Mr. and Mrs. George Koenig and family and Mrs. Wm. Dettmar of Detroit are spending a week at their cottage at Chippewa Beach and also visiting relatives and friends here.

Mr. and Mrs. N. C. Harting and grandson, Carl Babcock, drove to Grand Rapids on Wednesday of this week and attended the state Abstractors' convention held at the Hotel Pantland, where some fifty members of the profession gathered.

See the new Perfection oil stoves. Carroll & Mielock, East Tawas. adv.

Mrs. Ernest Mielock and daughter, Rosemary, Mrs. A. Cashen and daughter, Virginia, returned Sunday to Detroit after two weeks' visit in the city. Mrs. Victoria Kull accompanied them home.

Tawas City's baseball nine journeyed to Curtisville for a twilight game Thursday afternoon and nosed out its opponents, 15 to 0, in five innings. The locals hammered the horseshoe for 18 hits, including two home runs by Minor Main and triples by Mart. Zollweg and S. B. Roach.

Mrs. Gus. Waack of Lansing spent a couple of days in the city with relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Goldie and children of Detroit are visiting friends in the city a few days this week.

Mr. and Mrs. John Ristow, Mr. and Mrs. Edw. Wajohn and Mr. and Mrs. Gus. Wajohn attended the funeral of Mrs. Harry Thompson of Alpena on Tuesday.

Miss Ferne Mark of Detroit came Friday to spend a couple of weeks with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John A. Mark.

Miss Katherine Loker returned Monday to Lansing after a month's visit in the city.

W. A. Evans Furniture Co. adv. Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Hahn, Mr. and Mrs. Derwin Hahn and Miss Helen Miner of Blissfield came Thursday to spend a few days with Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Brugger. Mrs. Ezra Hahn is a sister of J. A. Brugger.

Edward Stevens spent a few days in Lansing this week.

Mr. and Mrs. John Forsten are spending the week in Chicago attending the Century of Progress.

C. L. McLean was called Thursday to Detroit on account of the serious illness of his mother.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. H. Nisbet entertained the following friends and relatives at bridge Wednesday afternoon: Mr. and Mrs. Roy Goldie and family, Major and Mrs. E. M. Connor and family, Mrs. Thos. Oliver, Mrs. Margaret Smith, Mrs. Ira Horton, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Meade, Miss Edythe Walker and Richard Walker.

CARD OF THANKS
We wish to thank the many friends for their acts of kindness extended to our son, Richard Ackers, following the recent accident in which he was seriously injured. We wish especially to thank Dr. Somers, Miss M. J. Shepherd, R. N., Mr. and Mrs. P. Stasinos and employees of the Holland Hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. A. V. Ackerson.

ZION LUTHERAN CHURCH
We will celebrate our annual Mission Festival this Sunday with two special services.

10:00 a. m.—German service. Sermon by Rev. F. Rutkowsky of Auburn.
8:00 p. m.—English service. Sermon by Rev. A. F. Westendorf of Bay City.

A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend these services.
F. A. Sievert, Pastor.

COMING
Dr. A. S. Allard, optometrist and eye sight specialist of Bay City, will be in Tawas City at McGuire's jewelry store, Tuesday, August 22. You will feel and see better if you have good glasses. Reasonable prices. Remember the date, Tuesday, August 22.
DR. A. S. ALLARD.

N. R. A. Loan Will Be Asked For In City Water Project

The dream of many people in Tawas City for years—a water works and sanitary sewer system for the city—may be realized if plans now underway meet with the government's approval under the National Recovery Act. Funds are provided by this act for use in building civic projects. Thirty per cent of the cost of construction will be given outright by the government, the balance to be a loan paid within 36 years. The project must produce an income sufficient to liquidate the loan within the specified time. The act provides that no part of the debt can be spread upon the tax roll. Water works are projects which are especially favored in meeting the government's approval.

Tuesday evening the common council unanimously voted to contract with the Francis Engineering company of Saginaw to make a survey of the city and prepare plans and specifications for a water works. This survey, with the plans and estimates, is necessary before the government will act on the loan. The project will consist of wells for supplying water, standpipe, pumps, water mains, fire hydrants and sanitary sewage disposal system. The survey will start within a few days. The council considered the project a necessity and felt that this was Tawas City's opportunity to secure the much desired improvement and that the city should take full advantage of the offer made by President Roosevelt and the Federal government and that an application be made as soon as possible. The survey will cost $500.00.

G. W. Francis of the Francis Engineering company, who was present at the council meeting Tuesday evening, presented for the council's inspection several plans and specifications which they had prepared for cities similar in size and problems to Tawas City. It was the opinion of Mr. Francis that the cost of a waterworks should not exceed $50,000.00 and that the sewage disposal system would be a less amount. He anticipated that the survey would (Turn to No. 2, Back Page)

I. C. I. TEAM DEFEATS HARRISVILLE BY 7-4 SCORE

The Iosco County Independents took Harrisville into camp last Sunday at the Sand Lake diamond by a 7 to 4 score. Errors were numerous on both sides, the I. C. I. boys committing six to Harrisville's five. McPherson handled the pitching assignment for the Ioscos in fine style, yielding but seven hits and striking out eight. H. Holmes occupied the mound for the visitors and was nipped for ten safeties. He struck out two I. C. I. men. Youngs, the Ioscos' third baseman, hit a home run in the eighth inning.

Next Sunday, August 20, the Iosco County Independents will play at Glennie.

"BABY FACE" IS ENTERTAINMENT TINGED WITH SCANDAL

A vivid and revealing picture, "Baby Face," comes to the Family Theatre, East Tawas, on Wednesday and Thursday, August 23 and 24.

Superb performances are registered by both Barbara Stanwyck and George Brent in this story of a young girl and her climb to the "better things in life." Stanwyck, as a drudge for her father in a small town speakeasy, takes a big step in the big city. Her first conquest is made in a bank where she rapidly rises from one department to another and in each case using a man as her stepping stone. After a scandal in which the president is killed she is sent to the Paris branch by Brent, who now meets and marries her. The bank fails and she, at first, refuses to lend him any money, but returns later. Both go back to the small town to start over.

"Baby Face" is a purely adult show; of no interest to children.

NOTICE OF WHITEMORE PUBLIC SCHOOL OPENING

The Whitemore Public Schools will open on September 4th. Registration of high school students will begin on August 25th at the school office.

WIN 10TH GAME IN SUNDAY'S 3 TO 0 BATTLE

The superb pitching that has carried the Tawas City Hi-Speeds to the top of the North Eastern Michigan league stood them in good stead Sunday as they won their tenth straight game, blanking Prudenville, 3 to 0.

Masterful hurling by Walter Moeller, who allowed only four hits, one very scratchy, was the feature performance of the game. Moeller only passed one batter, struck out four, and allowed but one man to reach third base. In the fourth inning Powells tripled with one down, and then was left as Moeller made H. Otto foul to Laidlaw, who made a beautiful catch in front of the Tawas dugout, and Sullivan grounded an easy one to Main.

Eddie Sieloff got a nice hand from the crowd when he ran into deep left-center and took G. Otto's fly in the first inning and cut off a possible run, as Burr was on second base at the time, and in the eighth he ran almost to the foul line to snare Burr's line drive and then threw to Main to double Fowler.

Batting honors went to Minor Main, Tawas City's star second baseman, and Stan Noel, fleet-footed outfielder. Main hit a double and two singles, while Noel poked out a triple and two singles. Laidlaw's peppy catching, and backing of first base on every hit ball, makes the infield play heads-up baseball all through the game.

Next Sunday Manager Henry Neumann's Tawas City Hi-Speeds will clash with H. N. Butler's Tawas Bay Fishermen at the East Tawas diamond. This promises to be a good, close game. See it.

MEETING OF YACHTING ASSOCIATION TO BE HELD TONIGHT

There will be a meeting of the Tawas Bay Yachting Association at the Holland Hotel, East Tawas, at eight o'clock Friday night, August 18. This is the last meeting before the regatta and every member should endeavor to be present.

1st Annual Regatta Opens Saturday; Eight-Day Program

The First Annual Sailing Regatta sponsored by the Tawas Bay Yacht Association and the Saginaw Bay Yacht Club will open tomorrow (Saturday) afternoon for an eight-day schedule of races. Boats from Saginaw, Bay City, Alpena and Tawas have entered for the various events and the regatta promises to equal those of the days when yacht racing was at its height on Saginaw Bay.

