PRIVATE LIFE OF FINANCIER IS EXCITING TOPIC

Paramount's "Big Executive," exciting drama of the private life of a handsome young Wall Street king, shows Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, September 3-4-5, at the Rivoli Theatre, Tawas City. Ricardo Cortez, Richard Bennett, Elizabeth Young and Sharon Lynne are prominent in the large cast. The film, an original by Alice Duer Miller, famous Saturday Evening Post writer, was directed by Erle Kenton.

"Big Executive" is the story of a new-generation financier played by Ricardo Cortez, who skyrockets to fortune with his clever manipulations in the market. He has clear sailing until he attempts to swing a deal with a gruff, blustering, old-school financial power, played by Richard Bennett.

Complications ensue when Bennett discovers that Cortez is in love with his great-granddaughter, and he decides to break the impending match and Cortez at the same time.

A dramatic series of events follows, in which the two powerful rivals are seen gathering their forces, each attempting to strip the other of power, glory and wealth. The film reaches its conclusion in an exciting and unusual climax.

Making her screen debut in "Big Executive" is Elizabeth Young, prominent New York society girl, who plays the role of the Commodore's great-granddaughter.

$80,000.00 WILL BE USED ON TRUNK LINE ROADS

Last week a notice was sent to all the local papers by the State Highway Department giving the allotment under the Federal Public Works Act for the various counties. This notice as given to The Herald stated that Isosco county was to receive $80,000. There seem to be quite a few who misunderstood this statement and interpreted the same to mean that this amount of money was being sent to this county.

The article referred only to the distribution of the Federal funds to be used by the state on state trunk line construction within the county. In Isosco this money is to be used in the construction of the new Shore road pavement and other state trunk lines now under construction which have been designated by the State Highway Commissioner as secondary roads and approved by the Federal government.

IOSCOS DEFFATED BY MIKADO SUNDAY, 6-4

Mikado defeated the Isosco County Independents in a loosely played game at the Sand Lake diamond last Sunday by a 6 to 4 score. The Isoscos were outslugged by their opponents by a wide margin, the Mikado boys connecting for 15 safeties off Frank's offerings, while the I. C. I. team could muster but six hits at the expense of Main and Lane. Although errors were numerous on both sides, the Isoscos turned in a better day in the field than did their opponents.

MONTGOMERY HAS SCORING ROLE AS SHADY PROMOTER

Described as a glittering panorama of New York life from Battery Park to Harlem, "Made on Broadway" comes to the Family Theatre, East Tawas, on Thursday and Friday, September 7-8, with Robert Montgomery and Sally Eilers, two of the screen's most popular younger players, co-starred for the first time.

Montgomery is said to have another high-speed comedy role as Jeff Bidwell, super-fixer, "wise guy" and debonaire gambler who hoodwinks society and reaps a harvest on Broadway. Miss Eilers undergoes an interesting character development as the bedraggled cafe waitress who is rescued from a watery grave by Montgomery and who subsequently becomes one of Manhattan's most pampered playgirls.

The unusually strong cast also features Madge Evans as the ex-wife who tries to help Montgomery decide a course of action during his mad career as a high-pressure public relation's expert, and the supporting players include the comic Eugene Pallette, C. Henry Gordon, Jean Parker, Ivan Ledebef, David Newell, Vince Barnett and Joseph Cawthorn.

TAWAS CITY WINS N. E. M. BASEBALL CHAMPIONSHIP WITH 12 STRAIGHT GAMES

The Tawas City Hi-Speed baseball team won the North Eastern Michigan league championship last Sunday when Roscommon forfeited the game. Only five members of the Roscommon team appeared at the local athletic field. This marked the twelfth consecutive victory the Tawas team has won this season, and with only two more games to be played, there is no chance of their being ousted from the top position.

This is the first championship any baseball team has won for Tawas City, and the boys are real proud of their achievement. Baseball interest among the fans has been revived this year, and the team appreciated the large turn-outs at every game, whether at the local or on visiting fields. Credit for the remarkable success of the team cannot be given to any one or two players, as the substitutes have worked as hard as the regular playing members during the progress of all the games. Harmony among the players, diligent practice sessions, and a never-say-die spirit has won the championship for Tawas City. The two games played with East Tawas, the Roscommon and Prudenville games were won by late inning rallies, typical examples of the fighting spirit that prevailed with the team. Congratulations and good luck for the remainder of the season!

With the aid of Tawas City's substitutes a game was played, nevertheless, on Sunday. The Hi-Speed team was too much for them, however, and they won with ease, 19-0. The Hi-Speed sluggers pounded the ball to all corners of the lot, and with Walter Moeller, ace right-hander, on the mound, the result of the game was never in doubt. Only four hits were made off his deceptive delivery, while the local lads made (Turn to No. 2, Back Page)

LAUGHS, TEARS AND REAL THRILLS IN 'TUGBOAT ANNIE'

Marie Dressler and Wallace Beery in "Tugboat Annie," their first appearance since "Min and Bill," are the attraction, sometimes hilariously funny, sometimes tensely dramatic, but always entertaining, at the Family Theatre, East Tawas, where the long-awaited filmization of Norman Reilly Raine's Saturday Evening Post stories is playing on Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, September 3-4-5-6, with a matinee on Sunday and Monday (Labor Day).

The public has long clamored for another Dressler-Beery picture, and in the present story Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has provided an ideal one. There are hilarious quarrels between the redoubtable feminine tugboat captain and her shiftless, good-natured husband; mother-love furnishes a poignant heart interest, and there is a tremendous dramatic climax in the amazing episode in the engine room.

Robert Young, who scored in "Hell Below," is seen as the young captain. Maureen O'Sullivan has the romantic feminine lead, and the cast also includes Willard Robertson, Tammany Young, Frankie Darro, Jack Pennick and Paul Hurst.

T. B. Y. A. ENDS SUCCESSFUL YACHT SEASON

Well, the yacht races are over, and they proved to be very interesting events. Fine weather during the whole week, a large number of boats and enthusiastic sailors and spectators made the regatta a success.

Two of the cups raced for are on exhibition in the Moeller Bros. display windows. The little boat "Gull" in class B, owned by Harold Moeller of Tawas City, showed the most consistent performance during the entire series, winning in the class boats of her size, and also in the club's season races; the smaller cup which becomes hers for keeps, and the beautiful trophy cup presented by Mrs. Olive Dwight and Miss Mary I. Dwight. This cup to be won annually three times, when it becomes the property of the three times winner.

One cup goes to the "Sero" for first place in the season Tawas Bay Yacht Association class A races, one cup to the cat boat "Lipstick," of Bay City, and one cup to the class boat "Gamble," owned by James Nesbit, for the week's races of the class boats.

