

TAWAS CITY

MRS. L. J. FOX DIES WEDNESDAY MORNING

Funeral Services Will Be Held This Afternoon at M. E. Church

Mrs. Armentine Fox of this city passed away at 8:30 Wednesday morning. She had been in poor health for a number of years and ill since September. The deceased was the wife of Leonard J. Fox, agent for the Erie & Michigan Railroad at Alabaster.

Armentine Jennings, the daughter of the late Edwin Jennings and Caroline Jennings, was born February 26, 1876, at Decorah, Iowa. After the death of her mother she came to Michigan with her father. She was united in marriage January 16, 1896, to Leonard J. Fox. Mr. and Mrs. Fox and family came to this city from Saginaw in August, 1923.

Mrs. Fox is survived by the husband and four daughters, Mrs. N. Pappas and Mrs. G. D. King of East Tawas, Geraldine and Margaret at home. She is also survived by three brothers, Claude Jennings of Eaton Rapids, Edwin Jennings and Ward Jennings of Detroit, and two sisters, Mrs. Albert Menger of Cleveland and Mrs. W. F. Kelly of Turner.

The funeral services will be held this afternoon (Friday) from the Tawas City Methodist Episcopal church. Rev. A. E. Tinglan of Gaines will officiate.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Fox deeply sympathize with the bereaved family.

Sage-Lomas

Miss Marjorie Sage, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Sage of Mt. Pleasant, became the bride of Arnold Lomas, son of Mrs. Emma Lomas of East Tawas, at the Christ Episcopal church in East Tawas on Sunday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock.

The church was beautifully decorated with spruce and balsam boughs; behind the altar were trees with bright lights.

The bride was dressed in white and carried white bridal roses and sweet peas arranged on a muff of white satin. Her only attendant was her sister, Mrs. Marguerite Tillotson of Shelby, who wore a honeydew satin gown and carried tea roses.

Fred and Wade Lomas attended their brother. Carl Siglin and George Lomas were ushers. The bride entered on the arm of her brother, Frank Sage, of Mt. Pleasant, while the Lohengrin march was played by Mrs. Vivian Hatzman of Detroit.

A reception for thirty guests was held at the Inn in Tawas City after the ceremony.

Mrs. A. A. Sage, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sage of Mt. Pleasant, Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Tillotson of Shelby, Mr. and Mrs. Hatzman of Detroit, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Schweinsberg and daughters and Victor Dean of Bay City, George Bryant and Mrs. Clara B. Fisher of Carnegie, Pa., were out of town guests.

Mrs. Lomas taught music and art in Tawas City for two years and Mr. Lomas is a member of the United States Forestry department. They left immediately for a short wedding trip to New York City.

50th Anniversary

THE HERALD comes here to build and help others to build up this city and all parts of Iosco county . . . It will be your friend . . . Like experienced miners we have pitched our tent and staked our claim. We shall gather the news, like precious particles of gold, and present them smelted, with dross removed, for your use and pleasure," stated W. N. Miller in the salute which appeared in the first issue of The Tawas Herald. Numerous changes have occurred in the ownership and policy of the Herald since that first issue, but usefulness to the people of Tawas City and Iosco county has ever remained its primary aim.

The Herald began its life at a time of revolutionary change. Its leading first-page story chronicled an event of change. The first passenger train had just run to Alger over the Detroit, Bay City and Alpena railway. The railroad did not extend directly to Bay City, but to Alger on the Michigan Central railroad, and Oscoda was its northern terminal. The event foreshadowed the principal activity of half a century in the Tawas. Another great change was in sight—the forests were rapidly dwindling. Although it was recorded in the first issue of the Herald that 500,000,000 feet of virgin pine stood on land adjacent to the new railroad, an editorial appeared which speculated on new enterprises to replace that great industry. Attention was called to farming, grazing, the extensive gypsum deposits, saline wells, railroading and fishing, and the Herald looked toward the future with hope because of the diversity of natural resources in the county.