In addition to the races, the Tawas Bay Yacht Association and the people of East Tawas have planned entertaining events during the week for the yachtsmen and the hundreds of spectators and racing enthusiasts who will be present.

The following is a program of the various events:

Saturday
4:00 P. M.—Finish of free-for-all for members of the Saginaw Bay Yacht Club, from Point Lookout to Tawas Bay.
7:30 P. M.—Boxing—semi-finals—C. C. Camp—State Park.
9:00 P. M.—Public reception and dance at Community House.

Sunday
10:00 A. M.—Church.
2:00 P. M.—All boats under 16-foot water line length.
2:15 P. M.—All cat boats.
2:30 P. M.—Class boats and others from 16 to 21 feet.
3:00 P. M.—Yavls and ketches.

Monday
10:00 A. M.—Meeting at Holland Hotel for details.
2:00 P. M.—Free-for-all.
2:00 P. M.—Get-under-way-race. (Explanation at 10:00 A. M. at Holland Hotel.)

Wednesday
2:00 P. M.—All boats under 16-foot water line length.
2:15 P. M.—All cat boats.
2:30 P. M.—Class boats and others from 16 to 21 feet.

Thursday
2:00 P. M.—Windward-leeward race. (Cat boats and 16 to 20-footers.)

Friday

GUIANA FORESTS

River Transportation in British Guiana.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.
BRITISH expedition recently explored a new region—a region among the treetops of 100 to 200 feet forest giants in British Guiana.

Here, indeed, was a place worth every effort to investigate—a rolling, wind-tossed sea of green extending for several thousand square miles, and teeming with a life which was biologically unknown. Lured by its promise, a group of men decided to examine an area of forest on the right bank of the Essequibo river.

They were equipped with a variety of climbing apparatus, such as line-shooting machines and rocket-firing guns for propelling ropes over high branches, thousands of feet of cordage for making hauling constructions, pulleys for use in block and tackle, iron spikes for building spike ladders, and wooden scaling ladders capable of extension. Long-range spray pumps were procured for shooting poisons at insect warriors that would obstruct invasion of their homeland.

The area selected was ideal for a survey; for it was as nearly primeval forest as could be found. Here everything was in an unaltered state, with all the trees in their natural associations, as they had no doubt existed for a thousand years or more.

The forest was composed of tall, straight trees. Some were monsters, with broad buttressed bases which, like pillars, supported the overhead roof. The vast majority, however, were of smaller size, crowded together by thousands, all competing, struggling, jostling with one another in their efforts to get their heads into the tree-roof. Every tree examined was perfectly straight. Hardly one had a branch until near the canopy, where, at a height of about 70 feet, occurred division into a simple fork.

Bush ropes of every degree of thickness spread about in this thicket of straight poles. Some swung across in pendent loops, or hung down like loose, swinging cordage; others twisted themselves round the great tree trunks in strangling, serpentine coils. Mosses, epiphytes, lichens, and ferns crowded the trunks and high branches in tropical profusion. Overhead the tree tops made a green roof, and the fallen vegetation covered the floor with a thick, soft carpet of mold.

Formed a Roof With Windows.
 Throughout the forest were glittering lights, bright spots, streaks, and luminous patches, where shafts of sunlight, breaking through the roof, were reflected from the underlying foliage as from a multitude of suspended mirrors. On every side was the richest fertility; and, contrastingly, in the prostrate trunks and rotting leaf mold was equal evidence of death and decay. The silence, the gloom, the stillness, the luxuriance were most impressive.

The oval-shaped heads of the trees came close to one another and interlaced their branches, and creepers and bush ropes linked them together to form a sort of roof, though not such a perfect thatch as books on equatorial forests often lead one to imagine. In places the tree crowns stood out somewhat separately. The sky was by no means completely hidden. Here and there were windows, skylights in the canopy, through which the sunlight streamed lancelets to illuminate the "cellar" floor.

From the ground one could catch only passing glimpses of the life in the foliage. Monkeys went crashing through it now and then. The larger birds, such as parrots and toucans, were seen here and there, splashes of color in its shadows. Smaller songsters were evident only by their voices, for in the gloom it was difficult to locate a bird through the mass of foliage. Occasionally, with powerful glasses, one might see through a canopy window a lofty tree covered with blossoms, about which flitted bright butterflies.

The expedition's knowledge of that zone of life was confined to what a gun could bring down from it for museum purposes. Of the intimate lives of its birds and mammals it is fair to say that biologists knew very little; and, so far as its smaller fauna was concerned, its reptiles, insects, arachnids, and other creatures, the expedition was almost in complete ignorance.

It was not difficult to move about in this primeval forest. Secondary growth is somewhat tangled, but the primitive bush is more open and accessible. There is no need to hew a way through it with an ax. What checks progress is usually a fallen tree-trunk or a pile of roots or an impassable swamp. Nor does thorny vegetation cause trouble. There are some palms with spiny trunks or stems, but never such barriers of prickles as are common in less humid forests.

One soon finds how easy it is to get lost in the forest. On account of the sameness of the vegetation on every side and the absence of both horizon and landmarks, it is a problem to recover bearings once one becomes confused.

Some Peculiar Trees.
 Some of the great trees are most arresting. There is the stilted tree, or awasakul, whose roots thrust themselves above the ground and incline to form a pyramid supporting on its apex the tall, straight trunk. Another striking kind is the fluted tree, or yururu, with the whole length of its trunk marked by deep longitudinal grooves, as if it were composed of a thick bundle of smaller saplings. More abundant but none the less attractive, is the mora, the immense trunk base of which is drawn out into buttresses like the witches' seats of Channel Island chimneys, some of them often following a sinuous course before they reach the ground. The bush ropes are of all varieties and patterns designed to give them strength. Some are twisted with such perfect regularity that one can scarcely tell the difference between them and ropes made by man.

The expedition's chief trouble in the forest came from dampness. When it arrived, the wet season was at its height. Every day rain fell in torrents; the air was 80 per cent saturated with moisture; every leaf in the forest dripped. A step into the bush meant getting soaked to the skin; and, once wet, clothes never dried. One had to become accustomed to starting off each day in the sodden clothing of the evening before. As a consequence of this continual moisture, boots and everything else of leather soon were covered with a green mold; animal skins and specimens rotted; photographic plates refused to dry. Much has been written of discomforts in a tropical forest, but few writers impress on their readers that the real trouble is persistent dampness.

The expedition had, of course, its share of insect pests, of which the chief were the ticks and the bete rouge. These minute creatures, speck-like in size, live freely on the forest vegetation. While wandering about, they collected on clothes, underneath which they soon found their way to the tenderest parts of the skin. The bete rouge, an almost invisible harvest mite, was much the more annoying of the two. It burrowed into the skin, making a red irritation that felt like an attack of nettle rash. The only way to deal with these tiny creatures was to go over the whole body carefully each day and pick them off. The penalty for neglecting this all-important duty was a sleepless night of scratching.

Indians Helped the Climbers.
 Members of the expedition anticipated difficulties of many kinds, for they had been impressed upon them before they sailed for Guiana. The trees, they had been warned, were too tall and straight and branchless for climbing; their timber was too hard to take climbing irons; their crowns were too full of dangerous rotten branches to afford footing; the foliage, everything, swarmed with armies of venomous ants; and even if they did get into the canopy, they would be able to see very little in the dense vegetation. Such were the difficulties that had been predicted for them. Fortunately they found that they had been considerably exaggerated.

The first tree they attempted to climb was one that they had left for the purpose in the center of their camp clearing. Confidently they brought into action their rocket apparatus and the line-throwing gun, but both proved virtually useless. They sent their missiles forcibly enough—too forcibly in fact—not only into the canopy but far above it! It was impossible to aim the rope over the branch selected and to bring the end back to earth through the tangle.

The devices of civilization thus failing them, they engaged the services of two Arawak Indians, who provided much more satisfactory help, since they had been accustomed to climb and tap for its milky gum a sort of rubber tree known as the balata.

By using loops of rope passed around their bodies and the tree trunks, these "balata bleeders" could make ascents in any part of the forest.

They first attacked the camp tree, climbing it by means of epikes on their leather boots, and carrying a light line with them up to the first fork at 75 feet. Meantime a block-and-tackle apparatus had been got in readiness. The upper end of it was made fast to a suitable branch; to the lower end was attached a seat made of straight pieces of stick cut in the forest, somewhat after the fashion of a boy's chair. Seated on this, one could be hauled to the point of fixation in the crown of the tree.