The class boat "Y-Not" came within three points of the "Gamble" for first place, but missed a race, which counted against her. This was also the case with the "Pelican" from Alpena, in the small class, which showed a most consistent series of wins, but missed one race, thus throwing the race to the "Wee Scott" and the "Gull", which were tied for first place and raced off on Sunday, August 27th. This race was won handily by the "Gull," sailed by Carl Babcock and lady crew. The "Gamble" was sailed by her owner during the week, and certainly made a good show with her old and somewhat indifferent rig and sail plan, as compared with the new and trim outfits of the class boats with their Marconi rigs.

The sloop "Dale" from Alpena showed herself the peer of any and all the boats in the various races and classes, but was handicapped four minutes because of an extra two feet of water-line. The way she caught and passed the other boats at times when she was far astern and came to the front was most impressive.

Taken all in all, the regatta was most successfully managed and handled, and great credit is due to all those who

Canada's "Mounties" Now Sixty Years Old

Efficient Police Force Observes Its Anniversary.

Washington. — Canada's romantic and efficient police force—the Royal Canadian mounted police—is observing, this year, its sixtieth anniversary. A band of men, small in number, but strong in courage, experience, and hard training, have maintained law and order over a vast territory, reaching from the great plains north into the Yukon, and across the Arctic to Hudson Bay and Baffin Island.

"In 1870, when the government of Canada gained control over the unexplored lands of the great Northwest, it was confronted with the problem of protecting pioneer settlers," says a bulletin from the National Geographic society. "Warfare between powerful Indian tribes roaming the plains, discouraged the westward march of the white man. Whisky runners whose concoctions crazed the Indians also disturbed peaceful progress of intrepid pioneers. Two tin cups full of 'fire-water' bought a buffalo robe, and three gallons a good horse.

Covered Vast Territory.

"It was in answer to the need for curbing these unruly elements that the Northwest mounted police was organized in 1873 at Stone Fort, just south of Lake Winnipeg. An official bulletin issued to the first recruits tersely stated that 'the government will make use of any person connected with the force at any work that may be considered desirable.' The government has kept this promise through the years.

"After only a year's training 300 members of the police marched over 2,000 miles of unknown territory, restoring law and order from the Red river to the Rocky mountains. Treaties were made with the Indians, horse stealers and murderers brought to swift justice, and Fort Whoop-Up, stronghold of whisky traders, raided. Winter caught the 'Mounties' before they could make a return march, so a permanent camp was set up at Macleod, oldest town in southern Alberta. Calgary, another fort which they founded that year, has grown to be one of the most important towns of western Canada.

"As the work of the force increased, it became evident that a central station was a necessity. An uninhabited strip of prairie along 'Pile o' Bones Creek' was selected and inappropriately named Regina. For over half a century Regina served as headquarters for the Northwest mounted police. It was also for years the capital of the Northwest territories; and today, as the capital of Saskatchewan, is one of the most important industrial centers of middle western Canada, with a population of over 40,000.

"The Klondike gold rush of '98 brought a new emergency. Dawson grew up overnight, a stampede town with the usual number of saloons, dance halls, and gambling houses. It promised soon to rival Skagway, then controlled by 'Soapy Smith' and his gang, who robbed incoming tenderfeet and departing miners with equal success.

"A Yukon post was promptly established by the Northwest mounted police, and Dawson speedily transformed into a respectable and law-abiding town. A detachment was stationed at Shilkoot pass and White pass, two main gateways through which prospectors thronged, and the lawless soon learned to leave their revolvers behind. Month after month millions in gold were conveyed and never a dollar lost.

Served in Boer War.

"The force was 'knighthood' in 1904 in recognition of its services in the Boer war, becoming the Royal Northwest mounted police. In 1920, when its jurisdiction was widened to cover enforcement of federal authority throughout the Dominion, and all laws in the Yukon, Northwest territory, and Dominion parks, the title was changed to Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

"Today the mounted police patrol Canada's last great frontier, the chain of islands stretching from Greenland to Alaska. There are posts on such isolated islands as Ellesmere, North Devon, Baffin, and Victoria. The station on Bache peninsula is within 11 degrees of the North pole. At Herschel Island post was held the first court in the Arctic, when an Eskimo was sentenced for the murder of a constable.

"Although they have been given little notice in the daily news, the long winter patrols performed by these officers deserve a high rating in the record of Arctic exploration. In 1920, for instance, one inspector with a constable, one Eskimo, and two dog teams traveled 1,700 miles in 81 days, and considered it only an ordinary part of the year's work. From Devon Island to Ellesmere Island the inspector covered the entire northern part of the Canadian Arctic archipelago.

"There is one rule inflexibly obeyed by every 'Mountie.' Whether he is protecting the rights of the migratory duck, the Blackfoot Indian, or the Eskimo trapper, he shoots only as a last resort—the real secret of the success of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police."

Observatory Is Mecca for Many Thousands

Visitors Crowd Lick Memorial in California.

San Jose, Calif.—Although isolated on the summit of Mt. Hamilton at an altitude of 4,200 feet and accessible by driving 27 miles over a circuitous mountain highway, Lick observatory has become one of the most alluring trips for tourists in this section of California.

More than 10,000 visitors will journey to the summit of Mt. Hamilton this year to see the costly instruments through which astronomers nightly peer heavenward, seeking knowledge from the stars.

If visitors chance to climb the mountain on Saturday evenings, they are privileged to gaze through the 36-inch refractor, which magnifies the aureole of the astral bodies.

Despite its isolated location, Lick observatory has developed a model village atop the lofty mountain. Its population has grown during the past five years to fifty. There is a public school, owned by the observatory, with a teacher provided by the state. The

Cook Has Fed Condemned Murderers for 14 Years

New Orleans.—Twenty-five men who partook of Steve Elliot's cooking never lived to tell the tale. They were men condemned to death at parish prison, where Elliot was cook. He served breakfast to condemned men for 14 years, and just recently was promoted to the wardenship of the attorney's room at the prison.

Elliot said good food always helped the men who were scheduled to die. "It bucked up their courage and made them walk to the gallows with firmer step," he said.

Asked about the most unusual breakfast for a condemned man, Elliot recounted the following tale:

"Um, now, let's see," he said. "Yes, there was a negro who popped a hard one on us at the last moment. We always tried to satisfy, you know. He wanted 'possum and 'possum he got. We didn't know where it was to be had, but some kind citizen sent one to us. You should have seen that negro eat!

"He went upstairs to his death with a grin, wiping his mouth, happy that his appetite was satisfied."

Condemned men were given more consideration than other prisoners, Elliot said. "For instance, if they wanted to eat between meals they only had to say what they wanted. Sometimes it was a sandwich, flapjacks, milk or toast. Most of them liked fried chicken and ice cream for their last meal."

Elliot said his wife taught him how to cook.

ONE OF THOSE DAYS

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

JUST one of those days when the world and its ways seem so harsh, seem so hard, seem so little to praise; When the work that we do seems a thing never through, Never looks just the way that we wanted it to; There is nothing so wrong, neither sob, neither song, It's just one of those days that just happen along.