The initial issue of the Herald appeared January 10, 1884, with W. N. Miller as editor and publisher. Advertisers represented were: A. G. VanWey, hotel; E. B. Spileman, real estate and lumber inspecting; Hamilton and Bryant, provisions; C. H. Prescott and Sons, dry goods and provisions; T. Simon, clothing, dry goods and furnishings; W. B. Kelly, furniture; John Huston, boots and shoes; Grise and Crandall, planing mill; George S. Darling, drugs and medicines, and Moses Miner, boots and shoes. County officers in 1884 were: Clark Esmond, sheriff; J. O. Whittemore, probate judge; E. E. Williams, clerk; W. V. Penoyar, treasurer; S. G. Taylor, register of deeds; C. R. Henry, prosecuting attorney, and D. E. Guiley, surveyor. N. C. Harting had just been appointed circuit court stenographer.

Mr. Miller continued as publisher of The Herald until 1890, when it was purchased by that picturesque and legendary figure in Tawas City history, Michael Murphy. In 1892 it was disposed of to J. E. Dudley of West Branch. Dudley never really assumed control of the paper and on March 17, 1893 the Herald was purchased by Len J. Patterson, who controlled its destinies for twenty years. During that time, from 1893 to 1913, many improvements and changes were made in the plant and paper. The publication was twice increased in size, first to a six column and a few years later to a seven column paper.

On June 1, 1913, the plant and business was purchased by Jas. E. Ballard, who continued as owner until September 1, 1926. During those thirteen years, some of the greatest changes were made in the Herald. The policy was changed from Democratic to independent, with less emphasis on politics and more on strictly news. In the mechanical department new type was purchased and hand composition was replaced with that from the Linotype. The Herald was the first weekly newspaper north of Bay City to install a Linotype and was one of a few weekly papers in the state to use one at that time. Other weeklies quickly followed the Herald's example for the old school hand compositor had nearly disappeared. Tim Connoley and James Irwin were the last two "hand comps" employed on the Herald. Both were experts in their work and typical traveling printers of the old days before the machine age.

W. N. Miller, the founder of the Herald, is now publisher of the Leslie (Michigan) Republican. Michael Murphy, who succeeded him, died several years ago at Minneapolis. L. J. Patterson is a resident of Detroit and James E. Ballard operates a commercial printing plant at Niles, Michigan.

P. N. Thornton, the present publisher, leased the Herald on September 1, 1923, and purchased it three years later. During these years we have put forth every effort to keep the paper up to or surpass, at least in a small way, the high standard set by our predecessors.

We wish to express our appreciation at this time for the fine co-operation we have received from our staff of faithful correspondents, several of whom have furnished a weekly news letter for over twenty years. We also wish to thank the large number of readers who have co-operated by furnishing us news.

In conclusion, we thank the advertisers and large list of subscribers who have liberally patronized and made the Herald's existence possible. May the clouds of depression, which have been hovering over us during the past three years, disappear and health, happiness and prosperity be your lot during 1934 and the succeeding years. P. N. THORNTON, Publisher.

Deposits in Peoples State Bank Insured

The primary thought in the mind of every depositor of a bank is whether or not his money is secure and available at any and all times.

Congress has passed what is known as the Banking Act of 1933, which created the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Banks which are approved by the United States government will have net individual deposits to the amount of $2500.00 fully insured.

The Peoples State Bank of East Tawas takes pleasure in announcing its membership in the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. As stated, the net deposit of every depositor is now insured up to the amount of $2500.00. We are glad to offer to our depositors the strongest protection which is the strongest pledge of individual security possible.

YACHT CLUB DANCE VERY SUCCESSFUL

Gala Event Last Friday Attended By Large Crowd

The New Year's carnival ball given by the Tawas Bay Yacht Association last Friday evening was certainly a grand success and a most enjoyable affair for all those who attended, and a glorious success so far as the efforts of the officers and members were concerned.

The Community Building was decorated in beautiful nautical and maritime designs, representing all phases of a yachtsman's dream come true, and on every side reminders in the shape of classical reproductions of Viking and Norsemen's ships, anchors, ropes, cables, sails and spars used two thousand and more years ago when Vikings and Danes roamed the North sea and British Channel and invaded the neighboring countries which still bear the imprint of the sea-faring daring of the intrepid sailors of those old days.

One especially beautiful design was a complete model of a Viking ship from the middle section forward to the prow, with a sea dragon's head carved on the high front stem-head, and red and blue spot lights on each side where the oars of the rowers protrude from the sides, and with the old mast and shrouds faithfully copied, and the

Broadway's Biggest Laugh

"Hit Comes to Screen" "Should Ladies Behave" based on "The Vinegar Tree," Paul Osborn's scintillating comedy of a group of people who get into amusing difficulties at a week-end house party, comes to the screen at last following its triumphant Broadway run of eight months. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer made the film version of the play which shows at the Family Theatre, East Tawas, on Sunday and Monday, January 7-8, with a sterling cast headed by Lionel Barrymore and Alice Brady.