ROADSIDE MARKETING

By T. J. Delohery

WHY PEOPLE BUY AT ROADSIDE MARKETS

WHILE fruits, vegetables, poultry and dairy products are the main things sold over roadside markets, consumers will also buy fruit juices, jams, jellies, preserves, canned goods, nuts, popcorn, honey and such unrelated things as baskets, flowers, shrubbery, pottery and craft products.

These facts are revealed by the experience of thousands of producers, but more specifically in a questionnaire which the Massachusetts state department of agriculture sent out to 2,000 people representing a cross section of urban population. A survey of 1,700 markets along 2,800 miles of first, second and third-class roads in Ohio brought out the same facts.

The Massachusetts questionnaire was the groundwork for assistance which the state planned to give farmers who wanted to sell products of the farm, home and garden direct to the consumer. It was found, in the replies, that roadside marketing, expanding yearly, has a promising future.

More than 60 per cent of the 2,000 replies to the questionnaire declared that city and town folks regarded roadside markets as satisfactory places to buy fruits, vegetables, eggs and poultry products, dairy products, flowers, jams, jellies, preserves, fruit juices, canned goods, cider and honey.

Freshness was given as the reason for buying direct from the producer, with quality and price following in the order mentioned.

In keeping with this desire for fresh, quality products, 1,400 people declared themselves very much in favor of home-grown stuff. The reason is quite plain. Green fields, fresh with dew, and the memory of the tasty vegetables grown in the home garden, are responsible. Surveys made in Illinois and West Virginia, where local towns and cities were "importing" many farm products which could be produced locally, backs up the answers of the Bay state consumers.

In Illinois, for instance, retailers and consumers expressed themselves willing to pay 5 cents a dozen more for locally produced fresh eggs; and not sufficient milk was produced in the vicinity to supply consumers.

Reviewing the compilation of the answers to the various sections of the Massachusetts questionnaire, it was evident that roadside markets offer the farmer the opportunity to get a bigger share of the consumer's food dollar, if producers will only make a little effort to grasp it. Not all of the consumers who answered the questionnaire are steady patrons of highway markets, but more than 50 per cent declared a preference for buying their fruits, vegetables and poultry products from the grower.

Here again freshness was the reason assigned. This feeling was also carried out in opposition to buying oranges, lemons, grapefruit, bananas and such other tropical fruits at roadside markets. True, farmers do handle fruits which they do not produce, this practice originating with their acquiring better knowledge of merchandising, and knowing customers like to do as much shopping as possible in one place; but few handle citrus fruits.

In every survey made, freshness stands out. In Ohio, where consumers spend 25 per cent of their fruit, vegetable and poultry dollar at roadside markets, freshness was given as the big reason why they went into the country for these products.

While the mention of freshness was general, it is rather significant in view of conditions that less than 10 per cent of the consumers in both states were interested in price or the possibility of saving money by buying direct from the producer.

Another indication that freshness and quality are the dominating factors in products to be sold at the roadside market is the time of day when most sales are made.

Convenience is mentioned because consumers gave it as one of the reasons they patronized these markets, it outranking the much stressed necessary business requirement—service.

Roadside marketing is still on the increase, despite general conditions. Business is good even though there may be less cars on the road. Individual purchases indicate this; investigations by college authorities and the records of individual farmers showing they range in average from 50 to 75 cents. Expense of operating has shown a corresponding decrease, labor, one of the biggest items, being considerably lower where hired help is necessary. The cost of other necessities such as packages and advertising vary with the volume of business.

CONSUMERS' COUNSEL

Dr. Frederic C. Howe, scholar and banker, has been appointed "consumers' counsel" of the Department of Agriculture. His job will be to wage a nation-wide war on unfair food prices. He comes from Cleveland and received his academic degrees from Allegheny college and a Ph. D. from Johns Hopkins university, later studying at Oxford and in Germany and in law schools of Maryland and New York. He was a member of President Wilson's staff of experts at the Paris peace conference.

Ecuador Indian Legend Tells Story of Genesis

Berkeley, Calif.—The story of Genesis as told in legend by the head-hunting Indians of Ecuador was told here recently by Dr. Matthew W. Stirling, explorer and chief of the bureau of American ethnology of the Smithsonian institution, who just returned from Peru.

In the beginning there were in the world only Kumpano, the creator; Chingaso, his wife, and their son, Esta, the sun.

Out of mud, Kumpano created Nantu, the moon, as a wife for Esta, but she was shy and kept away from him. The nightbird, Anhu, fell in love with Nantu, but she repulsed him also, and one night disappeared far into the sky.

Anhu, however, went in pursuit and tried to climb a trailing vine to the moon. But Nantu cut the vine, which fell and became entangled among the trees, where it still remains.

The eclipse of the moon occurs when Esta strikes Nantu. When Nantu is the aggressor, that is the moon eclipsing the sun. And when Nantu weeps, there is rain.

These two persons were the parents of the head-hunters' tribe, according to their legends.

Warrant Tells Story of Witchcraft

Document Carries Signature of Cotton Mather.

Denver.—Witchcraft was a dangerous occupation around Salem, Mass., in 1692, and Frank C. Mertz of Denver has the documentary proof.

An apparently genuine death warrant, issued June 10, 1692, for one Rebecca Nurse, a Salem witch, is owned by Mertz.

The warrant has been authenticated by the Massachusetts Historical society and by William F. Warren, curator of the Boston museum. It possesses signatures of Cotton Mather, the Indian-King Philip, and other notables of the time.

The "X" signature of King Philip makes the document especially valuable, as there are said to be only seven of these original "X" marks in existence.

Rebecca Nurse was considered somewhat of a neighborhood menace in and about Salem.

According to the charges set forth in the warrant, she caused the death of some forty fowl and several swine.

Rebecca was not satisfied with picking on the fowl and swine, but carried her work further by cutting with an ax "the Wench Pituba," a member of King Philip's tribe. Several myster-

Term "Poilu" Is Limited to Front Line Fighters

Paris.—Only the front-line fighting troops of the World war have the right to the famous appellation of "Poilu."

This is the dictum of the dictionary committee of the French academy, which has recommended the inclusion of the word "Poilu" in the next edition of the Academy dictionary with the definition: "French soldier of the front-line trenches during the war of 1914-18."

Popularly the term since the war has always been used for any soldier of the war who wore the uniform, and is now often affectionately applied to the soldiers of the present French army.

Child in Coffin "Comes to Life"

Warsaw.—A five-year-old child "came to life" in her coffin on the way to her funeral recently.

As the cortege was nearing the grave the mourners heard cries coming from the coffin. It was opened and the child handed back alive into the arms of the weeping mother and taken home.

Doctors state the child was in a state of lethargy almost unknown among children.

New York Plans to Outlaw Its Slums

Projects Under Way Will Cost Many Millions.

New York.—They are going to outlaw slums in New York city—some day—maybe.

The big drive toward this Utopian goal is already under way. After many years of agitating, planning, bickering and otherwise mulling over the problem, the city has finally cut loose with measures definitely designed to eliminate two of the so-called "plague spots" with modern housing developments and is turning over a third with a view to early action of some kind. At least two other projects are under consideration.

The five enterprises look to the expenditure of something like $75,000,000 on up to date, fireproof, sanitary housing to provide cheap rental living quarters to replace the rat-infested, disease-breeding hovels and tumble-down rookeries now disgracing the affected localities or but lately removed preparatory to the "developments."

City Government Aids.
 While none of the so-called "elimination" plans is a city project, the municipal government is lending its aid and encouragement to the movement in a general way and is undertaking to help out with street closing and tax exemptions, leaving the financing and management of the houses to private capital. Most of the schemes, incidentally, are conditioned on the outcome of applications for loans from the Federal Reconstruction Finance corporation as well as on petitions for city aid in the way of tax exemptions, etc.

One of them, i. e., the Fred F. "French Operators plan for replacing the so-called "Lung Block" on Manhattan's East side with a $9,300,000 development, to be known as "Knickerbocker Village" has already obtained an R. F. C. loan for $8,075,000 as a running start toward actual fulfillment. In announcing its approval of the loan, the corporations' board had some nice things to say of the project, among them observing that:

"The site of the development is in the heart of New York city's heaviest tuberculosis casualty areas of the period immediately preceding and following the turn of the century. . . . The building of a modern, clean, light, apartment community will eliminate a potential disease-spreading block of buildings. The 'Lung Block' alone accounted for 291 cases of tuberculosis between the years 1894-1904. Only two houses of the block have been free from the disease."