Just one of those times when a word never rhymes, When the life that we lead seems just dollars and dimes, When the world is so still, neither good, neither ill, Not a scene has a smile, not a thought has a thrill; There is nothing so sad, there is nothing so glad, It's just one of those days we so often have had.

Just one of those hours neither sun, neither show'rs, Like a lake without waves, or a path without flow'rs; But the world isn't o'er, over now evermore, It shall blossom again as it blossomed before, For tomorrow our gaze to the peaks we shall raise, And shall know that today was just one of those days.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

WHAT JERRY MUSKRAT WAS DOING

DID you ever watch a house being built? Of course you have. You know first of all a cellar is dug. You know how sewer and water pipes are laid. You must know that a lot of work is done in the ground which doesn't go into the house itself, but which is a part of the building of the house just the same.

It was this same way with Jerry Muskrat and his new house. He had a lot to do before he could build the house itself, which would rise above the surface of the water. Grandfather Frog had been right when he had said that that part of the work would be the easiest for Jerry.

First of all Jerry had to dig a sort of cellar. The mud from this he piled around him to make a sort of wall. It was really the beginning of the foundations of the new house. When he had this cellar finished of course the water was quite a lot deeper there than it was around it. This was why he had dug it. He knew that the water was so shallow around it that it would reached a place where it was dry and where he felt sure that the spring flood would not reach unless it happened to be such an unusual flood as the one which had swept away his old house last spring. There he made a comfortable and roomy chamber wherein he would later make a nice bed of grass.

Then Jerry went back to his cellar and started another tunnel. This one he headed straight for the deepest part of the Smiling Pool, where he knew there would be water no matter how thick the ice above might be. When this was finished he dug another to the bank and another to deep water so that in case of accident to the first one, he would still have tunnels he

NO 1 IRON DIFFICULT CLUB FROM ROUGH GRASS.

SPoon USEFUL IN ROUGH GRASS

THERE seems to be a hesitancy on the part of most golfers to resort to the spoon when a cuppy lie in the fairway confronts them or in rough grass. Generally they will pin their chances on some straight faced iron in preference. Perhaps just as generally their shot will end disastrously. For the straight faced iron particularly is a difficult club in the hands of any but the expert player. All right off the tee, it takes considerable power to play it efficiently from heavy grass. In deep clover a dry contact is almost impossible because the juice of the smashed plants highly lubricates the face of the iron. The ball, lacking spin, is thus hard to control. The resilient face of the spoon will take a much better hold in such circumstances. Another thing in its favor is that it has more loft than an iron club for the same range and can raise the ball more quickly from the long grass and set it down with but little roll.

SUCH IS LIFE—True Words

Howe About:

WORLD CULTURE AIDED BY GAMES

Politicians Germany A Near Masterpiece

By ED HOWE

I HAVE been reading another old book telling of the days when kings were supreme. With a few courtiers distributed in various parts of the country, the old king not only owned the land, but the farmers cultivating it: an autocrat, while out hunting, saw a pretty farm girl, he took her home with him. Once the autocrats engaged in war for thirty successive years, and few of the country people escaped becoming cannon fodder and fertilizer.

While very indignant because of the manner in which country people (my class) were once treated, a friend called, and I expressed surprise that in any age the people, always in the majority, submitted to such indignity. The caller, a lawyer, replied that the politicians of today rule the people more absolutely than did the kings of olden time. Our modern taxes, he said, are on a scale of extravagance the old autocrats never dreamed of.

The submission of the people now, the lawyer said, is more surprising than the submission of old, since we moderns have had the benefit of centuries of teaching of the relief to be obtained by revolution.

Conscription of men for military service in foreign wars is still in effect. Lately there has been brave talk among students and labor union men that they will not submit again as tamely as they did to the draft edict of King Woodrow Wilson, but, said my caller, the politicians have agents and accomplices distributed in almost every family, and the people of today are more helpless than were the people of old.

Like the Russians (said my caller, as he departed to spread poison elsewhere), we were given farms, but lately these have been taken from us by the politicians.

Germany seems determined to abandon its new republican form of government, and re-establish the old monarchy. Everything creditable in German history—and there is a great deal—dates from the days of its different kings, emperors and kaisers; everything discreditable must be charged to the reign of its Presidents since the last monarch was chased into Holland. Here is another idea I offer the same for what it is worth: In the serious thinking we are now doing because of the numerous monkey wrenches thrown into our machinery, the words "republic" and "democracy" should be examined with more care.

The Englishman known as Lord Macaulay I have long regarded as a more intelligent man than Gladstone, Shakespeare, or half a dozen others near the top in the English hall of fame. Many years ago he predicted the failure of democracy in the United States, because of the politicians. Our present condition is so much like the catastrophe he predicted that an intelligent American cannot read it without shame. I do not say monarchy is the remedy, but I do say democracy is not the final word in government.

I have lately read a "story" by a woman entitled: "South Moon Under." It is a little dirty in spots; otherwise I should proclaim it a masterpiece equal to the best country tales of the Scandinavians or Russians. The book is issued by Scribner; why this dignified publisher did not coax the woman to cut out the filth which weakens it, I cannot understand. Without it, "South Moon Under" would have had a life of hundreds of years. The story concerns the poorest of the Florida natives, and Pearl Buck's stories of Chinese farmers do not come anywhere near equalling it. I read it with delight at a sitting, but always regretting the author occasionally uses words in her book she certainly never uses in her conversation. Here is the best example of American realism in years almost ruined.

I am a quiet man, and not much disposed to "run around," but confess to being disturbed by the fate of that quiet man whose home and family were recently wiped out by a falling airplane.

Altogether the deaths numbered 15 (not many are wounded in airplane accidents). The machine was tri-motored; that is, it had three separate engines. It has been claimed by the advocates of progress that if two of the three engines in such a machine should fail, the pilot could safely land with one. Three such machines fell with almost equal loss of life within as many days. One of them was carrying a basketball team hurrying to another game. Shall we keep up the speed and slaughter, or should we slow down to the safety now being recommended by God Almighty in everything else?

More nonsense is written about what is called the mind than about anything else.

Silerius said in his memoirs he was a hard fighter for his rights with women, and that he regarded such activity as proper duty. "I have known men who were too patient binds with wives," he wrote, "and thus retarded their advance as citizens. The association of men and women is warfare, and a husband should be a good soldier both in commanding and in obeying."

Lasting Impression of Pythian Festivals.

So much stress has been placed upon the Olympic games that it is common to think of Greek contests in the light of athletic prowess, but equally as important as the Olympic contests were the old Pythian games, which gave most of their attention to the arts and literature.