The remainder of the cast acquires itself with distinction. Conway Tearle plays the much-sought-after-lover with suavity and restraint. Katharine Alexander shows a rare talent which should keep her in films for some time to come, and Mary Carlisle and William Janney give the youngster roles a sense of naturalness and freshness.

The settings in "Should Ladies Behave" are unusually artistic, and the whole production has been handled with expert craftsmanship and a discriminating finish.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

REDDY'S INVITATION

THE mere mention of carrots always makes Jerry Muskrat's mouth water. Yes, sir, it does just that. You see, it is this way: Carrots to Jerry are very much like some rare fruit to you—something that you can get only once in a while. Jerry never feels thoroughly at home on land, you know. He wants to be close to the water. So it is only once in a great while that he travels any great distance on land.

Now, of course, it isn't often that one finds carrots near the Laughing Brook or the Smiling Pool. When they are found there it usually is wisest to try to forget all about them because—can you guess why? Because there is very apt to be a trap close at hand. As Jerry gained wisdom and learned about traps in the days before Farmer Brown's Boy had stopped all trapping along the Laughing Brook and the Smiling Pool, he had learned how to get the bait, sometimes without being caught, and so he had learned the taste of carrots. Several times he had been bold enough to go away over to Farmer Brown's garden down on the Green Meadows to look for carrots, but always he had been disappointed. Other good things he had found, but no carrots.

Thus it was that when Reddy Fox told him that he, Ruddy, had discovered some of the finest carrots that ever grew, Jerry was interested. Of course, how could he help but be? "Did you say carrots?" asked Jerry, quite as if he wasn't sure that his ears hadn't played him a trick.

"I certainly did," replied Reddy Fox. "I certainly said carrots. They are the finest carrots ever I had laid my two eyes on, and in my travels I have seen a great many carrots. I don't eat carrots myself, but it is a fact that just looking at those carrots, Jerry, and thinking how much one who does eat them would enjoy them made me hungry. Then I thought of you." Jerry didn't see the sly wink in one of Reddy's eyes as he said this. "Yes," continued Reddy, "I thought of you and came straight over here to tell you about them. I remembered what you said about laying up stores for winter and it came to me that perhaps you would like to put some of these carrots away with the other good things. I certainly would if I liked carrots."

Jerry Muskrat's mouth watered so that Reddy Fox saw it water and turned away to hide a grin.

"Did you say that those carrots are very far away from here?" asked Jerry wistfully.

"I didn't say," replied Reddy. "Do you know where Farmer Brown's garden is?"

Jerry nodded. "Yes," said he. "At least, I know where his corn field is."

"Well," replied Reddy promptly, "those carrots are there. They are right at the end of the corn field, the end nearest the Smiling Pool. There are rows and rows of them. I tell you what, Jerry, I haven't anything special to do this evening and I will be delighted to show you the way there and to help you bring back some of those carrots. Nothing could give me greater pleasure. Now don't say a word. I'll be over here shortly after the Black Shadows appear and we'll go over there together. I just won't take no for an answer. It will be the joy of my life to help you get those carrots."

"Thank you. It is ever so kind of you," replied Jerry, trying to be polite and not knowing what else to say. "I'll be right here watching for you as soon as the Black Shadows come tonight."

"I won't keep you waiting long," replied Reddy as he turned and trotted off.

GRAPHIC GOLF

POSITION OF RIGHT ARM

PHOTOGRAPHS of Tommy Armour invariably show the right elbow close to the right side at the top of the backswing. In fact keeping the right elbow close to the body aids a grooved swing but all golfers cannot accomplish this feat with even fair results. Such form seems to be the heritage of those golfers with strong hands and wrists, a quality not possessed by the rank and file of golfers. For these a more liberal looseness would perhaps bring better results. Here the right elbow is allowed to set comfortably away from the right side at the top of the backswing in the manner of Jose Jurado above. On the downswing it will of course come back to the side. This aids relaxation where in many cases having the elbow tight against the side only results in tying up the whole swing.