Other projects in a more or less nebulous state look to the elimination of slum areas in Brooklyn and Queens.

Each building of the village will be of hollow square construction, providing a large interior court. Light and sunshine will be insured for every apartment.

It is estimated that this project will furnish employment to about 10,000 men directly or indirectly for a year or more.

Plan Cheap Rentals.
 Another project on the way to actual fulfillment is known as the Chrystie-Forsyth street development plan, looking to the improvement of some seven blocks of the lower East side—five of them with modern apartments for "rock-bottom" rentals to white-collar workers and the other two to be converted into parks.

The total estimated investment in the buildings will therefore be $9,289,708. The published value of $12,789,708 for the development was explained recently as including a figure of $3,500,000 to represent the value of the city leasehold.

Another slum elimination project that is looking up in spite of the depression is that known as the Rutgers town plan, which involves the proposed expenditure of some $40,000,000 in a model housing development on the East side, just below Manhattan bridge.

The development plan includes an interior park and roof playgrounds. Each building is to be a separate unit, 12 stories high. Backers of the project are withholding a start of operations, pending action on their application for tax exemption.

The Hillside Housing corporation has the plans all drawn for a big housing project to wipe out a slum area in the Bronx, but there has been some hitch in its plans for wheeling a $4,000,000 loan out of the Reconstruction Finance corporation and the enterprise is not going so well.

Other projects in a more or less nebulous state look to the elimination of slum areas in Brooklyn and Queens.

Man Claims Record of 45 Years of Insomnia

Port Elizabeth, South Africa.—The record for insomnia is claimed by William Colson, seventy-three-year-old curio dealer, who on reading of the recent death of a woman who said she had not slept for 22 years stated he had had 45 years of complete sleeplessness.

"I have not slept a wink all this time, and I never feel the need," Mr. Colson declared. "I go to bed every night, though, because I formed the habit before I lost the power to sleep at the age of twenty-eight—and because there is nothing else to do at night."

Judge Refuses to Take Prunes in Lieu of Fine

The Dalles, Ore.—"The United States is not on a prune basis," ruled Police Judge Fish, when Fred Miller offered to pay a $50 reckless driving fine in dried prunes. He was paroled and told to raise the money as soon as he could.

Permits Barelegged Coeds

Warrensburg, Mo.—Mrs. O. L. Houts, dean of women at the State Teachers college here, has ruled that women students may attend classes without wearing hose. Economy and heat were given as reasons for her action.

Jewelers Turn Junk Dealers

Bangor, Maine.—This city's jewelers have been obliged to take out licenses as "junk dealers" because they have begun to advertise, "Wanted—Old Gold."

Seal for the N. R. A. Co-Operators

Every business firm or individual who agrees to co-operate with the government in its national recovery program is entitled to use this seal, which is endorsed by the President. The rather futuristic eagle holds with the talons of one foot a cog symbolizing labor's place in the machine age, and with the other claw the zig-zag lines representing electricity.

Howe About:

Welfare Workers

Baseball

Fundamental Truths

By ED HOWE

WELFARE workers have always robbed the poor as cruelly as the politicians have robbed the people. The earliest hook and public speaker began with a plea for the poor, and the clamor has grown ever since, but the poor have not been relieved. Welfare workers seem to prefer to keep the poor as exhibits when they inaugurate a new drive, as teachers exhibit children when school directors are being appealed to for another appropriation. The present world-wide poverty is disgraceful; had we handled ourselves with the intelligence and vigor we are capable of, have actually shown in other ways, poverty would not exist.

O. O. McIntyre says baseball is slowly passing out, and must inevitably disappear. I hope so; baseball has become one of the greatest American bores. The first ambition of an American youth should be to become a good provider for a family, a safe and respectable man in his community; to occupy a good job so capably he is more apt to be promoted than discharged. It is bad for a young man when his greatest ambition is to become a sandlot rowdy called Spec Hiltenshard or Red Brinkman.

There are millions of thinkers at present, and millions in the past have left records of their thoughts, yet few have ever recognized fundamental truths that should occur to almost anyone. One of such truths generally missed is that all men have equal rights in the world. You may say this right has been abundantly granted. It hasn't; no one grants rights except to the poor. Have the rich not been denied their rights from the beginning? And are we not lately agreed in denying the rights of the middle class? You may say again I am mistaken, but in this case I am not; no one is freely and generally granted human rights except the poor man, who will not take advantage of them.

In the few cases where writers have sound sense, they will not be understood unless extremely careful in expressing it. There is so much going on people will not bother long with paragraph or page not simply written and easily understood. Among the small number of men whose names attract my attention on encountering them in print is Benjamin DeCasseres. I do not know who he is; only that he seems to be struggling to make a living as a writer, has a good deal of real genius, and writes too much about the old days of heavy drinking and bartenders.

Lately he had two pages of paragraphs in a magazine, and I was able to understand only four of them:

1. The honest man is one whom the world both respects and plunders.
2. Belief of any kind is impossible without some degree of intolerance.
3. Whatever exists aspires to tell a petty lie about itself.
4. There is a kind of sweetness of character that is extremely disagreeable. (I have changed the last paragraph somewhat, as DeCasseres uses many objectionable words in his writings, mistakenly believing they add strength).

Young people should think about old age earlier than they generally do. Heedlessness, carelessness between fifteen and thirty result in many unnecessary troubles from thirty on.

The pleas of parents to children to behave is the one bit of human wisdom on which all men of all ages have agreed. The Cretans, the Babylonians, the Greeks, the Romans, left the same story: The better you behave, the better you will get along. It is the one Bible all men have haltingly accepted. I beg adults as well as young people to find the True Church early, and remain in it, in spite of frequent transgressions.

Dog story for O. O. McIntyre: As nice a girl of nineteen as I know owns a puv seven months old; and there never was a more useless, troublesome, lovable, impudent, natural or amusing nuisance. Being given a bone, and unable to get outside to properly bury it, he hid it in the bed of his mistress, and awoke her in the middle of the night vigorously digging it up. Another (and Mr. McIntyre will miss this, unless he is careful): A woman owns a bulldog very smart, good-natured and appreciative, but, alas, he is getting old. He usually sleeps on the floor in the bedroom of his rather elderly mistress. One morning, when she awoke, the dog was sound asleep, and his mistress addressed him affectionately. As he paid no attention, she then declared he no longer loved her, and threatened tears, etc. Finally the old dog, actually disposed to politeness, and really loving his mistress, could no longer avoid paying attention to the proprietress, so he very slowly began to yawn, to stretch. (This is the point of the story: his slow, deliberate recognition of the affection offered, owing to age. Finally, in his stretching, he managed to turn over, and went to sleep again).

No pope, professor, poet, statesman, patriot ever left a simple guide to direct simple people, although these are the guides we simple people are urged to follow.

New "Flying Wing" Gives Higher Speed

Four Miles a Minute Predicted for Device.

New York.—A new type of "flying wing" monoplane, which is expected to attain a high speed of four miles a minute with two engines of 125 small power, is under construction behind barred doors of a western plant, it was revealed here. Wind tunnel tests conducted by Prof. Alexander Klemin of the Guggenheim school of aeronautics at New York university, reveal the high performance possibilities of the new craft.

The new plane represents no radical departure. The four-mile-a-minute performance on two engines of 125 horse power each is obtained by almost perfect stream lining, plus the setting of the engines to get the best results.

It is a cabin type with a capacity of four passengers, and if the performance of the first plane comes up to the wind tunnel measurements on the model it will be the fastest, low-power plane ever constructed.

Retractable Landing Gear.

The craft employs a retractable landing gear and has a short bullet-like fuselage which is streamlined into the wing so that only a little more than half of it is visible above the high wing lift from a head-on position. The two engines also are streamlined into the leading edge of the wing in projectile-like nacelles, which have very little frontal area. The landing gear retracts into the engine nacelles.

Professor Klemin was agreeably surprised by the performance data collected for the designer, Thomas M. Shelton of Denver, Colo.

The tests show that the craft with a full load will have an initial climb of 1,760 feet a minute, and with the flaps in use will have a landing speed of 55 miles an hour, which is low, considering the high speed of the plane. On one engine the craft will have a speed of 150 miles an hour and will be able to climb at the rate of 675 feet a minute.