The beginning of the games stretches back into the realms of mythology and is credited to Apollo. According to the ancient belief, Apollo, flushed with his victory over the snake monster Python, inaugurated the annual festivals. They were conducted under the leadership of the Delphians for many years, but around 600 B. C. they passed under the control of the Amphyctions. They were placed upon a four-year basis at this time and when given were employed to honor Apollo.

Because they honored Apollo, the sweet singer of the Olympic gods, it was natural that the first Pythian games should be, in reality, a contest of musicians. The festival continued as such for a long period, but about the time the Amphyctions assumed control, athletic contests, horse races and various competitions in art and literature were added, thus making of the festival not only a competition of culture, but a meeting of those not gifted in the arts of the day.

The Pythian games, as such, ended around the first of the Fifth century after the birth of Christ. Their influence has lived after them, however, for various contests in the present day date back to the Pythian games for their original inspiration. There are, for instance, the local and national contests for art and sculpture. Artists from all over the world compete in the big international displays to seek honors and prizes.

In music the fame of the Welsh Eisteddfod is world wide. At this meeting singers and choruses from many lands meet to compete in contests, in which the various competitors sing or perform the same composition before a group of skilled judges.

The young orators of the country, meeting in their regional contests, from which the winners advance to the national and then international contests, can look back to the Pythian games for the origin of their competition.

Unlike the Olympic games, which have gradually reached out to embrace all types of sport and gather them under a single control, the Pythian games have been broken up and scattered into the various categories that originally were combined. Because of the diversification, the origin of many of the modern contests is forgotten, but the Pythian games have had a more profound effect upon the culture of the world than the Olympic games have had upon the athletic.

CONTRACTS LET TO BUILD 37 NEW AMERICAN VESSELS

Navy Program to Give Work to Thousands.

Washington.—The greatest naval building program ever undertaken as a unit in the history of the country was started when the Navy department announced the award of contracts for twenty-one ships to be built by private shipyards and allocated sixteen vessels to be constructed at navy yards.

The awards were approved at Hyde Park by President Roosevelt, after Admiral William H. Standley, chief of operations; Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, chief of construction; and Rear Admiral S. M. Robinson, chief of engineers, had flown to Hyde Park with the various bids favored by the Navy department.

The navy department contracts provided for ten destroyers, two light cruisers, two submarines, and two gunboats, and the contracts with private yards were for fourteen destroyers, two aircraft carriers, one heavy cruiser, two light cruisers, and two submarines.

Total Value, 130 Millions.

The total face values of contracts awarded was just under 130 million dollars. Since some of the contracts, but not all, were let subject to adjustment for changes in the cost of labor and materials, it is impossible to predict the actual total which these twenty-one ships will cost. The figures named in the contracts cover hull and machinery only, in most cases. The cost of armament and fittings will have to be added.

Navy officials were gratified at the speed at which the huge program had moved forward. Within a week after the President had allocated the $238-

000,000 from the public works funds for naval building, the specifications were drawn and bids invited. Thirty days later bids were offered.

The threatened complications offered by a letter from Senator Trammell of Florida, chairman of the senate naval committee, alleging collusion in the bidding, were disposed of by a naval investigation. It is understood that the charges were based on a casual remark.

Major Purpose Employment.

Admiral Standley said that the program would be pushed since one of its major purposes is to halt unemployment. It has been estimated that 18,400 men will be directly employed for a total of 2,430,000 man work weeks on the thirty-seven vessels.

Four men in allied industries are employed for every man directly at work on the shipbuilding, Admiral Standley said. Adding this 73,200 men to those directly employed, a total of more than 90,000 men will be carried on pay rolls throughout the country during the life of the work.

The Navy department estimates that 85 per cent of the total cost of a ship is spent on labor. If the whole $238,000,000 authorized is spent, this would mean that $202,300,000 would be distributed in wages.

Due to the normal lag in employment increase in the shipbuilding industry while raw materials are being gathered for a program of this kind, the full benefits of the employment will not be felt for about six months. However, employment in the contributing industries and trades, which number about 125, should feel almost immediate benefit.

Little Red Hen Adopts Pigs in Lieu of Chicks

Big Prairie, Ohio.—A little red hen on the farm of H. J. Smith flapped her wings in disgust and gave a cackle which was interpreted as meaning that "pigs are pigs."

A month ago the hen began to lay eggs in the pig sty, apparently with the idea of hatching out a family. But members pilfered her eggs every day. Then the litter of pigs was born. It was a poor substitute, but Mrs. Hen adopted them, covering them with her wings when they slept and clucking indignantly when they strayed.

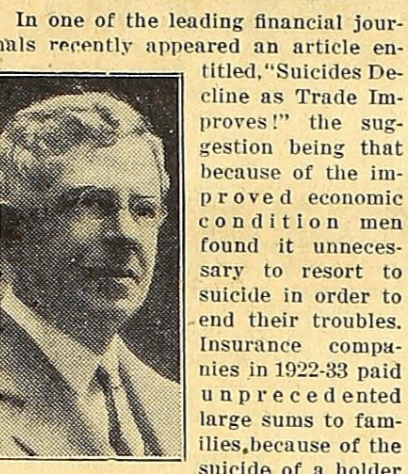

But pigs will be pigs, and since they've grown larger, the little red hen finds that she no longer can keep them under the family wing.

Four Buildings Lost in Hunt for Lost Canary

New Home, Texas.—A pet canary got lost, starting a chain of circumstances which resulted in destruction by fire of four buildings here. The small son of John Miller, desirous of finding the canary, lit a match and peered behind a hot water tank in his father's barber shop. The match set fire to cobwebs, which in turn ignited some waste. The blaze extended throughout the shop, finally consuming it, together with three adjacent buildings.

Decline in Suicides

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

In one of the leading financial journals recently appeared an article entitled, "Suicides Decline as Trade Improves!" The suggestion being that because of the improved economic condition men found it unnecessary to resort to suicide in order to end their troubles.

Insurance companies in 1922-23 paid unprecedented large sums to families, because of the suicide of a holder of a policy in which the members of the family were the beneficiaries. Some persons argued that suicide was not an act of cowardice, but on the contrary was indicative of a certain strength of character which provided the family with all necessary income. It seems passing strange that in a country which offers so much of freedom, opportunity and advantage, that the lamp of courage could burn so low that the only refuge was in self-destruction. Perhaps one explanation for suicide can be found in the lack of reverence for home and all that it should mean to a head of a family. If the home has lost its charm and the only place assigned to the head of the family is that of a bread winner, naturally he will find little to support him in his strenuous efforts to provide extravagant luxuries. On the other hand, doubtless many a discouraged man found great strength and an urge to fight the battle through because those dependent upon him were helping in sacrificing the un-essary things in life and were content with a reduced income. Many families were thus kept intact and brought nearer to one another because they mutually shared a common burden and helped to solve it.

