Comic Family Portrayed in '3-Cornered Moon' at Rivoli

The antics of America's craziest family are brought to the screen in Paramount's "Three-Cornered Moon" starring Claudette Colbert, Richard Arlen and Mary Boland, which shows Friday and Saturday, November 24 and 25, at the Rivoli Theatre, Tawas City.

It is the story of the fortunes of the Rimplegar family of Brooklyn. In the hands of the addle-headed mother, Mary Boland, is left the family's money after the death of Papa Rimplegar. The self-centered children, played by Claudette Colbert, Wallace Ford, Tom Brown and William Bakewell, are too busy with their own affairs to pay attention to mama's exploits in Wall Street. Everybody talks at once in the Rimplegar mansion, and nobody knows what anybody else is talking about.

Claudette Colbert brings home her current "passion," a down-at-the-heels, arty novelist forever at work on one chapter, and when the market crashes he lingers on for the free grub. On the advice of the family physician, Richard Arlen, the family comes down to earth, with the exception of the mother, to settle its affairs. They all get jobs, try to fire the maid, Lyda Roberti, who can't be fired because she doesn't speak English. They decide to take in boarders, the first of which is Arlen. Everything works out all right for the Rimplegar family in the end, as it always does, and the romance between Arlen and Colbert fosters nicely when the sponging novelist is finally thrown out in the street.

LEVI EMERSON PASSES AWAY MONDAY NIGHT

Remains Taken to His Old Home at Vassar For Burial

Levi H. Emerson, resident of this city for the past 22 years, passed away Monday night. Death came as a surprise to his many friends here as he had apparently been in good health. Funeral services were held Thursday morning from the Tawas City Baptist church. Rev. Frank Metcalf officiated. The remains were taken to Vassar for burial.

Levi H. Emerson was born November 17, 1861, at Danby, Vermont. While a young man he came to Michigan, going to Vassar. He was an accountant and later spent a number of years here as employed by Prescott, Miller & Company at Rose City as bookkeeper and after their mills were discontinued at that place, Mr. Emerson entered the C. H. Prescott & Sons office in this city. Since 1917 he had been bookkeeper for the Wilson Grain company.

The deceased was quiet and unassuming and was held in the highest esteem and love by his many friends. He was very much interested in civic affairs and had been a leader in many projects for the betterment of the city.

He is survived by one son, Lee B. Emerson, of Detroit. Mrs. Emerson preceded him in death about two years ago.

Mr. Emerson was a member of the Tawas City Baptist church and was a member of the Tawas City High School.

Funeral services will be held Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the Latter Day Saint church. Rev. Matt. Umphrey of Bentley will officiate.

Edward Graham, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Graham, met with a very serious accident Wednesday afternoon when his clothes, upon which gas had been spilled, burst into flames when he went too near a stove. His clothes were all burned off his body before men who were in the garage succeeded in putting out the fire. He was rushed to the office of Dr. E. A. Hasty, where the nurse dressed the burns until the doctor arrived. He is in a critical condition. Ivan O'Farrell, who was in the garage at the time the accident occurred, had his hands badly burned while attempting to extinguish the flames on young Graham.

The Ladies Literary Club met with Mrs. Peter Haman Saturday afternoon. Mrs. Wm. Schroeder and Mrs. R. C. Arn were the assisting hostesses.

Mrs. Simon Goupil of East Tawas spent the week end here with relatives.

Dio Hunt and Chester Huff of Flint spent the week end in town.

Mr. and Mrs. Caius Gordon of Pontiac were callers at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Charters on Sunday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Leslie and family of Tawas City and Mr. and Mrs. Roy Charters and family had Sunday dinner with Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Charters in honor of Mrs. Charters' 77th birthday.

Friends were sorry to hear that Charles Harsch is seriously ill with pneumonia.

Several of the men have returned with a deer.

The many friends here of Mrs. David Shuge, Gaylord, were grieved to hear of her recent accident, when she fell and broke her ankle, and hope that she may be around again soon.

'Aggie Appleby, Maker of Men' Refreshing Comedy

Rated delightfully refreshing in story and character portrayals, "Aggie Appleby, Maker of Men," a comedy-drama with Charles Farrell, Wynne Gibson, Zasu Pitts and William Gargan in the major roles, brings a dynamic new plot to the screen. The picture will be shown at the Rivoli Theatre, Tawas City, on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, November 26-27-28.

Farrell fans will be particularly pleased with this RKO-Radio production, for it offers the tall star in a role which is a new type for him, and a distinct departure from the straight romantic leads which first won him fame. He is presented as a quiet, sedate youth who suddenly goes very "haywire" in the big city while seeking to learn the art of becoming a hard guy.

Wynne Gibson is appealing in the title role as the rowdy miss of the Bowery who succeeds in shaping up the destiny of everyone but herself, and her performance throughout is reported to be outstanding for its sincerity and good technique.

Miss Pitts and Gargan both excel in major supporting roles, the characteristic humor of the lady with the excessively waving hands being particularly impressive.

The story is said to be full of good humor and humanity. It starts with Aggie battling her way out of a cheap restaurant where she has unwittingly become the object of conflict. Gargan, as Red Branahan, is unable to resist the temptation of joining in a free-for-all. He and Aggie get acquainted and friendship develops into more ardent admiration. Then Red is taken to prison for attempting a single-handed battle with a squad of police. Aggie is left alone.

It is then that Farrell, a fugitive from his aunt and home town sweetheart, enters the scene. He is fascinated by the primitive charms of Aggie, and, moulding a new life for himself, forgets all about the hometown.

APPROVAL GIVEN HIGHWAY PROJECTS

Six highway projects in the county were approved by the Isoco County Emergency Relief Commission and the Isoco County Road Commission at a meeting held last Tuesday evening. Claude Yockey of the State Highway Department was present and the program has been sent to Lansing for approval.

The projects selected and approved are in various sections of the county and at convenient distances from the men who will work on them. The work will consist of resurfacing with gravel, widening, ditching, grading and brushing. The highway between Whittemore and Hale, old U. S. 23 in Wilber township and grading the two-mile gap in the Shore road pavement between East Tawas and Oscoda, are on the program. The latter project is to allow the use of the new pavement this winter. The cement work will be completed next spring.

Mr. Yockey stated that work on the proposed projects, if approved by the state, would begin December 1 and continue until about February 15.

EAST TAWAS CAGERS DEFEAT ALABASTER

East Tawas high school boys' and girls' "basketeers" opened their basketball season with a twin victory over Alabaster high last Friday at the Community Building.