The method of performance calculation used by Professor Klemin to arrive at the figures for the new plane, which Shelton will call the "gyroplane," is considered reliable by the aviation industry, and the results in the past in flight figures has consistently shown agreement with the tunnel calculations.

22 Per Cent Faster.

Shelton, in comparing the performance figures with those of other planes in the same class, said that the gyroplane would be 22 per cent faster than any marketed thus far. An outstanding safety factor in the design is the plane's capacity not only to fly but to climb on one engine.

Shelton said the project was financed completely and that the construction of the first plane would be pushed so that it may be tested in actual flight by the first of the year.

"After we iron out the 'bugs' in the four place craft we intend to build a 20-passenger ship with two engines of 700 horse power," he said. Although all the regular planes are to be built of metal, Shelton said the construction of the first would be of wood and fabric. The power units on the first model probably will be inverted in-line, air-cooled engines.

Paris.—Dr. Albert Calmette, under-director of the Pasteur institute and member of the Academy of Medicine, announced that the institute had stopped the growth of cancer in a white rat by using the cobra venom treatment discovered by Dr. Adolph Monne-Lesser of New York.

The rat cancer is a much simpler form than cancer in humans, he said.

"We proved successful in treatment of the cancer in a white rat," said Doctor Calmette, "after twelve injections of venom, each of which represented one-tenth of a mortal dose."

The Failure of Egotism

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

Cervantes wrote "Don Quixote" during the years of his confinement in prison at Seville. It is the story of one man's experience lived in a world of constantly changing conditions. The character of Don Quixote is intended to illustrate the folly of that spirit which refuses to consider the opinions of others, but is led on entirely by its own delusions. Cervantes keenly felt how irresponsible was that type of Spanish life which interpreted no higher law than "let us eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow we die." In order to portray the utter folly of this type of life, he wrote Don Quixote. Don Quixote is mad with egotism, typical of a prevailing Spanish madness, but typical also of a universal madness when imagination runs riot with reason. Cervantes was born in Spain in 1547 and died in 1616. The book represents the product of his best and more mature life, having been completed and published only eleven years before he died.

Some persons are so constituted that they refuse to listen to reason or be guided by the advice of others. Convinced they are absolutely right in their point of view, they spare no strength or time in self-sacrificing efforts to realize a definite objective. Self-centered egotism, like the madness portrayed by Cervantes, sooner or later brings one to a tragic end. No person was ever so well endowed that he did not need the wisdom and counsel of others.

For fourteen years J. G. Arthur of San Francisco has spent his leisure time making friends with the squirrels in Golden Gate park. He wears a flat green hat on which the small animals jump and stay to be fed.

Self-confidence is one thing and greatly to be desired, but that bragadocio spirit of "I know it all" will soon lead to disaster, if not complete failure. If we will not learn from the experiences of others, perhaps we deserve to fail. The greatest teacher in all history sought the companionship and counsel of a group of twelve men. The very best counsel many times comes from those who are nearest to us and who are more interested in our career than any other person. No scientist, however brilliant, ever speaks in terms of finality. No wise man ever tries to win in the battle of life alone. The foolish man, full of himself and dominated by his own conceit seldom accepts counsel when it is offered to him. The old philosopher Seneca wrote, "Consult your friend on all things, especially on those which respect yourself. His counsel may then be useful where your own self-love might impair your judgment."

Father Sage Says:

Financial experts do not seem to be at hand to warn the people when there is real danger. But as hind-sighters, they come out strong,

The Household

By Lydia Le Baron Walker

One of the New Style Gliders Admirably Suited to Use on Piazzas.

A modified living out-of-doors has gradually been developing in places which are not actual cities. It is a middle court between the restricted life of thickly settled districts, and the freedom of country life. Its expression is found in sun parlors, sleeping porches, screened-in verandas and screened-in rooms detached from houses. Roof gardens in cities are a decided trend in this direction, being the only opportunity afforded hotel and apartment dwellers for quick relaxation out-of-doors. When residences have even small garden plots they are often as carefully treated decoratively as the inside of the house so that they lure the family who remains in town to relax outdoors, or entertain under the open sky.

This phase of living has brought into use a definite kind of furniture and furnishing, no longer novel except in the introduction of new styles, as is true of other furnishings. For example, once a Gloucester hammock was delighted in, with its wide and comfortable swinging seat, long and ample enough for afternoon siestas or for sleeping on, in case of torrid heat indoors, or when extra company made another sleeping place necessary.

Modern Improvements.

Today, these are seldom found. The swinging standard hammock, "gliders" as they are termed, have supplanted the Gloucester and couch hammocks. In selecting one of these, the upholsterer should be removable or of waterproof material for porches where rain may blow in. Some of the latest models have separate mattresses with cushions for backs, and these can be carried indoors during storms. Others have smart waterproof textile upholstery. If the "glider" has neither of these protections, a waterproof cover for the mattress can be made which can be quickly tucked about the upholstery and be snapped or tied in position. This takes a bit longer to adjust, however, in case of sudden storms.

One of the great improvements in porch furnishings is in these attractive waterproof materials. They come in choice patterns, gay and cheerful as a garden in bloom. Or in beautiful plain colors, heavy and strong, or soft and almost thin. These latter are good for window curtains, while the heavier ones are best for upholstery and cushions. Never before has there been so wide a variety of more beautiful patterns in waterproof and sun-proof, textiles for out-door living rooms.

Balance in Furniture.

To preserve the balance between scantily furnished and overfurnished rooms is one of the problems of the home decorator. In the first instance, although the furniture may be adequate, the rooms have a bare appearance which robs them of the needed cozy welcoming character. There is a curious aloofness about the pieces in a scantily furnished room which is sapping to cordiality. It indicates either lack of funds to buy wanted articles, or an institutional trend in the nature of the home decorator. The woman may not be aware of this tendency, but the rooms betray it.

The well-furnished house must be carefully considered, for it should have in it every needed thing, and as many labor-saving devices as can be afforded. It should not be so full that it suggests work to keep it clean, nor should it be so lacking in furniture that it has a bare appearance. It should suggest comfort, restfulness and that home attribute of coziness which is instilled by having loved things about.

Whittemore

Articles written about the early history of the county and the various villages and cities prove to be very interesting. Some have been published both in the local and daily newspapers recently.

Blackberries seem to be very abundant this year.

A great many of the tourist camps and lake resort owners report that there are almost as many tourists as there were in normal years.

A great many of the younger set are anxiously awaiting the opening of school and will be disappointed to learn that some of the schools have postponed their opening dates because of financial reasons.

A report on the financial success of the first sales tax collection should provide an idea as to its future revenues.

The early potato crop was light due to the lack of sufficient moisture.

The sail boat races are still drawing considerable interest.

SIX PEOPLE EXPRESS THEIR OPINIONS ON THE VALUE OF TELEPHONE SERVICE

Each day, a metropolitan newspaper asks several persons a question and publishes their answers. Recently, six were asked, "Do you consider a telephone in your home a luxury or a necessity?" Each answered, "It's a necessity!"

A MERCHANT said: "The other day our youngster had an accident, and my wife immediately called a doctor and me. That one call was worth the cost of the service for a year."

A MUSICIAN said: "I get many contracts over my telephone that I would not get otherwise."

A SALESMAN said that he could economize on many things, but not on his telephone, as in emergencies it might be worth its cost for years.

ANOTHER SALESMAN replied that he and his wife cancelled their telephone service to save money, but after a month of inconvenience decided a telephone was an absolute necessity.

A MANUFACTURER referred to the value of a telephone in emergencies.

A MANAGER regarded the telephone as worth more to his wife than its cost, by saving her time and trouble.

First Letter Carriers
The First Congress of the United States convened March 4, 1789. On February 20, 1792, it passed an act to reorganize the post office system and to extend franking privileges to members of congress. The second congress provided that "letter carriers are to be employed at such post offices as the postmaster general may direct, for delivery of letters, who may collect on each letter two cents, unless persons lodge in the post office a request that their letters be not delivered." The date was May 8, 1794, and the act was not repealed until 1872.

First Public Library
The first public library in the United States was built in 1750. Rhode Island can boast the honor of housing the first collection of books to be given over to public use. Before this time home owners had been gradually collecting small libraries, and also were including at this time in their home making cases for books and shelves and stands for favored volumes. The library was founded by Stephen Hopkins.

