Mekong valley. It was conceded that the writer might actually have had some such service, but it was obvious that in his description of the marvels he had found in his dubious kingdom he was merely a pleasant liar.

What the Ruins Are Like.

The name Angkor has been somewhat loosely applied to the ruins. There are two principal groups: Angkor Vat, the temple and Angkor Thom, the town. The word Angkor is believed to be a native corruption of the Sanskrit Nagara, meaning capital. Thom is a local word, meaning great or grand. Vat is an appellation designating a temple and is generally associated with Buddhism.

Angkor Vat was the last important work of the Khmers and remains today the finest expression of their peculiar art. Built as a shrine to Hindu gods and apparently devoted to Vishnu, Siva, and Buddha in turn, it has departed a long distance from the parent architecture of the Hindus. It is a step pyramid which rises through three cloistered stages to a group of five minaret-like towers, of which the one in the center is dominant.

The temple area is about a quarter of a mile square and is surrounded by a moat and a high wall. A causeway crosses the moat and strikes through a gate pierced in the middle of the western wall, whence it leads to the portico of the first stage. The lower galleries measure nearly 250 feet on a side. The facade is five times as wide as that of Notre Dame of Paris.

About two-thirds of a mile to the north of the temple one comes to the wall of Angkor Thom, where the seven-headed Naga, legendary deity of the Khmers, is upheld in the arms of stone giants to form a balustrade for the entering causeway. Access to the old capital is through a tower, from each of the faces of which a head of Siva the Destroyer leers down upon the world.

It is one of the most pretentious capitals of antiquity. Its walls, most of which are intact today, measure nearly two miles on a side, and it contained a temple, the Bayon, which was almost as large as Angkor Vat.

OUR CHILDREN

By ANGELO PATRI

A PLACE OF REFUGE

IN THE ancient days there was a place of refuge provided for the thoughtless sinner. Here he might dwell with safety until he could be judged by the congregation. No hand might touch him while he lived within the walls of his city of refuge.

That seems to me to be a fine idea. In this world of storm and stress there ought to be a place of refuge for everyone of us so that we might retire to meditate upon our errors and search our souls for ways of peace, amendment, and future strength. This is especially necessary for the children. Their emotions are unguarded. They frequently overflow the dams and cause sorrow and distress. At such times the place of refuge is a blessed place for the child and those about him.

When a little one loses control of himself and stamps and roars, instead of shouting at him to be still, escort him to his place of refuge, his room, and leave him there to shout it out. The quiet of the room, the feeling of security its four walls lend his spirit, calm him and redirect him far sooner than anything you can do.

The habit of retiring to his room when he feels himself slipping is a fine one to establish. It helps him to gain control over himself. It teaches him to find strength within himself.

The older children need the quiet of their rooms. If they have to share the room each can have his own corner where his chair and his precious possessions occupy the larger space. It is so much better for a child to seek his own room than to make a scene in the family gathering. His dignity is enhanced, his personality supported, his spirit soothed, which are consummations devoutly to be wished.

While we are about it let us remember the place of refuge for ourselves. Grownup people should be able to find it within their own selves but all of us are not grown up sufficiently for that at all times. We need the support of a good book, of prayer, of meditation.

The tired mother needs the quiet hour. Burdened fathers need to find a place where they can drop their loads for a moment or two. The children must have a safe retreat where the hand of the law cannot reach them, a place where justice must stand outside the door.

A GOOD TEST

SCHOOL tests tell how the child is getting along with the school tasks. When he gets a hundred in spelling and ninety in geography and sixty-five in arithmetic, we know that as far as arithmetic goes so far a thorough review drill and application is in order. So far as geography goes we can extend congratulation, and as for spelling, nothing more need be said save a word of astonished praise.

But the test marks and the report card are not enough. They do not take us far enough into the mystery of the child's growth. He might get fine marks and still be a poor pupil because his behavior is poor. Good conduct must go with good marks. It usually does, but now and then it doesn't. And that gives us a concern. We have to adjust things so conduct and lessons are both satisfactory.

When that has been done there is not an end to the matter. These expressions of the child are all outside expressions. Somebody beside the child had a hand in them. If he didn't know how to bound the United States, the teacher told him how and probably kept him in after school until she was sure he would know it.