The Indians snapped into almost top-season form from the opening whistle, displaying a remarkable scoring attack which featured Captain Matt Haglund and Eddie Doak with ten points apiece. Hopes for another successful season rose high when the boys' varsity was able to score a 30 to 5 victory for the opening game. The victory won by this margin shows clearly East Tawas has an accurate, fast-scoring machine. The defensive play of Captain Wilfred Bean and Neil McKay proved that the team is not lacking in this phase of the game.

Meryl Amo, playing his first game at center, displayed his ability at "feeding" the ball to his mates. Four reserves saw action in the game and proved that the Indians are not lacking in reserve material.

East Tawas high's fair sex came through with a thrilling victory over the Alabaster lassies, 29 to 27. Captain Faye Gurley was the outstanding player of the game, scoring 19 points. Her pep and fighting spirit seemed to install in the girls the necessary vim to give the game to East Tawas. In the opening quarter of play Alabaster led, 8 to 2, and at half time they led, 14 to 9. But the East Tawas girls, led by Miss Gurley, came to life in the third quarter and scored 20 points to none for their opponents. Alabaster made a come-back in the final quarter to come within two points of tying East Tawas.

SPENDING PROVIDES JOBS FOR MILLIONS

Employment Furnished by Federal Public Works.

Washington.—Millions of men of all classes, representing virtually every line of industry in every nook and corner of the United States, will be rescued from the slough of unemployment by public works administration funds this winter.

This fact presented itself when Harold L. Ickes, secretary of the interior and head of the administration, announced that some $2,000,000,000 already had been allotted to fight the war on the bread lines.

It is estimated by Department of Labor experts that this money distributed throughout the land will provide 8,220,000 man months of employment in addition to at least twice as much indirect or secondary employment.

Reach Peak Next Spring. Furthermore, it was announced at the administration that the volume of work provided will increase steadily until a peak is reached sometime next spring, although winter weather will retard the program somewhat.

With weather conditions in mind the administration took action on allotments for road construction work in the far northern states first, so that something could be accomplished there before winter.

An interesting fact in connection with the allotments, it was pointed out, is that the secondary work—the gathering and processing of materials—starts as soon as the allotment is made and quite some time before direct work on the project site is started. At the same time it was shown that only the smaller portion of the sum allotted to a project is spent at the project site proper. The greater part is distributed to industries far and wide or to what the administration knows as "capital goods producers."

As an example, there is taken an allotment for a bridge in New York state as soon as the allotment is made, contracts for materials are signed and the producers of "capital goods" prepare for an increased output.

Orders Spread Out. Steel is ordered from Pittsburgh and movement of ore from the mines of Minnesota—figuratively speaking—starts. That necessitates some increase in shipping on the Great Lakes, and after the ore is processed and the steel fabricated, railroad men are assigned the task of hauling it to New York.

In an instance of that kind, administration officials said, the amount of secondary employment effected could never be traced. The increased steel output calls for more coal and countless other materials essential to the processing.

Going deeper into the situation, they pointed out that the increased pay rolls provide funds for such purchases as clothing and household needs from industries entirely unrelated to the project for which the original allotment was made.

Again, they show that most of the funds allotted for irrigation projects in the Southwest, will be spent elsewhere. Electrical equipment will come from Schenectady and cement from the fields of eastern Pennsylvania.

Naval experts say that most of the $28,000,000 allotted for new ship construction by the administration will be spent "inland" for materials giving secondary employment to thousands.

The public works officials have made every effort to distribute the funds in such a manner as to give every section the same measure of relief and allotments have been made for projects all the way from the Virgin Islands to the Philippines and from Alaska to the Gulf.

Travels 2,000,000 Miles

Yakima, Wash.—Traveling 2,000,000 miles over a stretch of railroad approximately 160 miles long is the record of J. A. Patchette, railroad engineer. For 45 years he operated between Spokane and Ellensburg, Wash., never going beyond them.

Peach Tree Bearing Two Crops Perfected

Holliday, Utah.—Constant study of budding peach trees has resulted in success for S. A. Rice, Holliday farmer, who discovered a species that will bear two distinct crops yearly.

Fenced in his unique orchard, Rice has a collection of more than 1,000 small trees. Each spring, he said, the trees blossom, and a few weeks later the crop is completely matured. Then shortly afterward they again produce a splendid crop of prize fruit.

"The Truth Shall Make You Free"

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

A very pathetic picture recently appeared in a number of periodicals. Professor Einstein was represented as walking down a gangplank of a tug which brought him safely to the shores of our country. He boarded the tug some miles out at sea in order to avoid danger as well as publicity. The efforts of this great scientist to avoid being murdered is a stirring chapter in the history of heroism. It is commonly known that a certain faction in Germany placed a price upon his head. Professor Einstein was able to get out of Germany, and found a reasonably safe retreat in England, where he lectured in a number of the large universities. He is now a very welcome guest of one of our universities where he is to lecture and continue his studies in his coveted field of research. Many answers might be given to the question, why was he not allowed to continue his research in Germany? Of THOSE who are disposed to be helpful to others less fortunate than themselves usually come to the place where they wonder what is exactly the right balance in the sharing of other people's troubles. How far should their own energies be drained from the pursuit of a self-sufficient life? When is the self-imposed obligation to others really fulfilled? Is it a good thing to continue indefinitely to lend a sympathetic ear, when it is to no further purpose that the troubles of other people are poured into it?

To question the right of others to share their troubles with you beyond a certain point, or rather to let yourself be played upon beyond it, is to assume something of the attitude of a nurse in a sick room. Doctors know that the most efficient nurse is not the one who feels every throb of pain with the patient. To be an excellent nurse is to realize the necessity of keeping oneself fit for the job in spite of the tendency to follow the easier course of suffering with the object of one's care. There seems to come a time in assisting those who are in need when it is necessary to regard as important the state of one's own mind and health.

Constructive Measure. This is not getting "hardened" to the vicissitudes of others. It is a step in promoting further usefulness. For if a person is made too discouraged by listening to tales of circumstances over which they have no power and do not have means to mitigate, there is just one more person to go on the wrong side of the health and prosperity fence. So it would seem to be well to lend all the encouragement and financial assistance one can, while at the same time defending one's self from the rush of distressing details that would drown the courage of the listener to no possible purpose.

On the other hand, people who receive aid from others frequently feel that the worse they make their situation appear to the charitable person, the more and more will be forthcoming. The opposite often works out as true. If a little aid is received in the right manner, and the one who gave, sees much being made of little, the donor finds joy in repeating the gift. But if the recipient tells of an even harder lot after a number of efforts of friends to assist, then it seems to the givers course, the principal reason was that he is of the Jewish race, and the attitude of Hitler and his followers toward that race has provoked the wrath of the entire civilized world.