LONG LAKE

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Streeter made a trip to Ann Arbor on Tuesday of this week.
John Mortenson is suffering from a severe case of ivy poisoning.
There was considerable excitement in town last Sunday morning when a cow belonging to Robert Buck was found in the big ditch bordering the County Road. It was necessary to call a large crew of men and the service of a truck to get her out. The owner is very thankful to the men for their kindness as he was out of town when it happened.
Rev. Byler of South Branch was a caller here last Friday.
An ice cream social was held last Wednesday evening on Kruse's lawn to help raise the piano fund for the Sunday school.
Rev. and Mrs. Gressley are spending ten days at their home in Toledo, Ohio.

Perfume Industry
An interesting connection with the perfume industry in Bermuda is the fact that a number of years ago, a young English chemist conceived the idea of salvaging the scent of the lily blossoms, which are thrown away because the bulbs are considered more valuable. He worked at research and experimentation for four years, and finally solved the problem by employing the enfleurage method of extraction. The extraction plant has become a popular place for tourists.

Loss by Forest Fires
A very rough approximation of the loss by forest fires in the United States for the five-year period ending, 1930 is 41,000,000 acres destroyed, valued at approximately $62,000,000.

Organ of Bamboo
A church in the Philippines has an organ made entirely of bamboo.

Confidence Transports Credit
Credit is transported, not by airplanes or wireless waves, but by something imperceptible—confidence.

Production of Licorice
Licorice has not become a successful commercial crop. It grows wild over large areas in Spain, Italy, southern Russia, Asia Minor and southern Asia. This country, however, uses quantities of licorice. Ninety per cent of it finds its way into the tobacco industry, about 5 per cent into confectionery, and about 5 per cent into medicine. Its principal medicinal use is to disguise the taste of acid drugs.

La Marseillaise Thrilling
The martial strains of "La Marseillaise" are always thrilling. It was composed by Capt. Rouget de Lisle, a young artillery officer, while quartered in Strasbourg in 1792. He wrote it one winter evening, and sang it the next morning to a group of friends at the home of Baron Dietrich, mayor of the city. It stirred the furor of patriotism whenever it was played or sung. The insurgents of the French revolution assembled at Marseilles marched on Paris to its strains, and chanted it during the attack on the Tuilleries.

National Forest Timber For Sale

Sealed bids will be received by the Regional Forester, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, up to and including August 28, 1933 for all the merchantable dead jack pine pulpwood and all the live jack pine pulpwood marked or designated for cutting on an area embracing approximately 3800 acres lying within sections 26, 27, 28 and 35, T. 26 N., R. 1 W., section 20, T. 26 N., R. 1 E.; section 31, T. 26 N., R. 2 E.; sections 34 and 35, T. 26 N., R. 1 E. and section 5, T. 25 N., R. 2 E., Michigan principal meridian, Big Creek unit, Huron National Forest, Michigan, estimated to be 7200 cords of jack pine pulpwood, more or less. No bid of less than 75 cents per cord will be considered. A cooperative deposit of 25 cents net cord for all pulpwood in addition to the price bid for stumpage will be required. $500 must be deposited with each bid, to be applied on the purchase price, refunded, or retained in part as liquidated damages, according to the conditions of the sale. The right to reject any and all bids is reserved. Before bids are submitted full information concerning the timber, the conditions of sale, and the submission of bids should be obtained from the Forest Supervisor, East Tawas, Michigan, or the Regional Forester, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

China was the first, in the long long ago, to have an examination system as a test for state employment.

Population of the World
There are many millions of persons on earth who are unknown to the census taker, so there are no reliable figures on the population of the world. But the International Statistical Institute of the League of Nations, at Geneva, estimated in 1930 that there were more than two billion human beings on the earth. In the United States there were 62,137,050 males and 60,637,965 females.

Papa Pigeons Helpful
When young pigeons are hatched it is the male that does the greater part of the feeding. The Pouter pigeon is rather given to philandering during the breeding season. For this reason breeders of this variety of pigeons usually provide auxiliary parents to help care for the young.

Camouflage in Birdland
A yellow warbler commonly found throughout the eastern states in summer frequently defeats the purpose of the cow-bird, that makes a practice of laying its egg in the warbler's nest to be hatched, by a clever ruse. It burles the strange egg by building a new nest on top of the first one.

Trade-Marking P. O. Stamps
The word "cave" overprinted on the postage stamps of Ceylon is the name of a large mercantile firm in that colony and is placed on the stamps to prevent theft by employees. Such practice is not allowed in the United States, but similar control is effected by allowing concerns to perforate their initials or monogram in the stamps.

SYNOPSIS

With his yacht, the Intrepid, abandoned by its crew, Felix Horton, millionaire, with his mother, his daughter Nan, and Roy Stuart, puts into Squaw Harbor, Alaska. He engages a bunch of nondescript men to man the yacht. A gigantic Pole, Sandomar, is their leader. Captain Waymire, the Intrepid's skipper, is an old friend of Eric's. Eric, unemployed sailor, and Eric engages to sail as chief officer. Nan and Eric indulge in a moonlight flirtation, which brings them both to the threshold of love. The Intrepid is wrecked. Eric takes command of a small boat, with Horton and his party. Unable to help, they watch Sandomar kill Captain Waymire and leave the ship with his crew. On landing, they learn there is no communication with the outside world. Fireheart, priestess of the island, descended from a white man in the remote past, knowing a little English, welcomes the castaways. Sandomar declares there shall be no law on the island, but Eric, having the only gun, crows him for the time, declaring he is the law. He lays out work for all. Eric's love for Nan swells, and he tells her he means to win her for his mate. She is not unwilling. Fireheart claims Eric as her own, and realizing the importance of her friendship he is forced to temporize. Defending himself from attack, Eric's revolver apparently misfires. Sandomar, deaf, does not hear the trigger fall, nor realize Eric's defenselessness. He turns away and charges follows him. Eric finds the revolver, which had been Waymire's, is rim-fire, while five of its six cartridges are center-fire. Eric has one effective cartridge. He determines on a showdown, calling a meeting, at which "Swede," makes an attempt on his life. He uses his one cartridge, killing "Swede," but is left defenseless, though master of the situation, since he alone knows his gun is useless.

With the sensation of sudden bitter cold in his vitals, he sprang to his feet and whirled. He was not a split second too soon, and quite possibly too late. Destruction in the shape of a hundred-pound boulder started lunging down the bluff.

Nan was sitting in the trough of the slope, in the certain track of the missile. Even a glancing blow would hurl her off the ledge, to the churning water below. Yet two factors fought for her—one was Eric leaping toward her now, his hand sweeping toward hers. The other was the shape of the stone, not round but angular, so that it made toward her in angry bounds, sometimes sliding on the steep escarpment, rather than in an accelerating cannon-ball roll.

Struggling up, her hand snatched his. He seemed to jerk her headlong through the air into his arms. Thunder rattled in her ear, a passing whirlwind raised the hair on her head, and the big rock splashed impotently into the sea.

Eric's arm clung about her shoulders, pressing her close as though he could never let her go.

"There's some one up there," she gasped.

"It's Fireheart."

"Did she do this thing?"

"Perhaps not. Many of those boulders start at a touch. But we've got to find out."

He turned and led the way up the steep trail. They found Fireheart on the summit, her arms rigid at her sides, her head thrown back, a sharp agony on her face. Quietly Eric spoke her name.

"I no roll the stone," she muttered. "I see him on brink, just over white girl, I touch him, and evil spirit get in Fireheart's hand, give big push."

"I understand," Nan said. "Don't worry about it any more."

"Fireheart no understand." The slanted eyes were thin crescents of glittering jet. "Why White Chief jump up, almost get hit himself, jerk you out of way? Guess maybe he no catch love for Fireheart because he love you."

Nan knew that she must answer straight. This was neither the time nor the place for subtleties. All things had been reduced to their primal simplicity. She and Fireheart were just two society girls and squaw, but just two maidens ripe for mating; and Eric completed the triangle that is the first form, the eternal symbol of love-selection that has evolved mankind.

"He doesn't love me," Nan said quietly. "He told me so."

"How Fireheart know? Maybe you tell big lie." Fiercely she whirled to Eric. "She say you no love her. Then you promise no try to get her, let Roy marry her quick."

"I can't promise that. I can't make a promise—that I may—have to break."