There must be some guide to tell us the way he is going and I think that his happiness is the best one so far. Is the good child a happy child? Is the high average child a happy child? There is no need to ask about the low average child or the bad child. Both of them are unhappy or they would not get such a rating. Happiness is the sign manual of personal success.

I say personal success advisedly, for it is possible to have success thrust upon one, and then one is sick unto death in the soul of him. Real happiness is the spontaneous expression of a soul at peace within itself. This state cannot be bestowed in affection nor imposed in authority. It comes of itself or it does not come at all. When it comes, you know it. Its light is unmistakable. When it glows in the eyes of a child, when it animates his purposeful movements, rings in his laughter and smiles in his words, he is happy. He is going somewhere. That is the best test of a child's growth.

The sad child, who trends with leaden feet, who looks out upon his world through shadowed eyes, whose voice is hollow and whose laughter is forced, in whom the milk of human kindness is dried up, is a most unhappy child, and although his card is filled with A's he is getting nowhere that matters. Growth is a harmonious process and it brings only joy.

I would not have you confuse happiness, inner peace, with surface gestures. True happiness does not need to shriek its mirth, nor advertise itself at all. It is and that is enough. How happy is your child?

London Magazine Tells of American "Wonders"

A farm in Connecticut is run entirely by electricity. The first light of dawn puts out the night lights. An electric clock sets going a gadget which opens the door of the poultry house. An electric "eye" counts the chickens. Another clock turns on a wireless set. A bugle sounds reveille.

The farmer touches another button and breakfast starts cooking by electricity. He then shaves with an electric razor, has breakfast, and drives away. As his car goes down the drive it makes contact with a gadget which flashes a red warning light to a point 300 feet away where the drive joins the main road. It lasts for 18 seconds, the time it takes to get there.

Returning at night, the farmer's headlights disturb another "eye." Floodlights illuminate the garden and the house, and electric chimes peal out a welcome. When he arrives, another "eye" opens the doors.

Electric "eyes" outside detect and announce visitors. In the nursery the children play with electric dolls, and the youngest has a muffled radio in her pillow which plays softly until an electric clock switches it off. The electricity bill is about 50 cents a day. But the account says nothing about milking cows, shearing sheep, feeding pigs, collecting eggs, or mowing meadows and hoeing turnips by electricity!—London Answers.

POULTRY

FRESH RANGE FOR GROWING TURKEYS

Poultry Expert in Warning Against Blackhead.

When young turkeys have reached the age of from eight to ten weeks, move them out to range shelters on clean ground which was free of all poultry, turkeys or poultry manure during the previous year. A good range will afford plenty of green feed, shade and fresh clean water.

"At this season of the year, growers usually begin to have trouble with their poults," says C. F. Parrish, poultry extension specialist at North Carolina State college. "Blackhead begins to develop and this comes, in most cases, from laxity in sanitation. Success with turkeys is dependent upon careful management of the growing poults. Fresh range is essential."

Parrish says much attention must also be given to supplying the right kind of feed. In general, poults have the same nutritive requirements as chicks. A complete growing ration is necessary for best results. Such a ration will include animal protein, grain, milk, green feed, minerals and water. Milk is useful during the first six weeks.

The same commercial feeds recommended for chicks may be used with poults. However, one mash hopper five feet long is needed for each 75 poults. Two one-gallon water fountains are also needed for this number of the birds. Place the mash hoppers and water fountains on wire covered frames made from 2 by 4 timber.

It requires about 60 pounds of feed, exclusive of green feed, to fulfill the requirements of a poulter during the first seven months of its life. By that time, the poulter should weigh from 12 to 14 pounds. Always keep turkeys and chickens separated, he advises.