The question naturally arises, have we profited from this depression? Have we learned anything that will make life more livable and more worth while? As we look back upon the suffering of the last three years, one fact must impress itself upon every thinking person—that many things in life are far more valuable than money and that many of the dearest things cannot be bought with money. The permanent ideals upon which every civilization must rest are frankly not for sale. They must be toiled for, and when acquired, safely guarded against the wiles of that crass materialism which argues that trade improvement justifies the decline in suicides.

The Household

By Lydia Le Baron Walker

A HOMEMAKER can materially reduce the cost of refrigeration by following the suggestions offered today. This is true whatever the kind of refrigeration, whether the cold chest be an iceless refrigerator which by its own mechanism produces the low temperature, or whether it be an ice chest in which the low degrees are caused by packing the ice chamber with ice.

The faint sound of the motor or manufacturing mechanism which lowers the temperature in the iceless refrigerator indicates when the power is on. Then electricity is being used and this is the expensive item in keeping the temperature at the proper degree of coldness. When there is no sound, however faint, no electricity is being consumed. The important factor, therefore, in reducing the cost of running an iceless refrigerator, is to preserve the right temperature with the least electricity. The thermostat attachment keeps the temperature approximately even. That is, it causes the motor to run when the temperature gets above a certain point, and it automatically shuts off the power when the right degree is attained. This continual fluctuation within a specified range of degrees insures the temperature never going below the right degree of coldness, and never getting above an equally well-defined radius of heat. The right temperature is preserved continually. This is the great feature on which the success of the iceless refrigerator rests. While a correct temperature is assured, it depends upon the homemaker's care whether the cost of running the refrigerator is kept down.

Ice Refrigerator. With the ice-cooled refrigerator, the degree of coldness is greatest shortly after the ice compartment has been filled. It continually decreases up to the time when the chest is refilled with ice. The temperature cannot be preserved within stated degrees of coolness. Therefore, it is imperative that the cold temperature be kept as low as possible between interim refrestocking with ice.

One economical method of handling the cost problem of refrigerators of both kinds is to keep the refrigerator closed just as much as possible. The minute the door is opened, the cold air rushes out, the warm air takes its place, and down goes the temperature. The ticking of the iceless refrigerator will begin shortly after indicating this and that the electric current is on to restore the coldness. No such warning is sounded in the ice chest. The temperature will increase and only the putting in of more ice will lower it again. The importance of keeping the door closed is apparent.

Thrifty Method. If the one putting away food in the refrigerator will assemble the items of food before putting anything away after a meal, or when foods come from the market, and will see that they are in the right containers, and then open the door and stow the dishes, etc., away as quickly as she can, the cost of refrigeration is decreased and efficiency is increased. Also when preparing a meal if the foods needed are taken out at one time rather than many, a like economy is fostered. Never keep the door open while the use of the foods is decided upon. It is surprising, but this often happens.

Ice Cream Without Churning. Ice cream can be made without churning if it is stirred vigorously several times at intervals after it is packed, or put into the iceless refrigerator. Stir it first just as it is beginning to harden. This mixes the slightly frozen portions with the less solid ones to an even heavy creamy texture as when churned. Be sure to get all frozen edges and side portions of the mixture stirred in evenly with the rest. I generally begin to stir the cream after it has been in the ice chamber half an hour, and stir it approximately every half hour, until it is the consistency of churned ice cream when the dasher is removed and the cream allowed to ripen. Four or five thorough stirrings is enough. It is a simple task indeed, to stir the ice cream as described when no ice has to be cracked and salted and replenished, as has to be done when cream is frozen in an ice cream freezer. Iceless refrigerators have so simplified the making of frozen desserts and refreshments, that these wholesome refreshments can now be made as easily as others.

There were present seven children, 15 grandchildren and five great grandchildren. All together, forty guests sat down to a pot luck dinner which was served on the lawn. The day was spent playing games and a ball game between the boys and girls in which the boys came out victorious. The guests departed in the evening, wishing Mr. Strong many more happy birthdays and hoping to all be with him to help him celebrate them.

SYNOPSIS

With his yacht, the Intrepid, abandoned by its crew, Felix Horton, millionaire, with his mother, his daughter, Nan, and Roy Stuart, puts into Squaw Harbor, Alaska, to recruit. He engages a bunch of nondescript stragglers there. A gigantic Pole, Sandor, is the Intrepid's skipper, is an old friend of Eric's, unemployed sailor, and Eric engages to sail as chief officer. Nan and Eric indulge in a moonlight flirtation. The Intrepid is wrecked, leaving her in a small boat, with Horton and his party. Unable to help, they watch Sandor kill Captain Waymire and leave the ship with his crowd. On landing, they learn there is no communication with the outside world. Fireheart, priestess of the island, descended from a white man in the remote past, knowing a little English, welcomes the castaways. Sandor declares there shall be no law on the island. Horton, Eric, and the only gun, covers him for the day, declaring he is the law. He lays out work for all. Eric's love for Nan awells, and he tells her he means to win her for his mate. She is not unwilling. Fireheart claims Eric, and realizing the importance of her friendship he is forced to temporize. Defending himself from attack, Eric's revolver apparently misfires, but his assailants flee. Eric finds the revolver, which had been in the Intrepid's armory, while five of its six cartridges are center-fire. Eric has an effective cartridge, "Swede," makes an attempt on his life. He uses his one cartridge, killing "Swede," but is left defenseless, though master of the island. Eric's lone ally, Fireheart, threatens to attempt on Nan's life. Eric saves her, but Fireheart refuses proffered forgiveness and friendship. Eric makes Nan understand the depth of his love and determines to win her, but she is uncertain of her own heart.

Nan's hand clutched his. "Are you sure, Eric?"

He smiled dimly. "Do you think I could be mistaken—now?"

"I want to hear you say it, in plain words. Maybe then I'll know my own heart."

He drew both her hands against his breast. "I love you, Nan," he told her quietly. "I will always love you."

She looked long into his eyes. At last she shook her head, baffled. "It hasn't come to me. It's all so strange—this place—the moon—the old man's body rolling in the water—and you I standing here, mud to our knees—our hands grimy—wearing parkas of seal-hide. . . . It's glorious and terrible and impossible, all at once. It can't last. I've got to go back!"

He saw her lids spring wide open and her eyes stare unseeing. "You mean—go back again to your own world?"

"It's certain in the end. This is all just a dream that will wake up from sometime, on the deck of another yacht—or an ocean liner. Then we'll have to part. You wouldn't share my life, would you? I wouldn't want you to, I'd feel that I was keeping a polar bear in a fountain. You've got to stay in your element—the sea—the snow."

"Yes, but you could share my life. You could come with me."

She shook her head doubtfully. "I'm afraid I couldn't. I don't think I've got it in me, the fighting heart. I don't think I have the will power to take a rough road, just for the sake of the thrill, when there's a smooth one open. I'm a great hand for synthetic thrills." Her tone grew bitter. "The real thing scares me out."