A matter, however, far more important than racial discrimination is involved in the act of forcing so great a scientist from his place in the university where he labored so long. No nation can afford to throttle the advance of scientific investigation or block the efforts of those who labor in the field of research. Every nation that has tried to do so soon passed out of existence. A nation which by coercion endeavors to control the freedom of choice in the matter of personal liberties soon falls into the grave which by such acts she has dug for herself.

One of the great advantages of this country has been the freedom with which our men of science have been encouraged to continue their scientific work regardless of race, color or religion. Large sums of money are annually raised by taxation for the support of state universities, and private endowments supply funds for the equipment of laboratories. If our government were to attempt to thwart the progress of scientific investigation, it would meet with such protest that the action would soon have to be rescinded. Our conception of liberty and freedom of speech would not stand for it. May our country be spared from such a fate as was experienced by other nations which attempted to throttle truth. Only the truth can make us free.

that their aid is being sunk in a useless cause, and had better be applied where it brings more fruitful results. Those who have been the object of kindness and generosity should not reward their benefactors by a series of hard luck stories if they wish the benefits to increase.

Popularity

When an attractive girl who dresses well is unsought, and one with less to recommend her is always being taken out, the matter is worth looking into. In one case within the writer's knowledge, the cause was not far to seek. The girl who was less popular was not less liked. In fact, the friends who knew her were most enthusiastic about her except for one thing. Whenever she was given an impromptu invitation, she could not accept it in an impromptu manner. However well she looked, and it always appeared to those who knew her that she was well groomed, she had to take time to change to another frock. This was not necessarily any prettier, but it was always something to be counted upon as taking time.

So it was that friends who really wished for her company were influenced not to ask for it, owing to this one fact. She always held up the party. Word of this passed around among her associates, and instead of receiving the invitations that would normally have been hers, she found herself wondering why others were asked when she was not. It would have been understandable if her wardrobe had been limited to one or two good dresses, saved for state occasions, but her average of good-looking clothes was high.

The girl whose wardrobe is full of gaps may find herself in the predicament of having to change, but she will win more favor in the eyes of those inviting her, if she can manage to keep herself looking fit enough to enter in at a moment's notice. When, however, this is impossible, she should see to it that the interval of changing is made as short as possible.

Because of Thy Great Bounty

by GRACE NOLL CROWELL in Federal Council Bulletin

BECAUSE I have been given much, I, too, shall give; Because of Thy great bounty, Lord, Each day I live I shall divide my gifts from Thee With every brother that I see Who has need of help from me.

BECAUSE I have been sheltered, fed, By Thy good care, I can not see another's lack And I not share My glowing fire, my loaf of bread, My roof's shelter overhead, That, he, too, may be comforted.

BECAUSE love has been lavished so Upon me, Lord, A wealth I know that was not meant For me to hoard, I shall give love to those in need, The cold and hungry clothe and feed, Thus shall I show my thanks indeed.

Turkey with Trimmings married life she saw that it was this penurious trait of hers that had been accountable for most of the trials that had beset their path. Coming from a home where every penny counted, she had found it hard to spend two dollars where one would do if one only skimmed enough. John had tried to reason it out with her many times, explaining to her that he would be the last man in the world to urge her to live beyond their means, but, since they were in a position to do so without endangering their future, he would like to live better than they did. There was a generous nest-egg in the bank and a goodly sum in life insurance should he be taken, so, why, he had often reasoned, couldn't they enjoy a good show or dinner when they felt like it?

Now, in the light of the awakening that had come to her, Janet saw that she had been unjust to Arthur. It was true, she told herself, that she had been doing all the saving and skimming for his sake, but she realized now that she had been robbing him of many joys that were his right, and, perhaps, keeping him back in his profession—keeping him from rising beyond a certain level. She knew, too, that in cheating him she had also cheated herself and made the way hard, but it was of Arthur she was especially thinking. But joy came to her at the thought that it was not too late to make amends.

And on Thanksgiving there was a large turkey on the table, with all the trimmings that anyone could crave, and Janet had invited a few of the people that she knew Arthur liked best to share the feast with them.

Thanking itself if one could afford it, but Janet insisted that a chicken would do them just as well: "What's the use of spending ten dollars or more for a dinner when we can get one that will do just as well for less than five?" she had argued, and finally Arthur let her have her way, but he paused long enough at the door when leaving to call back: "Looks as if we could live like real folks on Thanksgiving day at least."

After he had gone Janet sat in deep thought—his parting remark had stung her deeply. How could he talk like that after all she had done—all the sacrifices that she had made so that things would be easier for him in the future! Then it suddenly dawned upon her that a great many of the worries that had annoyed and upset them of late were mostly of her making. Looking back over their five years of

CHILDREN'S STORY

JERRY MUSKRAT REMEMBERS SOMETHING

Best of plans will meet defeat Unless all details are complete.

THAT is the reason so many seemingly splendid plans never amount to anything. The idea may be the finest ever, but it is bound to fail unless each separate detail in it is worked out and made perfect. If one of these little details failed the whole thing would fail.

Jerry Muskrat, in planning that new house for Reddy Fox, was sure that he had thought of everything. He had even thought of a way for Reddy to get in and out of that house by means of tunnels, just as he himself went in and out of his own home. The only difference would be that Reddy would have dry tunnels instead of tunnels filled with water. He couldn't see any reason in the world why Reddy shouldn't have just as good a house as his, and he said so.

Now while Reddy Fox pretended to be very much interested in the idea of building a house he really hadn't the least idea of trying to build a house. Of course not. He had no use for such a house even if he could

A smile is a widening of the face when pleased.

BONERS are actual humorous tid-bits found in examination papers, essays, etc., by teachers.

Socratic dialogue was speeches between two persons on a certain subject such as holiness, piety, love. One person does most of the talking and dominates the whole talk while the other person merely assents to what is said whether the answer is yes or no. The person who does not talk much is usually shown that what he has said is untrue and that he does not know what he is talking about.

A mummy is one that has no education at all.

The international date line runs through the Pacific Ocean to Greenwich, England, and causes day and night.

The word "don't" is a contraction.

Salem Witchcraft was a Dutch governor. He stamped about on his wooden leg and said I will not give up New York.

The English did not like Napoleon because he had said that they were just a nation of shopkeepers and at a place called Waterloo they charged him over and over again until he had lost everything.

and Reddy grinned more broadly than ever as he noticed that "we."

"Certainly we could," replied Reddy, chuckling down inside as he saw how Jerry was forgetting everything but the idea of that new house. "I suppose you would cut the rushes for me."

"Of course I would, and be glad to," was Jerry's prompt reply. "With plenty of sticks and rushes all we would need would be to plaster it with plenty of mud. This would be to hold them together."

"Did you say mud?" asked Reddy with a funny look on his face.