"I don't think I love him, yet. But if you think best—I'll make a marriage of convenience."

For a long time there was no sound but the angry surge of the waves under the cliff, and the shriek of the sea-birds.

Eric was called to himself at last by the flick of a long shadow at the corner of his eye. He was never to know why it startled him so, and could only thank some sixth sense which his life's war with the raw powers of the North had nurtured in his brain. His head never turned, but his eyes moved in their sockets.

Along the crest of the bluff, forty feet up, Fireheart came stealing. She was almost directly behind and over Nan.

Eric had caught only one glimpse of the priestess when she vanished behind the big boulders of the summit.

"I can't promise that. I can't make a promise—that I may—have to break."

Eric's heart leaped like a king-salmon free of the barb, triumphant from the dark water, but the squaw's black eyes glowed like those of some tenacled bottom-thing, hauled up by the trawls. "Fireheart see now. She no forget. Her love is big ocean in sunlight, bright, warm, good, but her no love is leap white floe come down from North, no look across, no make hole through, grind up big rocks to little pebble."

"Won't you still be our friend?" Eric asked.

Fireheart shook her head sullenly. "Love, him change to no-love, taste bitter in mouth." She raised her arms in an imperious and dramatic gesture. "I am Fireheart, priestess of Lost People. Aleuts, they do what I say. I tell 'em you no my friend, I tell 'em watch chance, turn quick with spears when you no have little gun, kill you, drive you away. Big god who come from West, he do what Fireheart say too. I tell him bring you bad luck, make you die slow, plenty hurt. Fireheart, she wish stone run over you both, knock you into sea."

Exile on Forlorn island changed slowly from an incredible dream to vivid reality. Eric's stern reign seemed like that of an ancient dynasty, the natural order of things. It was commonplace to be living in the hourly threat of Sandomar's fury, Fireheart's malice. As Nan toiled with her slant-eyed sisters, less and less often did her swift hands pause and her eyes film over as she day-dreamed of a lost world, a pre-existence half-forgotten.

Yet it was not all twilight. Nan's little muscles hardened under strain, and sometimes she was surprised at the airy swing of her stride, the depth and freedom of her breathing. Her calloused hands no longer bled at the fish-cleaning; though she might crawl in her fur-bred dizziness with fatigue, she sprang out at sunrise with a tingle in her veins and a glow on her tawny skin. She became skillful with the nets, deadly with the salmon spear—and a good catch was almost as satisfactory as a bridge prize long ago, before her soul had transmigrated to the body of a white squaw. As the summer advanced, she was given new tasks, most of them hard, many of them perilous, but most of all of them blood-stirring, breath-taking.

In these wild days, her laughter as well as her tears seemed easy to flow. Her thrills were no longer "synthetic"; she was warmer, less self-centered. This growth was revealed, not only in her quick moods—mirth, indignation, pity, loneliness—but subtly in her face. Her hands grew red and calloused, but in the shadow of her parka-hood the luster of her hazel eyes set Roy's cool head awl, and the curve of her full lips made Eric's viking heart glow with the lust of conquest.

It was the month of ripening, but to flower, fledging in the nest to winged courier of the air; but Nan's friendship for Roy had not yet ripened into love. Marriage with him would still be for convenience, not for deep need of her heart and soul. And it was true that Eric stole too often into her thoughts. Her good sense told her that Eric could never share the scenes to which sometime she must return—that beyond these crags and windy wastes they would have little in common—but how dreamy those scenes became, and how vivid and real the sand-dunes of Forlorn Island! The barrier between her and the blond viking was not half so strong as the sea reefs enforcing her exile. Future shipwreck as his mate was a far-tomorrow's evil, but the shelter of his arms was today's need.

In the maze of adventure, part and parcel of her exile, she saw Eric in a new light. One warm afternoon at the drying racks, a young squaw at her side gave a sudden, sharp gasp. Wheeling, she beheld the shadow of agony fall on the leathern face, linger a few poignant seconds, then pass slowly away.

"What is it?" Nan begged.

The squaw, a last fall's bride named Chigum (Flower), could not understand the words, but the quick pity in the alien eyes went straight to her heart. An expression into a great artist could paint stole into the dark countenance. Nan's own heart leaped wildly. Here was something imperiously sad, yet close to the sublime, primal, eternal.

A forlorn half smile touched the coarse lips. The eyes gazed off as into another world, down the long vista of the centuries with that far, magic sight which no son of Adam ever dreamed, and which comes to Eve's daughters only a few times from the cradle to the grave. "Koticky," she answered simply. At once she began to put her flint tools into her seal-hide poke, signifying that she would go now to another labor.

"Koticky" was a word that Nan had learned. It meant "baby." As she stared, bewildered, Chigum turned and trudged away toward her turf-house. The other squaws grunted and went back to drying fish.

"Aren't you going with her?" Nan demanded.

They looked up, puzzled, and one of them spoke in a tone dark with fatalism. At once Nan realized that she alone must answer the call. Mother Horton and Marie were in the berry-flats, out of reach; Eric and the hunters were spearing sea-lions on the far beach. With a bitter cry, Nan dropped her own tools and hurried after the squat figure reeling to her dread appointment.

Camping Out in Railway Coaches in England

ENGLISH railway companies this summer have fitted out coaches as camping outfits and find they are popular and easily rented. Each coach accommodates six persons and has two bedrooms, living room and kitchen with all utensils. The coach may be booked at a certain station and conveyed to the camping site at moderate cost.

CHILDREN'S STORY

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

JERRY FOLLOWS HIS OLD PLAN

PETER RABBIT and Hooty the Owl were not the only ones interested in the building of Jerry Muskrat's new house. Oh, my, no. Every one around the Smiling Pool was interested. It was very much the same as it would be if a new house were being built near where you live. You know how interested in that house every single neighbor would be.

Just so at the Smiling Pool there was a great deal of interest in what Jerry was doing. Grandfather Frog was interested. Billy Mink and Little Joe Otter were interested. Redwing the Blackbird was interested. Spotty the Turtle was interested. You see it gave them something to think about and talk about and criticize. So they spent a great deal of time watching Jerry work, and giving him advice which he didn't ask for and didn't heed.

"Chug-a-rum!" exclaimed Grandfather Frog abruptly from the big green lilypond on which he was sitting. "Chug-a-rum! I suppose, Jerry Muskrat, you will build a finer house than you had before."

"I hope it will be a little better," replied Jerry modestly. "I ought to be able to build it a little better after what I learned in building the first one. Anyway it will be safer, because it will not be in danger of being swept away if there should be a flood next spring. I will make it a little larger than the old one and the foundations will be broader."

"I suppose that means that you will have more rooms in it," said Grandfather Frog, rolling his big goggle eyes so as to stare at Jerry.

"More room but not more rooms," replied Jerry. "I shall follow the same plan as the old one was built on."

"Huh!" exclaimed Grandfather Frog. "Huh! I should think that while you are about it you would try to improve on that old plan and have something really new. I would if I were foolish enough to waste a lot of good time in hard work building a house. I'm thankful I don't have need of a house, but if I did and had to build a new one I certainly would try to make it enough different from the old one to know that I really had a new one. What's your idea in making it just like the old one?"

"As I've already told you, it won't be just like the old one; it will be bigger and better," replied Jerry with considerable dignity. "It will simply be on the same plan as the old one because that plan just exactly suits me. Just as it suited my father and my grandfather and great-grandfather and my—"

"Hold on!" exclaimed Grandfather Frog hastily. "You don't need to go back in your family history to the days when the world was young; I know all about it. Some people are set in their ways. They certainly are set in their ways. Because you, grandfather-a-thousand-times-removed did a certain thing in a certain way is no reason that you should do that same thing in exactly that same way."

"Ho!" cried Jerry Muskrat. "Ho! That is queer talk from you, Grandfather Frog! That certainly is queer talk from you, who are living today just as your grandfathers way back in the beginning of things lived. I hope I have sense enough to know that when I have a thing which exactly suits me it would be worse than foolish to try to change it. Here comes Redtail the Hawk!"

"Chug-a-rum!" exclaimed Grandfather Frog and dived headlong into the Smiling Pool. Jerry grinned and then quietly sank from sight himself.