RABBIT DISHES

RABBITS are plentiful in the winter season and make fine eating when properly prepared. Here are some suggestions:

Rabbit Pot Pie.
Cut three dressed rabbits into pieces for serving, flour them with well seasoned flour and fry in drippings until well browned. Fry one minced onion in one tablespoon of butter, add the rabbit and two pints of boiling water, two slices of lemon, a little cayenne and more salt if needed. Cover closely and stew until tender. Prepare biscuits and place them on top of the meat, cover closely and cook twenty minutes. Serve the rabbit in the center of the platter with the biscuits around it.

Rabbit Fricassee.
Remove the meat from the bones of a rabbit, sear it in butter over a

KEEP up your courage, Friend! The days are long; The walls are narrow, and the bed is hard. Outside the hospital, the summer song Of birds reminds you of your own back yard. But the long months have dimmed the memory Of your loved haunts, your budding locust tree. That star that you remember, swims in gloom. There is no world beyond your little room.

Keep firm your hand on hope, my blessed friend, For there await beyond your painted door The joys that will seem sweeter with the end Of illness, when you journey home once more. The night of suffering seems endless now, But so does winter for the apple bough. The summer moon of health will rise at last, And you'll return, with all the dark days past.

You will come home! Each hour that you are there Brings you a little nearer to that goal! Love will be waiting for you on the stair. There will be smiles of joy to cheer your soul. The Past will melt away; the years of pain Will seem a dream when you are home again, And the Gold Door of Promise will swing wide To let the sun of Happiness inside! WNU Service quick fire without browning. Cover with boiling water and let simmer until tender. Boil the stock down to a pint, add one tablespoon of butter and four blended together, one-half teaspoon of celery salt, two teaspoons of lemon juice, a teaspoon of minced onion, salt and cayenne to taste. Add one cupful of hot cream and pour the sauce slowly over two well beaten eggs. Serve the meat in the center of the platter, pour the sauce around it and garnish with toast points and parsley.

Roast Rabbit With Chestnuts.
Clean and stuff a trussed rabbit with chestnuts. Use one cup of the nuts, boiling them until tender, then mashing them to a paste, adding butter, a tablespoon of cream, salt, pepper, nutmeg and lemon juice with three tablespoons of bread crumbs. Mix and fill the rabbit. Roast until brown and tender, basting frequently.

Rabbit Soup.
Skin, dress and wash the rabbit, cut it into serving-sized pieces, dust with a little flour. Melt two tablespoons of butter or sweet fat, add the rabbit and an onion cut into slices, fry a light brown. Str in two tablespoons of flour, add the liver of the rabbit and three and one-half pints of stock. Simmer until tender. Remove the large bones and serve with carrots and potatoes.

Town Builds Own Lighting System

MAYOR AL KIRK, of West Elkton, Ohio, is here seen beside his newly erected "homemade municipal power house." West Elkton found itself unable to meet its light bill on account of decreased valuations. So Kirk shopped around, called in the boys and built a lighting system out of odds and ends, and put the wires underground in metropolitan style, all for less than $1,500, after the village had gone lightless for a year and a half. Now Kirk is planning a "homemade" water works for his village of 300 population.

LOOKING BACKWARD

50 Years Ago—Jan. 10, 1884

Passenger service has been in operation for four weeks on the Detroit, Bay City & Alpena railroad and the roadbed is in such condition that a speed of 45 miles per hour is possible. G. P. Smith and General A. R. Alger are the owners. Western Union wires will be immediately put up.
Mrs. Nellie Monroe is erecting a building on Lake street which will be known as the Rutherford block.
W. A. Darling has moved his restaurant into the new building near the Mathew street bridge.
The board of supervisors has been in session this week. The following members were present: E. Laidlaw, chairman, Horton, Dimmick, Horr, Latham, Esmond, McIvor and Andrews.
The following were on the honor roll at the public schools: Gertie Kelly, Augusta Boomer, Milton Beemer, Rachel Chambers, Nettie Darling, Eddie Amoit, Eddie Grise, Freddie Wilkins, Isabel Johnson, Ida Hubbell, Willie O'Brien, Nellie Hamilton, Lewis Phelan, Myra Brown, John Woods, Arthur Wilkins, James Chambers, Sue Benton and Mary McRae.