Jerry saw that funny look and then suddenly remembered that this house was to be built on dry land, and if this was to be the case of course there would be no mud handy. Without mud that house couldn't be built. It just MUST have mud. And there must be lots of it. A little wouldn't do. But unless Reddy should build his house close to the Smiling Pool, which he wasn't in the least likely to do, there would be no way of getting enough mud to it. Jerry looked up at Reddy and in the most mournful voice said:

"All our plans have gone for nothing. You can't build a house like mine. I've just remembered that you haven't any mud. I'm sorry. Let's not talk about it any more."

Without another word Jerry dived and disappeared.

FISH DISHES

IN MANY places fish is so plentiful that it is the cheapest of food. Even where it is shipped in it should be used as freely as the purse will allow, for fish is easily digested and a most wholesome food.

There are so many fresh water lakes and streams that all one needs is a fishing line with a little patience to bring home a meal.

Baked Stuffed Fish.

The stuffing of fish may be varied in many ways, adding to its flavor and making it more appetizing. The following is one that will be liked: Take one cupful of melted butter, one-half cupful each of rolled cracker crumbs and bread crumbs, salt, onion juice, pepper, and two cupfuls of chopped sour pickle. Stuff the fish, or if in fillets, put a layer of stuffing between slices and bake. Garnish with pickled onions and parsley.

Jellied Fish.

Cook two pounds of fish and remove all the bones and skin. Chop fine and add slowly one-fourth cupful of salt, the juice of three lemons, one tablespoonful of grated onion, two dozen blanched and chopped almonds and a dash of cayenne. Add two tablespoonfuls of gelatin to one-fourth cupful of water and dissolve in the hot broth, mix with the other ingredients and fill the mold. Chill, serve in a nest of crisp lettuce with mayonnaise dressing.

Mackerel Roe.

Scald the roe in acidulated water, drain and wipe dry, being careful not to break them. Season with salt, chopped parsley and onion juice. Flour well, dip in egg and crumbs and fry in deep fat. Serve on a folded napkin with fried parsley and slices of lemon for garnish.

There are no useless. If a man can find— And so he can—occasions to be kind, No high nor low Nor rich nor poor men know In life's great kingdom of the heart and mind.

Who are the useless? Only those who pass And give no word, no thought, no look, alas, To other men Or other women then, Whatever heights they win or wealth amass.

These are the useless. But the much required The very needed and the most desired, Are those who meet The world and leave it sweet, The humble heartened and the great inspired.

The Fourth Lovely Lady

SYNOPSIS

Following the wedding of her niece, Cintra, which she has financed, Matilda Smith Lovely ("Smiff," by her own insistence), youngest and physically the lightest of the four Lovely sisters, finds herself in decidedly straitened circumstances, but has her own plans for the future, which she refuses to divulge to her sisters, prominent figures in New York society. The historic Lovely estate, Lovelyville, in Virginia, is owned by Smiff's brother, Bill Lee, who lives in Chile. Smiff's dearest wish is to own Lovelyville. It is rented to a Mr. Johnstone Nesbit. Under the name "Madame Saitou" Smiff establishes herself as a "Little Sister of the Rich," to be remunerative, but the other Lovely sisters are horrified at her becoming what they term an "adventress."

Then Smiff recalled that Charles had warned her to be on her guard against such an occasion. This man was a reporter, a subtle and insinuating interviewer who had got wind of her unusual occupation, and she was not inclined to be interviewed. In an instant she was on her feet. "The door is just behind you," she told him. He cast a deliberate glance toward it. "Well, it isn't going to run off," he rejoined. "I fancy I can always make my getaway. And there are some things that I want to know that I'm going to ask you. I came here for that, then I lost my nerve. Now I've got it back again." "You certainly have," Smiff agreed fervently, "all the nerve in the world." Despite his remark about a getaway, which she recognized as in character for a gunman, she had definitely abandoned that theory. This was a new genus to her but he was not a desperado.

"Are you a reporter?" she inquired, now considering the alternative theory. "No," said the man. "Then why should you wish to question me?" "Isn't it your job to answer questions?"

"You mean that you want to consult me professionally? In that case, go back to the waiting room and I'll send for you when I'm ready."

"I—Pd really like to oblige," the man hesitated, "but I don't see how I could, even if there was any sense in it. I'd be taking a risk of losing my nerve again and running away. And I only actually need your advice on one point."

Buttons appeared bearing a tray on which were a glass of water, an apple and the sandwiches.

Smiff eyed the food lovingly, as did the man.

"Jove, I'm starving," he said, "can't he buy me some like those? I could eat one of yours while he's gone. Catch!" He flipped a number of coins in quick succession at Buttons, who caught them cleverly and, with a grin on his freckled face, made off without waiting for orders.

Feeling that the situation had now gone quite beyond her control, Smiff mutely held out the plate. Her self-invited guest helped himself and took a large bite before speaking.

"Sweet sandwiches," he mumbled. "You live high, don't you?"

In her interest in this new specimen of humanity, Smiff forgot her hunger and watched her visitor help himself to another sandwich, the first having disappeared, as she declared afterward, "like a conjurer's rabbit."

"Do have a sandwich," he invited her hospitably, seizing the fast emptying plate from her hands and offering it to her. "I can recommend them, and it's a mystery to me how some women get along eating nothing the way they seem to—while there are others who never stop eating," he added as an afterthought.

What did one do to put in his place an utter stranger who invaded one's office and wolfed one's lunch? Smiff acknowledged that she did not know and, accepting his invitation to have one of her own sandwiches, munched companionably, regarding him appraisingly while.

Aside from the pin, his attire was conventional. A little on the loud side perhaps, but well cut and becoming. His shoes excellent. His hands, by which she was given to judging character, were lean, nervous, strong. Well proportioned, too, the fingers neither long nor short, the nails well-cared for but not polished. The hands of a man of taste, she decided, and then smiled broadly as he continued to eat her sandwiches with relish. The word struck her as peculiarly appropriate in the circumstances.

Her gaze then traveled to his face. Any prejudice she might have had was rapidly melting away and she found it an interesting study.

"You can have that sandwich," she volunteered, weakly giving way to the instinct innate in every woman from the time Eve shared her only apple with Adam, to feed the male of the species. "Buttons will be here soon with more."

"Sure you don't want it!" he inquired as nursery manners dictated, and took it eagerly, while she went on with her mental appraisal.

Unexpectedly his voice broke in on her thoughts. "Well, what's your decision? I hope to the lord I don't look such a fool as I am."

He was not obnoxious then. Perhaps even he had affected his intense interest in the sandwiches to give her the opportunity to study him.

Buttons, arriving with unusual expedition, relieved her of the necessity of replying.

"Cream and olive all out, cream and walnut, too," he explained breathlessly. "I took what they had ready. Swiss cheese on rye; lettuce on whole wheat and two club."