GRAPHIC GOLF

PITCH AND ROLL

WITHIN a short distance of the pin and where the hole lies well back from the edge of the green, Bob Jones generally pitches short, allowing the ball to roll the rest of the way. The ball is pitched sufficiently, however, to allow it to land on the putting green itself. No chance is taken of irregularity of the ground surface; the shot, which might occur if the ball came down on the fairway at. For this reason Jones increases the loft of his club in ratio to the ball's distance from the green. Near the putting surface a mashie iron can be used, the ball pitched to the edge and plenty of roll added. Further back a more lofted club is required to send the ball in an arc that will be sure to reach the vicinity of the green and stop near the cup. Thus the mashie, mashie niblick and niblick can be used at time for this play. The shot is generally straightforward without a sign of backspin.

bit of paprika for added seasoning. Spread on whole wheat or rye bread.

Sardine Sandwich.

Take one cupful of minced sardines, one-half cupful of stuffed olives chopped, one teaspoonful of scraped onion, one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, one tablespoonful of lemon juice and three tablespoonfuls of cream. Mix and spread on buttered brown bread.

Loebster and Celery Sandwich.

Mince fine the meat of a fresh boiled lobster. Moisten with heavy mayonnaise, add a dash of cayenne and two teaspoonfuls of minced white celery leaves. Spread on rounds of bread and decorate with a stuffed olive. These are served open, or they may be covered with another slice of bread and use the stuffed olives minced.

Pineapple and Tuna Fish Sandwich.

Take one can of tuna, drain and flake, add salt and pepper and two tablespoonfuls of chopped pickle, add french dressing to soften and then add three-fourths of a cupful of drained crushed pineapple. Spread on buttered bread.

Salmon with lemon juice mixed to a paste and spread on bread, and flaked salmon with a good boiled salad dressing spread on buttered rye bread make most satisfying sandwiches.

Events in the Lives of Little Men

New Vistas for "Old Age"

The Philosophically Minded Person Will Discover Numerous Compensations and Enjoyments for That Period of Declining Activity.

Ever since the days of Cicero's "De Senectute," which we labored over in junior high, as they call it now, men have been fretting about old age, a writer in the Indianapolis News comments. It is generally considered a time of life to be dreaded because of the sadness connected with declining activity. But sometimes the window opens upon a new vista, and we follow Vida T. Scudder's pages in the Atlantic with joy because they seem so sane.

Having suddenly found herself arrived at the age of seventy, Miss Scudder is inspired to take up her pen for the benefit of those in like predicament. She regards it as a matter of triumph, rather than discouragement, to have reached a time when one may be glad to be left off of committees and like responsibilities, and spend the remainder of her days in the enjoyment of the scenes of life from the shelf to which she has been relegated, when one may read, not classics or any prescribed course, but just what has long been coveted as desirable or particularly restful.

Lady Mary Wortley Montague evidently had a like aspiration, writing to her daughter, Lady Bute: "Daughter, daughter! Don't scold, don't call names. You are always abusing my pleasures, which is what no mortal will bear. Trash, lumber, and stuff are the titles you give to my favorite amusements. We all have our play things; happy are they that can be contented with those they can obtain; those hours are spent in the wisest manner that can easiest shade the ills of life and are the least productive of ill consequences. . . . I indulge with all the art I can, my taste for reading. If I would confine it to

Trend to Spectacular in Man's Mental Focus

It seems that the human mind, individual or collective, is not able to focus upon more than one thing at a time. The queer thing is that this human mind prefers to focus upon the spectacular rather than upon the lasting.

Back in 1806 a lonely Moravian monk discovered the laws of heredity which now stand as the bedrock of the life sciences. No one in 1800 cared to take a look at this discovery for every one was arguing about some incidental gossip which grew out of Darwin's "Origin of Species," published in 1859. By 1900 they were tired of the incidental and rather spectacular gossiping about Darwin. This gave the scientists a chance to very desirable ends." How Lady Mary would have enjoyed a jig-saw puzzle! The typical old lady of a generation but lately gone, sat by the fire with white cap and spectacles, knitting socks for the whole family. Today, she dons a stylish stout, wears the new Oxford, in lieu of the some what passee forgette, and sallies forth to solve problems of politics or contract bridge. A dear young Housier friend sent me the following original verse:

GRANDMOTHERS
Whenever I think of grandmothers,
I think of cherished things;
Of creamy delicate old face,
And dear remembered dreams.
I think of modest mignonette
Dew-drenched at new day's dawn;
Of shaded lights on autumn night,
And sound of summer rain;
Of new-born baby's lips against
My breast that stings with pain;
Of work-worn hands, that yet are soft
That minister with loving care;
Of love that makes 'em care;
A shining halo wear.
Oh precious, priceless grandmothers!
Without you, how great death!
Oh grandmothers! Life shows in you
True beauty on the earth.

resurrect the monk. And so the world of fundamental information took on new life.

Here we are today wrangling about economic questions. Specifically about dollars and taxes. Such things are incidental and more or less spectacular. We will, of course, keep on with such subjects until some one finds a way to focus our attention on unemployment. The man who succeeds in focusing the public attention on this point will be calling us back to something fundamental. There are those who seem to think that discovery is soon to be made.—Washington Star.

Really Big Thing

The great thing in the world is not so much to seek happiness as to earn peace and self-respect.

JOY TO BE HAD IN "WORD BOOK"

Eighteenth-Century Idea This Modern Age Will Find Worth While.

Our language is a superb inheritance, blessed with richer variety of expression and implicit with a more ranging music than most other living tongues. It has plith, color and energy. Its flexibility and scope are enormous—as might be expected from a tongue dowered out of the precision and beauty of Greek, the rolling vowel music of Latin, the northern strains of Celt, Angle and Saxon. Surely, as heirs to this bequest and as living contributors to it, we should not be content without exploring it. To do so would be like emulating the beggar, who, coming into a fortune, was satisfied with a few worn counters when the gold coin of the realm was his for the seeking.

In a century now long forgotten men and women were accustomed to keep what they described as "commonplace books"—notebooks in which one entered any quotations of prose or verse which seemed apposite, wise or endowed with beauty and felicity of expression. It was a happy idea. Any who desire to discover what effect it had upon the mind of an age might do well to explore a bit into Eighteenth-century letters.

A word book, wherein one jots down any unfamiliar word he meets with in the reading of good books, together with its verified meaning, will go far to rescue him from present afflictions that beset our language as it is written. Only one who has tried this expedient knows the fun it offers, the renewed sense of vitality in thought, the sharper edge given ideas; and, simultaneously, the rapid growth of discriminative taste in reading.—Boston Globe.

First College Fraternity
The first American college fraternity of which there is record was organized at the College of William and Mary in Williamsburg, Va., in 1750. It was known as the Flat Hat club. It was secret, literary and social, and existed until 1772. Thomas Jefferson and Edmund Randolph were members.

Kismet—Fate
In Arabic the word kismet is "kismet" and means fate. This word was used by Mohammed when he preached in the Koran the duty of submission to all that God had preordained. He believed that a man's every action was predestined, yet he never suggested the folly of struggling against an adverse doom. The doctrine of Kismet has prompted Mohammedans to utmost heroism and fortitude in the cause of their religion.

show that the income from the water system would pay for the project in the allotted time.

The Tawas City Improvement association has endorsed the project and it was one of the principal subjects under discussion at a meeting held at the American Legion billet last Monday evening. A representative number of Tawas City citizens were present and it was the unanimous opinion that a loan from the government to build a water works and sanitary sewer system was a very practical project, especially as the cost would not be spread on the tax rolls, but would be met through money received in payment of water service.

Among those who took part in the discussion at the meeting were Major E. M. Connor of Milwaukee and Will Hartley of Pontiac. Both men are interested in Tawas City and told of the benefits which would come from a water works system here. Major Connor said that he planned to later make his home here and he hoped that the water works project would be adopted.

Prices Will Advance

The Federal Government having levied an additional "floor tax" on cotton fabrics used in the manufacture of tires, it is natural that tire prices must advance sufficiently to dissipate this additional manufacturing cost.

PRICES: Late financial reports from most tire companies show heavy financial losses. Though the Federal Government wishes every industry to make a reasonable profit on investments, before the majority of tire manufacturers can start showing a reasonable profit, tire prices must advance at least an additional 25 per cent.

Tire prices are expected to go up any day—so NOW is the time to equip your car or truck with Corduroy DeLuxe tires and tubes. Then you can just forget the usual tire worries. You will be pleased, because you have the most liberal DeLuxe guarantee, and the PRICE would be about the same as that asked for secondary quality in most makes.