20 Years Ago—Jan. 10, 1914

The residence of Rev. Joshua Roberts, south of town, was entirely destroyed by fire last Friday evening. The cause of the fire is not definitely known, but it is thought to have originated from some defect in the chimney. Only a small part of the furniture was saved and Rev. Roberts estimates his loss at close to $3,000.00. They plan to rebuild at once.
Douglas McRae, son of John McRae, conductor on the Rose City train, was instantly killed at West Branch Wednesday evening when an automobile he was driving turned turtle.
August C. Brown, city treasurer, notified the taxpayers that the tax roll for 1913 was ready for collection.
The church announcements will bring memories of the different pastors located here at the time—John Finches at Tawas City M. E. church, O. E. Moffet at the Baptist church, East Tawas—Clifton W. Scott at the M. E. church, E. A. Kinney at St. Joseph church, and W. R. Blachford at Christ church.

Alabaster School Notes

Alabaster Defeats St. Joe
Last Tuesday evening four games were played on the Alabaster floor. A large crowd was present and enjoyed the interesting contests.
The first game was played between the 6th, 7th and 8th graders of the Alabaster and St. Joseph (Tawas City) schools. The boys of both teams were excited and nervous but played a good game. Alabaster won by a score of 10 to 6.
The second game was played between the St. Joe girl regulars and the Alabaster second team girls. After a very exciting game, the Alabaster reserves were defeated, 12 to 11.
The St. Joseph high school boys were defeated in the third game by the Alabaster boys. The line-ups were as follows:
Alabaster— FG FP TP
Oates, f 0 0 0
McCormick, f 0 1 1
Lundquist, c 3 1 7
Brown, g 3 1 7
Nicanter, g 0 0 6
DeLosh, f 0 0 0
Totals 18 3 21
St. Joseph— FG FP TP
Ciezlak, f 3 3 9
Alford, f 0 1 1
Duborsky, c 0 2 2
Gates, g 0 0 0
Trudell, g 0 0 0
Totals 3 6 12
The fourth game was played between the Alabaster Independents and the Tawas City Independents. The Alabaster boys were victorious, 70 to 10.

Around the County

Practically every section of the county now has a C. W. A. project under way.
The Tawas Herald is celebrating its fiftieth anniversary this week. No doubt many of the residents will point to the honor roll of the school and tell their offspring that was the result of night work, rather than regular attendance at the movies.
Icy roads have made motoring very dangerous the last week.
Most of the schools are taking advantage of the holiday vacation to make improvements furnished by the C. W. A.

Whittemore

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hill and son Orlo, of Muskegon visited friends here a few days the past week. Joseph Fortune of Baldwin spent New Year's here with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fortune, Sr. Mrs. E. A. Hasty took her little daughter, Marjorie, eight months of age, to the West Branch hospital Wednesday evening for treatment. She is suffering from ear and lung trouble. Ruth and Kenneth Schuster returned Monday from a week's visit in Toledo, Ohio. Mrs. Joseph Danin and daughter returned Monday from a week's visit in Detroit. Archie Graham is confined to his bed suffering from an infection in his arm, and is under the care of a trained nurse. It was necessary to take skin from Archie to be grafted on his brother, Edward Graham, Jr., who suffered severe burns several weeks ago. Harry Graham and Mrs. Frank Dease have also given skin to be grafted on the burned portions, and are under the doctor's care. The Graham family have the sympathy of their many friends here, as they are having more than their share of sickness and trouble. Dale, the little son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Thompson, is very ill with pneumonia, following a minor operation last week. Jack Miller of Newberry spent New Year's here with friends and relatives. Mrs. Wm. Austin entertained at a six o'clock dinner Friday night in honor of the sixteenth birthday anniversary of her daughter, Irene. Places were laid for eight young people. Duane, 11 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Dorsey, suffered a very painful accident last Saturday while sleigh riding on a hill. His sled ran into another, causing him to break one rib and puncture one lung. Latest reports state he is recovering nicely.

Smif bowed, elaborately formal. "How do you do?" she said politely. "Pray be seated, I am Madame Saitou—and your names?" She took out her notebook and poised her pencil.

"Miss Phelps must have told you about us," one of the men advanced the statement truculently. "Does Miss Phelps know you?" Smif inquired, allowing surprise to register through her voice.