"They'll do excellently well so long as there are enough of them," the stranger averred, eyeing the pile hungrily even as he waved aside some change that was offered him.

"Are you a man or an ostrich?" Smiff demanded, speaking as if they were childhood friends who had quarreled amicably for years. "I warn you right now that I'm going to have one of the club sandwiches if you expire of starvation before my eyes."

The man too forgot the professional position.

"Fair enough, but you don't have to get in a pet about it. I offered you that last sandwich, you know, all honorable and aboveboard, even though it tore my heart to do it."

Smiff took a club sandwich. "Why were you so famished?" she inquired casually.

"Interrupted at breakfast this morning. Haven't had any appetite for days before," he replied. "Mental strain, you know. Too worried to eat, and that's a fact. I'm a bit easier in my mind now that I know you. You're the sort to pull a chap out of a scrape. I'm dead sure of it."

"So you're in a scrape?"

He nodded his head, his eyes on her face.

"Killed somebody?"

"Not yet."

"Run away with all the available assets of a bank?"

"No, not tempted. Poverty's not my affliction."

Smiff finished her club sandwich in silence. In silence watched him eat until he was satisfied. Then she rang for Buttons to remove what was left.

"And now," she said when they had both lighted cigarettes, "this is not a game of Twenty Questions. I expect another client shortly. We must get down to business. What is your trouble?"

The man assumed a hang-dog air. Watching him intently, Smiff decided he might be as much as forty years old although she had previously judged him much younger, his expression being singularly ingenuitous.

"The trouble is I can't bear fat women," he averred.

No woman of her proportions under such circumstances could have failed to remember the last time she had stood on her bathroom scales.

my hotel is Mercy. So surprised to see me.—Why hadn't I said I was coming? We might have traveled together. Such old and dear friends, no one could take exception to it—and giggles, giggles like a school girl. Comes to my table at breakfast time and says it all over again. Just as if I didn't know her cook is own sister to mine and that I can't wink without their whole household hearing of it. That's now, I'm speaking of; it's not the first time it's happened."

Smiff emitted an unladylike whistle. "My young friend," she said, "I think a retreat is in order. Travel for a time. The chances are that the lady will console herself while you are away and if she doesn't, when you return you can keep things on a footing of indifference from the beginning."

"I've thought of that," he returned. "It's impossible for me to go away. Absolutely impossible. For purely personal reasons. Yet so long as I stay home, I can't avoid her. She is my nearest and only intimate neighbor, and when it comes to finding necessity for my advice her fertility of invention is staggering. I'll have to keep on dodging unless you can discover some escape, and sooner or later I know I'll hurt her feelings, she'll weep on my shoulder and I'll find myself hooked."

"Well, then, if it's inevitable, why don't you march up to the altar like a man? You are very tender of her feelings, perhaps you are fonder of her than you think." Covertly Smiff watched him to see how he took this suggestion. His face did not change.

"In a way, I am fonder of her. She has been a good friend to me. Only I—n't it all, she's fat! I wish you could see her. Then you'd understand why no man could fancy himself in love with her." He made a helpless gesture.

"I will give your case serious thought. Now you must go." Smiff rang a bell, Buttons appeared and at once opened the door into the elevator lobby.

"Your fee—and when shall I come again?"

"You can pay me when I've solved your difficulty. Come day after tomorrow at—"

He had picked up his hat and coat, now he paused on the threshold to interrupt before Smiff had named an hour.

"I'll come to lunch—the same time," and added with an impish gleam in his eyes, "I love your lunches."

The door closed behind him and Smiff found herself thinking with sympathy not, strangely enough, of her client, but of poor Mercy who was "too fat" for love.

She had a minute or two to recover from her late visitor's audacity before her next client, Pamela Phelps, entered. The girl had written that she would call at two and hoped Smiff would be able to see her alone.

"You're a dear to find time for me, Smiff." Pam bent and bestowed a kiss on Smiff's cheek. "Although I've really am to be offered up on the altar of British respectability."

"I know you're to be presented," Smiff nodded. "What's the objection?"

"I hate the English, I loathe social functions, I won't marry a foreigner—and anyway I want to go to Wyoming."

"And where do I come in?"

"You're to be an angel and persuade your Susan to give up the idea."

"Not so easy," Smiff meditated the point. "You see it's natural she should be ambitious for you, Pam, and it will be a terrible disappointment if you let her down now."

"There's bound to be a disappointment some time,"—the girl's manner left no room for doubt that her mind was made up,—"it had better come sooner than later. In her heart, she wants me to marry a title, just as Cintra did. She'd never understand that it was seeing Cintra so perfectly satisfied to give up her own country and be Lady Leicester that convinced me I wouldn't be! Not even if I had the luck to find some one as nice as Leicester who'd like me. The British are so consciously superior to all other nations that I hate them more than I do all the rest put together. I won't put myself in a position where they are justified in classing me as one more American trying to push into European society. I refuse to be humiliated in just that way. I'm perfectly satisfied at home."

"Any other reason, Pam? A counter-attraction in Wyoming, by chance?" Smiff looked at her keenly but the girl was patently honest when she shook her head in the negative.

"I was out there summer before last with Mr. Moffatt and Peg. (She was a Foxcroft girl, too.) I liked it. I want to go there again. You say that I've not been a problem so far—well, really, Smiff, that's because I've exercised a lot of self-control. Life that's just one party after another is intolerably dull. Dancing all night and making sprightly conversation to amuse men who don't amuse you in the least—"

"Yet you had a good time. Cintra told me that you are popular."

Pam shrugged heavily. "I'm a Phelps, and mother gives awfully good parties."

"That's not doing yourself justice, Pam. You're likable even if you aren't a beauty," Smiff spoke quickly. "I was growing increasingly clear to her that the girl had had some experience that rankled. There had been bitterness in that "mother gives awfully good parties."

Pam said nothing. The girl had a gift of silence. It flashed across Smiff's mind that there would be something ponderous in her resistance if she were in opposition to you, and she went on, her words carefully calculated: "Take the English crowd that Leicester brought over. I should say that you were more popular with them than any of the bridesmaids except possibly Eve Goodhue. And Eve is always hors concours."

"She has had a wonderful life," Pam said. "I don't know a girl I envy more. I don't mean her looks, I mean the fact that Eve comes to all things with a real gusto. We poor rich kids were given sports as tasks. We were taught to skate, we were taught to dive, we were taught to play golf and tennis. We had professional instructors in everything. We Americans certainly are h—l on education." She ended with a sincere heartiness that would have amazed her mother. "And now," she went on, "I'm expected to go to England and be taught how to manage my court train, how to curtsy to royalty, how to get out of a room backward, how to address the nobility and gentry. I simply won't do it, Smiffy. I won't be accused of chasing after a title."