Variety to Choose From in Finding Good Layers

The selection of a breed is often perplexing to a poultry novice. Usually the poultry enthusiast does well to select the one that most appeals to his own fancy. The lightweight Mediterranean breeds are primarily adapted to egg laying. This class includes eleven varieties of Leghorns, five of Minorcas, Single and Rose-comb Anconas, White-Faced Black Spanish, Blue Andalusians and Buttercups. The American class contains the middleweight breeds. Those admitted to the American standard of perfection are seven kinds of Plymouth Rocks, eight of Wyandottes, Black and Mottled Javas, Single and Rosecomb Rhode Island Reds, Rosecomb Rhode Island Whites (Single Comb Rhode Island Whites were not admitted to the standard because of a too close resemblance to White Plymouth Rocks), Buckeyes, Chanteclers and Jersey Black Giants. The Asiatics appeal to many fanciers on account of their large size and profuse, soft feathering. The standard lists three varieties of Brahmans, four Cochins, Black and White Langshans. The English division includes three kinds of Dorkings, four of Orpingtons, three Cornish, three Sussex, besides the Australorps developed from English Black Orpingtons in Australia.

Sand for Young Ducks

To hatch a brood of ducks with a hen has always been an interesting stunt with young poultry keepers. The ducklings themselves are most engaging in their ways, and the concern of the mother hen over their taking to the water is amusing. In many cases the pleasure of the owner is spoiled by what seems an unaccountable mortality among the ducklings. Fed the same as young chickens they are apt to collapse within a day or two. The common cause of this is that the feed is too rich for them. They are voracious feeders, and when they fill up with a grain mash are apt to have acute indigestion. The usual method of preventing this is to put coarse sand in the mash the first few days. A good big handful to a quart of mash is sufficient. Mix thoroughly and let the ducks eat all they want.

Weight of Pullets

At six months of age Rhode Island Red and Wyandotte pullets should weigh five and a half pounds; Leghorns, three and a half pounds; Plymouth Rocks, six pounds. They should come into production during the sixth month. A too early maturity is likely to result in small birds and small eggs. While Leghorns usually mature earlier than the heavier breeds, there is evidence that the best of them do not and that the rate of maturity is the same as that for Rhode Island Reds.

Color of Poultry Meat

Americans generally prefer yellow-legged chickens, which also have yellow skin and fat. Englishmen prefer those with white or "flesh-colored" legs, skin and fat. The French want them with bluish black or dark legs and grayish white skin. These national preferences are commonly treated as having no foundation except in custom and tradition, yet they deserve more consideration from poultrymen ambitious to contribute something new to the progress of the industry.

Our Government - How It Operates

By William Bruckart

THE PRESIDENT'S JOB

IT IS quite apparent to anyone that the job of being President of the United States carries with it something more than the honor that attaches to that great office. Those who have observed the performances of even two or three individuals in their service as President arrive, I believe, at two irrevocable conclusions respecting Presidents. One of them presents a problem for which I can offer no solution. The other constitutes a fact that is a glorification of a nation producing such men.

These convictions are, first, that the office of President of our nation is a burden too great for any one human being to bear and, second, that no person ever has served long in the office without yielding to the guidance of some impelling religious philosophy, regardless of the state of mind he had when he assumed the duties.

It was only a comparatively few years ago when it was a common sight in Washington to see the President strolling about the city unattended, meeting and greeting people. The tasks were not so onerous in those days. But the duties of the President in late years have become so complex, the responsibilities so great, that his work actually never is done. And add to the worries of the office, this fact: he is never free from criticism, some of which is sincere but much of which is purely for political purposes.

As the nation has pushed forward and its government has expanded, more and more responsibility rests with its Chief Executive. It has resulted in a condition wherein the Presidency carries with it entirely too much work. The fact long has been recognized, but the solution is not apparent. A President has Constitutional obligations, and there is no way by which he can be relieved of them.

It is obvious to all that the President cannot personally be in touch with every activity of the far-flung governmental machinery, yet he is held to account for them. He has to be content with attempts to co-ordinate the whole and determine general policies. In an organization of some 700,000 persons, it is not difficult to see how unwise decisions may be reached by various subordinates, and in our two-party system of government, the "outs" overlook no opportunity to capitalize the mistakes of the "ins." And so it goes. An error or an unwise decision or a piece of malfeasance becomes as a snowball and grows as it rolls.

The President, therefore, has to be concerned with all of the thousands of activities, and assume responsibility for results without being able at the same time to supervise them except indirectly. Nor is there ever any shortage of critics and agitators to call attention to the vulnerable spots.