"Is this the real thing?" His arm stole about her shoulders, pressed her close, and his lips mastered hers.

The sea seemed to rise over the crags and sweep her gently away, but it was warm as blood, and the swing of its wave was ecstasy. Her arms began to steal about him, her lips clung, then, with a spasm in her breast, she wrenched free.

"It was too real," she told him, gasping. "And I'm more afraid than ever."

"You must never be afraid of life, sweetheart. Or of love."

She smiled a long time, then shook her head.

"I won't be afraid of love—when it comes," she said staunchly. "But it hasn't come to me yet, and I don't think it ever will come, on this island."

"Weren't you near it—just now?"

"It all came from your heart, not mine. Perhaps I'm too fond of Roy. And Eric—I'm afraid I'll never know for certain until we're back in civilization."

"It's now or never for me." He drew a deep breath, and his voice resounded like a low gong among the crags. "Well, I'll keep on trying."

Her eyes lighted, her lips curled dimly. "After all I've said?"

"What you've said only makes me spread a little more canvas." He caught both her hands in a strong grip. "Nan, do you think I'm going to take down my flag and run back to port? I'm sailing on! I'm going 'round the horn! I'll not stop till I'm sunk! And by G—d, if the breeze holds, I'm going to win through!"

CHAPTER VIII

It was September and still summer on Forlorn Island. But the Aleuts were not cheered; fearfully they knelt before the ikon and the candlestick, praying against the wrath to come. The days marked up one by one on Eric's ridge-pole were far too fine to last, clear skies, warm winds far-blown from the palm groves of Hawaii,

OUR CHILDREN

By ANGELO PATRI

REVIEW LESSONS

EVERY so often it is necessary for a pupil to go over the points he has learned. He repeats his rules, brushes up his tables, does the problems once more. This is an essential step in his learning. It makes for thoroughness, for one thing. Our minds often trick us. We think we know a fact very well. It has a pleasant familiar feeling as we remember it in passing. "Oh, I know that," says the child, and goes on. The wise teacher doesn't stop with that. She says, "Good. Tell me all about it." Oftener than not the pupil is dismayed to find that this thing he knew so well slips from his grasp when he tries to lay hold of it. He hesitates, stammers and fidgets and finally says, "I knew that just as well as my own name, and I couldn't say it."

He didn't know it as well as he knew his own name. His name has been used so often that it has become a part of himself. The fact that slipped into the haze when he tried to hold it had not been used often enough, and not been knitted into the fabric of his thought. To make an idea part of one's thinking one must work it, knead it into his mind by repetition and use.

Repetition alone will not help a child to knowledge. It is not enough to repeat words, accurate though they may be. That is only one form of an idea, its thinnest, most elusive and deceptive form. To grasp its values and make them useful to our thinking we have to know the idea in many forms—in action, in association with other things.

A child learns that a river is a stream of water running down hill toward the sea. Suppose he never saw the boats carrying their loads up and down its course, never saw the farms turn green and bear their harvests because of its beneficent watering, never noted the difference its drainage meant to the nearby uplands—how much does he know about a river? We begin with the word but the word must be clothed and made manifest before a child knows much about it.

When you are trying to help a child review a subject, instead of hammering on the set word, try to get a new view of it by helping the child to find new associations for it.

A review ought to be the old idea with some additional sidelights. If the pupil is not interested in the idea the review won't help him at all and the way to interest him is to call up other ideas in support of the original fact.

IT'S RAINING

"IT'S raining. Mother, it's raining. Does that mean we can't go?"

"You certainly don't expect to go out in the rain? If it is raining you have to stay in the house. That's all."

A groan runs through the anxious group about the window. "Stay in all day? What will we do?"

There are some rainy Saturdays in every year and that means a lot of disappointed children, for Saturday is their important day. They save up their treats for that day, they look forward to it all week, for weeks ahead. A disappointment like a rainy day is no light blow to eager children.

Sometimes the rain need not interfere. If the children were going to the circus, let them go. The circus in the rain is great fun. Usually, it is under cover, anyway. Concerts, plays, museum trips, need not be affected by the weather. The outdoor trip, the picnic and the hike and the week end camping may be impossible, but sometimes there is a chance even for them. If there is, let them take it.

Getting a wetting is not going to hurt a healthy child. They are as water-proof as young ducks, provided they are in good health and their clothes are fit. There is beauty in a rainy day. The soft gray that veils the world enchants it. The everyday things take on an air of mystery. The smells and the feels of a rainy day are a welcome variety in the children's experiences. It would be a pity to deprive them of the delights that the rains bring.

The drip of the rain from the trees, the echoing voices, the soft thud of footsteps on fallen leaves, the smell of earth that lies open to the meat and drink that the season is offering, the colors and the atmosphere of all our days offer something precious and lasting to the children who can enjoy them.

I don't like to teach children that a rainy day checks them completely. It may not be wet enough to change their plans. If a rainy day outfit will settle the difficulty let them put it on and go ahead. If it is too heavy a rain use one of the alternatives you have had in mind. Instead of the outdoor excursion make it an indoor one to some interesting place. Help them to use the rainy day and enjoy it.

The weather does not hurt healthy children. Dress them to meet it. Instead of dressing them by the calendar, use the thermometer. A sweater can be worn with comfort on a cool day and laid aside with perfect safety on the following warmer day. We master the changes in color and atmosphere and temperature that it brings. Who wants to be afraid of a rainy day?

HE HAD been a young man once, but Henry Porterhouse was the same lively, witty, well-bred, optimistic youth at sixty-eight that he had been at twenty-five. His nephew, Carlton Brown, his sister's son, considered Uncle John Henry about as near perfect as they make 'em; was a most indulgent nephew and supplied all the old man's needs and luxuries in a most bountiful manner. And these were not a few—especially the luxuries.

Uncle John Henry appreciated his nephew's indulgence, was grateful to him for it, and cast about for an opportunity to do the young man a good turn.

"Carlton is nearing thirty," thought Uncle John Henry, "and not yet married. I wonder if there is anybody he wants—and can't get. I was two years younger than Carlton is when— And the old man fell into a reverie, looking back through the distorting mists of the vanished years and seeing a beautiful girl—which the original wasn't at all—who had married somebody else; and sighing to think how sweet life would have been for him—if it wouldn't have been—if she had married him.

"Carlton shall not suffer my fate," decided the uncle. "If there is a girl in this town he wants, by Jingo! he's going to have her." And that night, when the two were alone at dinner, he said to his nephew: "Carlton, why don't you get married?" The sudden shot took the young man by surprise; he reddened, hesitated, and then laughed. "Oh, plenty of time for that, uncle, plenty of time."

"No there's isn't," replied the uncle. "I want you to get married right off. Before you get too old. Never thought of marriage, eh? Well, never mind, don't worry. I'll pick out a girl for you." And the gay old boy hurried off to the opera where he had agreed to be in the Stanwix box early.