"No one would accuse—"

"Yes, they would." She caught the words out of Smiff's mouth impatiently. "Once I went over, it couldn't be escaped. If I married there, they'd say I'd made my catch. If I didn't, they'd make fun of me because I'd tried and failed. Either way it would be abominable. I'm not a lion hunter. The most authentic British lion is safe from pursuit by me. I've at least made up my mind to that much, and if you'll break the fact to mother it will be a help."

Smiff regarded the girl contemptuously for a long moment.

"If I remember my history, America whipped England once on this side of the ocean. I'd rather like to see what we could do in the way of carrying war into their own country." Her glance conveyed an interrogation and the girl smilingly shook her head.

"Very well, then, although I don't promise Wyoming, I'm virtually certain that Susan would discern a regular he-man from the great open spaces lurking there, no matter what you or I could say to the contrary. But I'm disappointed. I took particular notice of one large British lion that I thought was destined to make a splendid American door-mat."

Pam's silence was good-tempered but absolute. At what cost to herself no one would ever know, she had decided to dismiss that subject for ever.

"There's a lady waiting for you, ma'am. An eee-normous lady, not so tall but awful wily." Buttons was standing in the outer lobby near the elevator and there was more than a hint of excitement in his voice. "Gee, I betcha Tuffy Dorian'll say I'm a liar when I tell him how big she is. I betcha any coicous'd be glad to pay her a pile of money—an' if she'd only get herself tattooed—" For a moment he went into a trance, words falling him at thought of the vast canvas awaiting an artist.

"Have there been any cancellations or telephone messages, Buttons?" Smiff had been surprised that no further protests had followed Laura's visit.

"No cancellations, Madame. Two telephone calls. On your desk, Madame."

"Very good," said Smiff. "I will ring when I want you."

She found an urgent message from Louise. Could she meet her for luncheon? Anywhere at all that she might suggest and any hour. Smiff chuckled, remembering that she had a previous engagement to take lunch with a man whose very name she did not know. She told the maid who answered her ring that she was sorry she would be unable to meet her sister until five o'clock, when she would be at Pierre's.

The second call asked her to ring up a number that was not among those noted in her telephone register. No hurry about that. She dressed and at length rang the number indifferently. The first words spoken made her sit stiffly erect.

"It's Madame Saitou, isn't it? Recognized your voice at once. I've sent you a client. Be an angel and convince her that I'm worse luck for her than seeing one crow on a Friday morning. Don't forget I'll be with you for lunch. I'm saving my appetite. Always had a passion for sandwiches." He hung up without giving her a chance for inquiry or reply. She, too, however, had recognized a voice and it did not take great acuteness to foresee that the large lady who had so excited Buttons would prove to be the Mercy of the merciless pursuit.

Smiff was now eager to look the monster over for herself. She rang for Buttons.

"Tell the strange lady that I can't possibly see her for at least three-quarters of an hour," she instructed him. "I will fit her in if she will wait. Otherwise it will be two days before I can arrange for her. Saturday at ten is the only vacant time."

"Yes, Madame," Buttons made his military salute, at once descending from the official heights and lowering his voice confidentially: "Betcha she stays. Betcha she does. She's crazy to get a-hold of you."

His prophecy proved true. When the latest client was ushered out, the stranger was still patiently sitting in one of the little private rooms. At once Smiff told Buttons to escort her to the lounge.

"Jus' wait till you clap eyes on her!" Buttons' tone was important, as if he took a personal pride in this exhibit. "She's a corker. I'll say I never saw her equal."

Howe About:

The Mother-in-Law Not Soldiers Alone Silerius and His Wives

By ED HOWE

IN MY town there is much amusement and gossip because of the manner in which a shrewd old woman is fattening a young man, in the hope he will marry her daughter. And in case she is able to bring the marriage about, every one says she will promptly ditch her husband and son, and go to live with the son-in-law, who has every mark of being a good provider easily managed. . . . Every woman with a daughter considers the possible old age haven the daughter's marriage may provide; so, in selecting the candidate, the mother is often more particular than the daughter. . . . The mother-in-law is often laughed at, but her victories are many.

The young men who were drafted to serve as soldiers in the late World War often tell of the great sacrifices they made. In some instances, these were truly great, as many were killed and wounded.

But the soldiers should remember, in all fairness, the sacrifice made by those too old or young to be drafted, and thus escaped military service. There is not a single inhabitant of the United States who has not been greatly punished by the war. Millions have lost employment formerly steady and remunerative; other millions have lost their fortunes; so many formerly prominent and well-to-do have lost everything that the book called "Who's Who in America" is now referred to as "Who's Through in America."

Possibly more people have committed suicide because of the depression following the war than were killed in battle on the American side; the number of suicides has at least been very great and pitiful.

Let no one suppose the suffering and loss in the war was confined to the soldiers. One result is that our once proud country is humbled to its knees; the once rich Americans have become beggars, the proud people formerly called smart Yankees have been exposed as great and helpless dunces.

Let the old soldiers mercifully remember the ragged crowd of whom they are demanding pensions.

Grotius, who wrote an introduction to the memoirs of Silerius, had long been the intimate friend of the author. During the most exciting days in the history of Rome, and when Silerius was prominent in army and senate Grotius was associated with him both as soldier and statesman, though in less distinguished positions.

Grotius says it was occasionally charged against Silerius that he was bitter toward women because he had never known a perfect and enduring love. Remarkably this criticism, Silerius once said to Grotius "I have known the love of five women as perfect as exists; the sex has nothing to offer I have not known. With some dozens of others I have had the average experience; with a few, excessive misfortune. Women on the whole treated me well; no one knows better their strength or their weakness. Such criticism of the sex as I offer is only criticism I direct at myself; at all members of the human family, in the hope that we may improve our weaknesses, and increase our peace and our comforts."

I am surprised anyone ever dares appear on rostrum or in newspaper columns to tell people what to do. "That man tell me!" the people say; "I can tell him." I rarely advise people as to what they should do or think; only what I have found it best to think and do, and why.

If a storm comes up, and my trees threaten to fall on the roof sheltering me, I cannot help becoming somewhat excited, and then do the best I can with it; but storms are not frequent, and I try to avoid excitement when it is unnecessary. I have long observed of the stronger men that they handle excitement rather well; otherwise they weaken their nerves. And nervous people rarely have good health, or are able to work to best advantage; doctors say nervousness is one of our greatest dangers.

Such amiability as a man is able to acquire in middle age he should make an effort to retain in age. "Crabbed age" is an old expression; meaning cross-grained, perverse, cantankerous. Long association with culture should do more for an old man than raw nature does for an old dog.