There are close advisers to the President, of course. He has his cabinet, but loyal as are the cabinet members and wise and careful as they may be, the head of the nation still must lead. He must frame the policies relating to international affairs; he must think clearly respecting the nation's economic needs, and he cannot escape the thought that from every word or deed of his flows consequences so far-reaching that our nation may be plunged into war or its whole people may suffer the privations of "hard times." Even further, from the things he says or does may come blasted reputations or unmerited riches.

Perhaps it is the constant thought of this great responsibility that makes men consult the depths of the souls for the guidance that they need. It is a fact, nevertheless, that whatever they have done or whatever their source of wisdom may have been prior to becoming President of the United States, their private thoughts during their terms of office have shown their regard for the truth as it is imparted in one or another of the religious teachings.

Things of this sort about the President seldom reach the people. It is one of the numerous things which cannot become known. The President is entitled to some privacy, though he gets very little despite all of the effort to provide it. My thought always has been that the President ought to have a lot of sympathy. Everybody is so anxious to get a glimpse of him or to talk with him that he is not given the time to have a good hard-boiled grouch, however much he may feel like it.

It might be just as well, therefore, that the fond mother who looks upon her first-born as a President-to-be might change her hope. If she seeks happiness for him, it may come through the honor that attaches to the Presidency, but patriotism does not prescribe that there shall be a continual rending of heart strings and a searing of souls for all who serve their country.

Tested by Time

"Is there any way in which one can decide whether the standards of conduct set up by society are true or false?" has been asked. If they have been wrought for, fought for, and suffered for, by pioneers of the race, those of value will last. What makes for happiness, order, and final peace is the test.—London Tit-Bits.

"What's all that cheering in the next room for?"
"That's the sign that somebody has just finished his after dinner speech."

"It is more terrible when he doesn't realize it."

"He's a lawyer, but as to his being criminal, I think he's too careful to quite overstep the line."

AFTERTHOUGHT

"What kind of a husband did your sister get?"
"A lemon. He makes her economize on clothes to make her pay for the candy and flowers he sent her before they were married."

Current Wit and Humor

A MEATIER MEAL

He was a thin, ragged urchin and he had crawled in under the circus tent. The manager nabbed him. "Do you know what we do with boys like you?" he thundered. "We make meat of them for the lions. Here, Carl, throw him into the lions' cage." The youngster looked up at him and said, "Oh, mister, let me see the show for nothing and I'll have the fattest boys in the place crawling under the tent tomorrow."—Boston Evening Transcript.

Right and Wrong

"Now Arthur," said the primary teacher, "if I put 11 plums in your hand and you eat four, how many will you have?"
"Eleven," said Arthur.
"But can that be true if you've eaten four? Think again."
"I'd have 11," said the boy, "four inside and seven outside."

Times Have Changed

In the good old days, says an exchange, you knocked on the front door to see if the family was at home on Sunday afternoon. Now you look in the garage.

BUNNY'S "FIND"

Rabbit—Gosh, what a fine big carrot somebody left here on the beach. It will last me all year.

Indirect Persuasion

Slowboy—Your father is sitting up late tonight.
Miss Willing—Yes. I think he wishes to be on hand to give us his blessing. —Evening Boston Transcript.

PROOF

The lecturer was getting warmed up to his subject.
"And, friends," he said impressively, "I tell you once again, medicine never did anyone any good."
"That's not true," came a voice from the back of the hall.
"Not true?" echoed the lecturer.
"What do you mean?"
"Medicine did my family a lot of good," went on the heckler.
"But, my friend," said the lecturer, "you have no way of proving that statement."
"Oh, yes, I have," replied the heckler, "my father owns a drug store."

Thanks

"An author's life must be a thankless task."
"Not at all. Every time I send a manuscript to a publisher he sends it back with many thanks."

STYLE SUPERLATIVE

"That author has a most convincing style of diction."
"Yes. But you ought to have heard the agent who sold me the set."

One of the First Calculators
Over 2,000 years ago a learned Greek named Eratosthenes, who lived in Egypt, was able to say roughly how far it was round the earth, although at that time only a small part of the world was known to him. By observing the sun at two different places in Egypt and measuring the distance between them, he calculated the circumference of the earth mathematically, and was better than 80 per cent correct.