Rose Stanwix was a picture that evening. She wore something in pink and silver and her eyes were like diamonds. Gay old Uncle John Henry could hardly keep from staring. "Golly! but she's pretty," he thought. Now, there was the very girl for Carlton. Social position, youth and beauty. He asked Rose if he might see her the next afternoon.

Why, of course, Rose would be delighted to see Mr. Porterhouse the next afternoon—weren't they old chums? And she actually gave him a pat on his ruddy, withered apple cheek. Rose was twenty-six. She was very fond of Uncle John Henry—everybody was fond of him.

Uncle John Henry slept soundly that night, his spirit soothed by the thought of the benevolent plans he had laid for the happiness of his nephew. Promptly at the appointed hour he presented himself before Rose. She appeared to him even more charming than she had the night before in her opera finery. And she seemed such a sensible girl, too. Why was it that he had never realized how entirely desirable she was?

At length Uncle John Henry got down to business. He discussed a little on the general subject of the advisability of marriage and then asked Rose, point blank, why it was that she had never taken the step. She parried by asking him the same question. He sighed that there had been a time—in the dear, dead past—when he had thought of it. But that was long ago—and now he was too old.

"Old!" cried Rose, "why, Mr. Porterhouse! You are the youngest man in our set. What're a few years more or less when the heart keeps young?"

"Do you really think so?" asked Uncle John Henry.

"I am sure of it," laughed Rose.

"In that case," faltered the old bean, "if I might offer the heart and hand of an—"

"Mr. Porterhouse!" exclaimed Rose. He saw a strange look come into her eyes; surprise, amusement—and something else.

He could not grasp, on the instant, exactly what that look meant; but he saw in it a signal to keep to the right and keep moving and went on: "er—of my nephew—for your consideration it would afford me—er—unbounded satisfaction."

Rose cast down her eyes and replied demurely: "I cannot tell you how grateful to you I am for the offer. I will give it my careful consideration. I think you may be assured of a favorable answer."

"Golly!" thought the old man as he left the house, "came near betraying Carlton's interests that time. But what did she mean by looking at me like that? Old men have married young girls before now. And I'm not so very old."

"Carlton," said he that night, "it's all arranged. I fixed it up for you with Rose Stanwix."

"Rose Stanwix," gasped Carlton. "So you proposed to her for me? Well, I have no objections. Your taste was always excellent." And Carlton wrote to the girl that very night. "Uncle tells me he has arranged for us to marry. I guess we had better announce our engagement next month—instead of the month after as we had intended. The joke is on uncle; but we'll never tell him. He's so happy to think he has done something for me."

Points for Pastry Makers

Above All Things, One Matter of Importance Is to Be Remembered, and After That the Rest Will Be Found Comparatively Easy.

The "fine art" of pastry making is succinctly set forth in the following article, by an acknowledged expert:

You know pastry really is one of the easiest things in the world to make. There is only one point which is very important, and that is not to get it too wet when you mix it. Perhaps I had better begin at the beginning, however, and tell you just exactly how I do it. I use three times as much flour as I have shortening. I prefer bread flour, myself, for pastry because it is easier to handle, but I can make it with pastry or cake flour. If I do use this kind of flour I use four times as much flour as shortening. I mix my flour and salt together in a wooden chopping bowl, add my chilled shortening and, with a double-bladed chopping knife, I cut the fat into small pieces, at the same time, of course, mixing it into the flour. Some people can mix pastry satisfactorily with the hands, but my hands are too warm. The fat should be actually in small bits throughout the flour, not thoroughly blended into a smooth mixture. Fat need not be cut as fine for pastry as for biscuits. If you prefer to use a wooden bowl you may use two knives or a fork or a wire whisk to cut in the fat. After you have cut for a few moments shake the bowl and the larger pieces of fat will come to the top and you can tell when it is thoroughly mixed.

Now you are ready to add the water, which should be cold. In warm weather ice water is preferable. Make a hole at one side of the flour, add one tablespoon of water and with a stiff knife stir in as much of the flour mixture as the water will take up. Do the same thing two or three other places in the flour mixture and then with your hands press the balls of dough and the dry mixture left in the bowl together into a smooth ball. Put in the refrigerator to chill a few minutes. Then roll out to line your pastry pan. Pastry may be rolled on a slightly floured board or directly on a metal table top. Roll from the center each way. Roll lightly and pick up your sheet of pastry after each rolling, to prevent sticking.

When I make fruit pies I mix a tablespoon of sugar with a tablespoon of flour and sprinkle over the bottom of the lined pan. I then put in my fruit and sugar in layers, dampen the edge of the lower crust, put the other crust on top press the crusts together and cut them evenly with a scissors. If you like you may bind the edge with a thin strip of pastry or you may leave the lower crust a quarter inch larger than the upper crust and turn it back on top of the upper crust. Press the edges together tightly with your fingers or

Japan Is Young

Baseball Is Popular in Japan.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

WHEN occidental man first thinks about the Far East, China and Japan are envisaged as being much alike—indeed, almost as twins. But time enables him to discriminate. Historically, China is old and ethical. The burden of all her literature is, "What ought I to do?" Japan is young and esthetic. The burden of her thought, as recorded for a thousand years, is, "What is beautiful?" Geologically, China is pre-ancient; Japan is recent. Long after Mother Earth had settled down to rear her earlier brood of lands, Japan, the younger, arrived. Only about three-score years ago Japan shocked her elders in Asia by departing politically and socially from the ancient ways and turning toward those of "the western barbarians."

In nature, also, Japan has changed within our remembrance; Bandai san, one of the eruptions on her pretty face, misbehaved. For hundreds of years, so far as known in human records, perhaps during the millenniums of unrecorded time, it had been entirely dormant. As suddenly as the discharge of a cannon, it blew off its rocky cap in 1888 and killed more than 400 human beings. Curiously enough, in Japanese the same sound, san, serves to the ear for either "mist" or for "mountain." The one-time medieval village, Yedo, and the swift-growing national capital, Tokyo, which it became, was leveled in 1855 and again in 1923 by destructive earth adjustments. Of old, the rest of the world knew not of these earthquakes. In the era of electric wires, even a tremor is news.

Like some vast factory town in which the blazing furnaces take a Sabbath rest, to begin again on Monday, Japan has some 200 dormant volcanoes. How pretty, flower-covered and of graceful figure, they seem! Yet these mountain forms are liable at any moment to become unruly, and when in these fits of deadly temper they often devastate vast areas of human habitation and alter many square miles of landscape, as we saw in 1923. At least 50 of these sleeping, fari-like cones have the promise and potency of continued activity.

Lovely as their outlines often are, their breath may be sulphurous to the point of danger. Even graceful Fuji, seemingly as demure as a virgin in her teens, cannot be trusted.