Brigham Young said he loved the Lord, loved his people, loved to do good—and when he made all his wives cry by taking another wife, called that love. . . . I do not know exactly what the word means, but it doesn't mean what is attributed to it by Mormons, playwrights, or young men when they go to see the girls. In describing love the dictionary reverses itself several times.

An actress, now old and poor, says that at one time during the days of her prosperity she had the families of eleven relatives dependent on her. . . . Even at that she might have saved something for her old age. She confesses, also, that once when playing for a pet dog left in New York, and paid $2,200 for a special train to bring the animal to California.

UNFORTUNATE CHILDREN

Approximately one-fifth of all pre-school and school children in the United States are suffering from malnutrition, inadequate housing and lack of medical care, according to the children's bureau of the United States Department of Labor. In some regions, says the bureau, the proportion of below par children is even greater.

This tragic situation deeply impressed a recent conference of state health officers, a majority of whom placed the nutritional needs of children above all other national requirements.—Literary Digest.

"Please try to believe that I'm not an utter fool when I tell you there's a woman who means to marry me and I'm shaking in my shoes for fear some time she'll corner me."

Smiff took a deep breath.

"You proposed to her when? I mean how long ago?"

"I never proposed to her. What kind of ass do you think I am?"

"Then in the name of all that's reasonable, if you're not engaged why should you assume that she wants to marry you?"

MAYANS AS LEADERS

According to Robert Henseling, German astronomer, the Mayan observations of the heavens were so accurately made that it was possible to determine the exact dates on which their two calendar periods began—one October 15, 3373 B. C., and the other June 2, 8498 B. C. The date 8498, he said, occurs also in the oldest Chinese tradition, but the great superiority of the Mayan astronomy led him to believe that Chinese and other cultures were imperfect derivations from it. Interest in American antiquity has increased in recent years. A reproduction of a Mayan temple was one of the features of the World's fair at Chicago. This German theory may further intensify study of the subject.

As the population of the continent increased and most of its large game was destroyed, wolves disappeared from large parts of their former domain. They still are found, however, in the deep forests along our northern border from Michigan westward, and south along the Rocky mountains and the Sierra Madre to Durango, Mexico, and also in all the Gulf states. This year a trapper reported seeing a wolf in northern New York state.

"Variations in climate within their range in North America have resulted in several geographic races of wolves which show marked differences in size and color. The white Arctic wolf is the most notable of these, but the gray or timber wolf of the Rocky mountain region and the eastern United States is the best known. The 'black wolf' is a color phase of the familiar gray wolf.

"Gray wolves appear to keep the same mates for life, and in the spring their young are born in natural dens among great rocks, or in a burrow dug for the purpose in a hillside. Their litters consist of from eight to twelve pups. Both parents exercise the greatest vigilance for the protection of the several young. The male kills and brings in game and stands guard in the neighborhood, while the mother devotes most of her time to the pups while they are very small.

"At other times of the year packs, made up generally of parents and the young of the preceding season, hunting together with a mutual helpfulness in pursuing and bringing down their prey, show a high order of intelligence. Wolves are, in fact, first cousins of the dog, whose mental agility is recognized by all.

Real "Big, Bad Wolf" Rarely Shows Boldness Toward Man

Not as Great Menace as Is Generally Supposed.

Washington.—"Who's Afraid of the Big, Bad Wolf?"

A blithesome—even nonchalant—phrase that may be considered a hit at depression has thus swept the country in a popular song.

"The real, not the metaphorical, wolf has never been as great a menace to man in North America as is generally supposed," says a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

"Since the dawn of history Old world wolves, when hunger pressed, have not hesitated to attack man. The very name wolf, therefore, was brought to this country as a synonym for a fearful scourge. American wolves, however, have rarely shown this fearlessness toward man, probably owing to the abundance of game before the advent of the white man, and to the general use of firearms among the pioneers, who early taught the wolf to keep his distance.

Once numerous in United States.

"Large wolves, closely related to those of Europe and Siberia, once infested practically all of Arctic and temperate North America, excepting only the arid desert plains. This range extended from the remotest northern lands beyond 83 degrees of latitude, south to the mountains about the Valley of Mexico.

"When America was first colonized by white men, wolves were numerous everywhere in proportion to the abundance of game animals. As the population of the continent increased and most of its large game was destroyed, wolves disappeared from large parts of their former domain. They still are found, however, in the deep forests along our northern border from Michigan westward, and south along the Rocky mountains and the Sierra Madre to Durango, Mexico, and also in all the Gulf states. "During the existence of the great buffalo herds, packs of big gray 'buffalo wolves' roamed the western plains.

taking toll wherever it pleased them. With the disappearance of buffalo herds only a few of the wolves survived. There have been enough, however, not only to commit great ravages among the deer and other game in northern Michigan and on the coastal islands of Alaska, but also to destroy much live stock in the Rocky mountain region.

"So serious did losses in cattle and sheep on the ranges become that congress made large appropriations for the destruction of wolves and other predatory animals, and such disturbers of the peace have been greatly reduced in numbers. The necessity of action of this kind is shown by the capture in Wyoming of a huge old dog wolf with a definite record of having killed over $25,000 worth of stock."

Princess Is Named as Next Monaco Ruler

Monarch Settles Claims to Succession.

Monte Carlo.—The various claims to right of succession to the throne of the principality of Monaco have been brusquely settled by the bachelor ruler, Prince Louis II, who has issued a decree reinstating his illegitimate daughter, Princess Charlotte, as his successor.

Monte Carlo and Monaco are virtually synonymous, for the entire principality comprises but a few thousand square acres.

Theoretically autonomous, Monaco is in practice subservient to the rule of the French government. The famous casinos are owned by a syndicate which pays the reigning prince a substantial salary to tend their interests.

Prince Louis' decree was prompted by claims of Comte Aymard de Chabrilion, who insists he is the rightful heir to what is one of the few paying royal jobs left in the world. His claims had been helped by Princess Charlotte's action in renouncing her rights of succession in favor of her son, Prince Ranier VII, when last February she divorced Prince Pierre de Polignac. The right of succession depends on direct descent from the legitimate heir. Louis formally adopted his daughter as his legitimate heir to qualify her.

The Comte Chabrilion, who always had disputed her rights, redoubled his efforts to obtain the succession for himself when Princess Charlotte renounced her rights in a statement in which she said:

"After having given my family and my country two children who are the legitimate hope of the dynasty, I think I have done my duty sufficiently without being condemned for reasons of state to continue a marriage which is contrary to my inclinations."

The comte stirred up so much trouble that her father persuaded her to resume her place as the principality's future ruler and thus insure the eventual succession of her son.

Foreclosures Averted for 17,957 Home Owners

Washington. — Impending foreclosures on 17,957 urban homes, involving properties valued at $48,753,061, have been prevented as a result of activities of the Home Owners' Loan corporation, it was announced from Washington.

At the same time it was announced that field officers of the corporation have tentatively approved 63,816 individual applications for urban home loans in a total volume of $179,880,468.

Corporation officials have been concentrating in a campaign to induce mortgage holders to accept its bonds in the cases of distressed home owners. They feel that gratifying progress has been made in recent weeks.

The corporation said that, in addition to the 17,957 foreclosures averted, applications for mortgage loans numbering 1,080, with dollar volume of $3,167,459, were withdrawn after being filed, these representing cases in which the corporation through its local offices assisted home owners successfully to negotiate extensions of existing mortgages or in refinancing these mortgages outside the corporation.

Applications rejected by the local offices of the corporation number 14,111. Among those rejected, 78 per cent were ineligible under the terms of the home owners' act and 22 per cent were ruled ineligible after appraisals had been made by agents of the corporation.

Workers on Air Lines Show Increase of 500

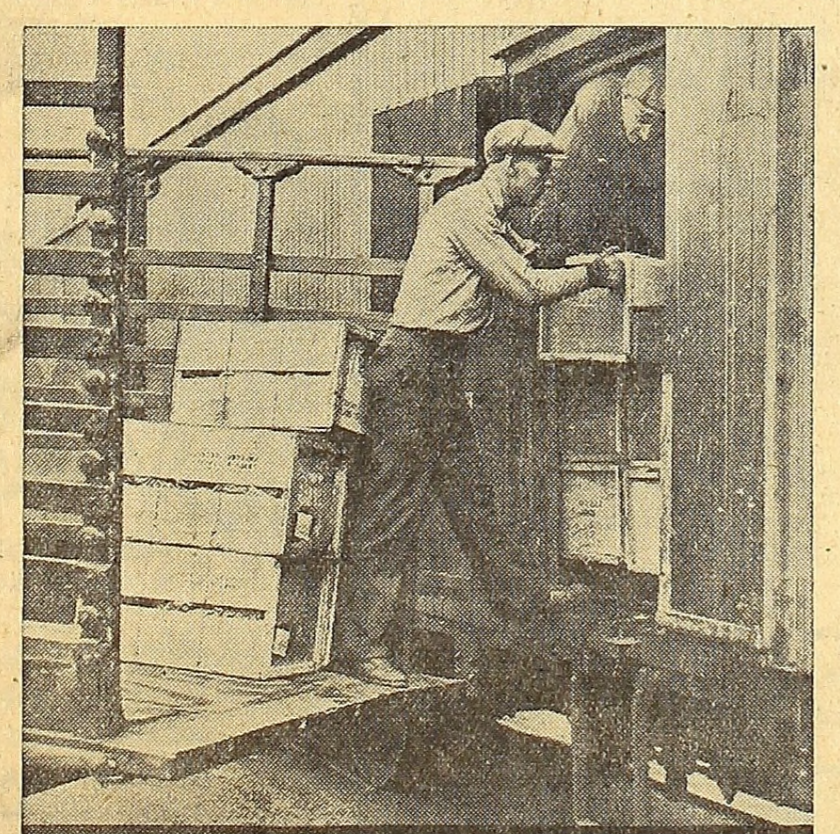

Washington. — Approximately 500 more persons were employed by the American operated airlines on July 1, 1933, than on the same date in 1932, according to the aeronautics branch of the Department of Commerce. The 1933 total was 5,997 employees.

Of this number, 575 were pilots and 192 co-pilots, while 2,236 were mechanics, 1,613 other hangar and field personnel, and 1,351 office employees.

Gasoline consumed by scheduled airlines during the first half of 1933 totaled 12,589,547 gallons, the department noted, a substantial increase over the 1932 figures. Oil consumed by these planes also showed an increase, jumping from 317,656 gallons for the first six months of 1932 to 470,184 gallons for the 1933 period.

All of these increases were made in spite of the fact that at the end of the period this year there were only 544 planes in operation as compared with 580 on July 1, 1932.

and a card, with you named as the donor, will be sent them with the first issue of the magazine.

Dr. W. C. Clark, professor of educational psychology of the University of Michigan, will broadcast Sunday evening at six o'clock over station WJR. His topic will be, "The Junior High School and the Individual Pupil."

Report cards will be given out on Wednesday.

Seventh and Eighth Grades
Margaret Fox has been absent for several days.

The eighth grade history class has started studying the Civil War. The seventh grade history class is studying about the Revolutionary War.

We have finished making our panels and card table covers in art. The following pupils had perfect spelling lessons the past week: In the eighth grade—Dorothy McDonald, Mildred Cholger, Thelma Herman, and Joy Smith; in the seventh grade—Betty Davis.

Fifth and Sixth Grades
The sixth grade reading class is working on the dramatization of "Thanksgiving at Todd's Asylum." The principal characters are: Eph Todd, Aunt Tildy, Fisherman Jones—Myrie Bowen, Margaret Davis, and Leonard Brown, and the inventor will be played by Allan Miller. Frank Hill will play the part of Miltades, the turkey.

Third and Fourth Grades
Ruth Giddings won the third grade spelling contest Wednesday afternoon.

The fourth graders finished their wheat chart Tuesday.

The third grade people made a Thanksgiving booklet last week.

Primary Room
We are glad to have Gilbert Sievert back at school after his absence due to an automobile accident.

The following second graders had perfect spelling papers all last week: Willard Musolf, Neil Iibka, Maxine DePotty, Norma Lou Westcott, and Wayne White.

City were guests of the evening and took part in the program. A lunch was served later.

Mrs. S. E. Somers spent Thursday in Bay City.

Roy McMurray of Saginaw came Monday night and his wife and children returned with him on Tuesday. Miss Cora LaBerge accompanied them home. Mrs. McMurray has been suffering from a nervous breakdown at the home of her sisters, Misses Cora and Denesge LaBerge.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Sheldon of Detroit are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Sheldon.

The regular meeting of the Parent-Teacher Association was held at the high school Monday evening. A group of third grade pupils of Miss Evenson's room gave a number of songs, with Miss Elizabeth Ropert acting as announcer. Walter Seger of the County Normal class played a clarinet solo, with Miss Huhtala as accompanist. Miss Joy Vaughan gave an interesting talk on the home arts section meetings of the teachers' institute held at Flint.

Miss Vaughan was one of the speakers on this program. Miss Helen Applin reported on the early elementary division program and section meeting and the art exhibit. Superintendent Swanson gave the highlights of the addresses given by the speakers at the general sessions and also gave an interesting discourse on a panel debate in which some leading educators took part at one of the meetings at the institute. Mr. Swanson was chosen as one of the debaters on this program.

Miss Helen Cooley has returned to her home in Missouri after visiting her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Alex Cooley, since early last spring.