Lies on a Bed of Fire.

Garments of green forests, of grand trees, the veils of bamboo thickets, a tapestry of flowers, or even a mantle of winter snow provide no insurance against direful outburst. But, if Japan acts often like a fury, we must excuse her, because the bed on which she lies is one of fire.

Go down to Beppu, in Kyushu, for example, where the daily rice is cooked by subterranean heat, where people resort to bake out or broil out their various ailments. In the hot seashore sand, thousands of men and women for hours, even days, lie covered with the pulverized volcanic debris. By wet baking or parboiling, even to scarification, the patients seek to expel their many ills.

Beppu is a delightful place for a patient with rheumatic or other miseries. While there is a fair chance of being swallowed up and changed to a cinder by some fresh outburst of melted rock, such as only a century or two ago filled the valleys with scoria and lava, who cares, when no one can foretell the hour? Does not the man of Beppu know that other parts of fair Japan may be visited long before his turn comes?

Did not Sakurajima at Kagoshima, of old supposed to be solid rock, erupt and bury a whole town of 10,000 people?

Moreover, how welcome the sequel to these earth's outbursts—fertile soil covered with a carpet of lovely flowers and plants and easily coaxed into luxuriant production of food for man! "Shigata ga nai" (Don't care) is the usual verdict on the unknown, with the merry-hearted sons and daughters—how fair are the latter!—of Nippon. One who had known the sons of the Land of the Gods for more than half a century classifies the two kinds of men into "Don't cares" and those who, after every repulse of nature, cry "Let us rebuild!" Then, Caleb-like, these hearten others by declaring, "We are well able to do it."

Like nature's dress, which later clothes in threefold loveliness, with color, beauty, and perfume, what was once fiery scoria, the maidens know how to add to their physical charms through the witchery of raiment. In his ideas of beauty, and especially of dress patterns and whatever is applied to bodily wear, the Japanese artist-designer excels. For variety and originality he possibly leads the world.

Men and women in their garb lovingly copy nature's moods. When a maiden adds to her faultlessly graceful costume a "Fujiyama neck and shoulders," with a superb coiffure, who can do less than admire? Was it lackadaisical in the native poet to write of her: "One glance, and you would give your province; another, and you would barter your kingdom?"

Love Their Land's Beauty.

Yet, as of glamor for their women, as expressed in strains of admiration, so also and more have their poets written of the beautiful scenery and the special features of their native land. They reckon even clouds, mist, sunrise glow, and sunset glory as part of their country's life and adornment. Yet it is not they, but we, who say "her" of nature, for personification is rare in Japanese literature, art, or language. Of a thousand figures of speech in poetry, many of which refer to the moon, scarce a dozen bear any resemblance to the description of that luminary as "a fair maiden with white fire laden."

Nevertheless, apart from literature, in Japan all nature is alive with personality. The mountains, especially in the beauty spots, are inhabited by gods and goddesses.

To the average native, these personalities in the realm of imagination seem as real as the virgin priestesses at the Shinto shrines. Every year, at the invitation and under the direction of the imperial court, thousands of the short, 31-syllable poems are sent, for oblivion or glory, by the people, from beggar boy to noble, to the court's staff of literary appraisers and censors. After due scrutiny and appraisal, rewards are meted out, not to rhymesters, for there are none, but to the poets.

But let us come down to facts and figures of area and population and of facilities of movement by land and sea.

Travel today in the Japanese empire is one of luxury and detailed convenience as compared with what existed 60 years ago. Japan proper is now threaded with 15,413 miles of railroads and trolleys, rivers are crossed by countless bridges, and the ocean paths to all continents are traversed by ships that move with an affluence and punctuality that are akin to the movements of the heavenly bodies.

Intellectual preparation for change had been in progress a century or more before the arrival of President Fillmore's peaceful armada of 1853. Japan's modern history is truly as much one of interior discipline as of any reinforcement from the outside.

On the other hand, America's intervention under Perry was really an extension and fresh application of the Monroe Doctrine. It came at an opportune time. The old mikado, or emperor, Komei, was nearing his demise, and his son and heir, Mutsuhito, who was destined to rule the New Japan in the longest reign (1867-1912) known in the nation's history, was soon to take the throne.

During his reign the compromise between the personalities and energies representing war and peace resulted in shattering forever the Chinese claim of sovereignty over the Ryukyu (Nansei) islands and Korea and rolled back the tide of Russians and European aggression.

Honshu the Chief Island.

The present-day empire consists of the four large islands of Japan proper, with nearly 4,000 smaller ones; Taiwan (Formosa); Karafuto, the portion of Sakhalin below the fiftieth parallel of north latitude; and Korea.

The country's life centers on Main Island, Honshu, the chief theater of its history. Here is the bulk of the population; and here are the chief cities; towns and villages are thickly clustered. Hence, in the minds of foreigners, this large island, with its 85,300 square miles of area, is practically Japan.

To risk a further computation, one fancies that 80 per cent of all visitors to Japan "do" Honshu only. Nevertheless, Kyushu, with busy Nagasaki on its southwest tip, being the historic home of the Dutch who, for nearly three centuries, kept the world informed concerning the hermit nation, is far from unknown to the world at large.

An Insurance agent had found a new life to insure. Taking out his notebook and pencil he commenced to ask the usual hackneyed questions. "Now, sir," he said, "how old are you?" The simple-looking little man scratched his head thoughtfully. "I was forty last birthday," he said, "and I'll be forty-two next." The agent gasped. "But, my dear sir," he smiled, "you've got things a bit mixed. If you were forty last birthday you'll be forty-one next birthday." "Oh, no," said the man. "I'm forty-one today."

Apple Tree Honored

In Eastwood, Australia, a monument is to be erected to an apple tree. It will commemorate the discovery of what is considered to be Australia's finest dessert apple, the Granny Smith. And thereby hangs a tale. Seventy-five years ago a widow known as Granny Smith had a small apple orchard at Eastwood and there, from some discarded pit there was grown the first Granny Smith apple tree. The tree and its offspring earned a fortune for the widow and the apple has since risen to front rank amongst Australia's eating apples.

The bill of rights is the nearest approach to a written constitution which the United Kingdom possesses.

The dance hall was most beautifully decorated with marine rigs, sails and lights, including a miniature light house, the work of Gerald Mallon, and a splendid, enjoyable time was had until the clock showed Sunday had arrived, when all went home happy and contented, and looking forward to next year's return of the pleasant and exciting events which have brought so much pleasure and enjoyment to those fortunate enough to be here this year.

A lot of hard work and thought was expended by everybody interested in making the Tawas Bay Yacht Association regatta this year, its first year, a success, and credit is due to those who worked to accomplish this end, and the thanks of the Association is hereby assured to them for their efforts.

The Association now numbers some 90 members. All bills for cups and expenses have been paid, and there are still a few dollars left in the treasury.