"I am Mr. Gregory Pulaski, counselor at law," he said. "I represent Mrs. Mabeuse. This is Mrs. Mabeuse." Smif bowed politely and Mrs. Mabeuse further inclined her already downcast head. She was exquisite. A tiny, dark-haired, white-skinned fairy, whose eyelashes curled their fabulous length upon her rounded cheeks. Certainly she was not the blonde German hausfrau Smif had anticipated.

Smif allowed her gaze to wander to the males of the party. "They look as if they had been palbearers at the funeral," she thought, and the description was apt, since they appeared in black cutaway coats, black waistcoats and striped trousers. They wore dark neckties, their hair was black and lacquered, their eyes black and slightly bulging, their skins yellow rather than olive, their noses politely suggestive of a not too remote Semitic origin.

"And the other gentleman?" she murmured interrogatively. "Mr. Henri Mayer."

"He is my cousin," Mrs. Mabeuse laid her fingers lightly, tenderly on his coat sleeve, and at the touch and the sound of her soft little voice the man hitched his chair closer to hers, covering her hand with his own.

"He is her nearest relative, come to support her through this sad misfortune," Mr. Gregory Pulaski explained.

Smif raised her eyebrows. "Mrs. Mabeuse is in trouble?" she asked.

"Madame, do not play with us. Surely Miss Phelps has explained the circumstances?"

"Oh, yes," said Smif airily with a cynical twist of her mouth. "She told me that she had been insulted in Monsieur Mabeuse's studio yesterday. I assume that is the circumstance you refer to and hope you are conveying his apology. I was just about to write him a note to say that Miss Phelps would take no more lessons from him, but would permit him to retain the advance payment she had made. Perhaps his wife will convey the message and save me that necessity."

"How can you expect such a thing, Madame, after what was discovered yesterday?"

Smif presented a bewildered expression to his searching gaze.

"I am rather good at puzzles," she said, "but I need some sort of clue to give me a start. Perhaps if you were to explain—"

"You can't put that over on us, so you need not try," Mr. Mayer flared out. "H—l, Pulaski, quit stalling and get down to cases, or, if you don't, I will."

"I should be grateful," Smif looked at her watch. "My time is all engaged and I have clients waiting."

"The point is this," said Pulaski, "Miss Phelps asked us to see you, although in my opinion it would have been more fitting if she had nominated a lawyer. I can understand her desire to avoid publicity—"

"One moment," Smif interrupted plaintively. "I still do not know what you are talking about. Miss Phelps told me that some one had called her up this morning and she had referred them to me as she was in a hurry and the connection was bad. She fancied you were collecting for a charity because she caught a mention of a huge sum of money."

"Call it a charity or any other d—n thing you want," Mayer interrupted brutally. "Miss Phelps had better pay up and pay promptly, if she wants to avoid a suit. She can't step out of her sporty car and break up my little cousin's happy home without sweating for it, if Henri Mayer knows himself."

"There are means of communication with Europe," Mr. Pulaski suggested gently. "Miss Phelps could doubtless obtain anything she required."

"So far," Smif rejoined, "you have failed to make the necessity clear to me. In fact the idea strikes me as preposterous, if I may say so without offense. Suppose, Mr. Pulaski, you were to be so kind as to explain to me upon what it is based."

Mr. Pulaski cleared his throat and, slipping the fingers of his right hand within his waistcoat, attacked the subject oratorically.

Miss Phelps and he conversed ostentatiously in French, a language with which they knew Mrs. Mabeuse to be unfamiliar, in order, no doubt, to make her take herself away the sooner. Shortly, however, the young lady devised an even better plan. Pretending that the little Eugene was interested in automobiles (he, a child of five years!) she sent mother and children on long drives, thus insuring privacy for her and her lover."

"Permit me an interruption," said Smif coldly. "You are going too far when you use the word 'lover.' We will consider that erased and substitute the word 'teacher.'"

"Madame, I dared to say 'lover' because I can justify it. Warned by her natural jealousy, Mrs. Mabeuse, accompanied by her faithful cousin and myself, returned prematurely yesterday to the studio in time to hear her husband's words of elation at the reciprocation of his love and to find Miss Phelps, his favored pupil, in his arms."

"Pauvrete," murmured Mr. Mayer consolingly to the distressed wife as he patted the shoulder nearest to him.

"And to see that pupil devotedly slapping his face," Smif commented dryly. Was she correct in fancying she caught a glimpse of a spark of amusement in Mr. Pulaski's dull eyes? If so, it was quickly concealed beneath the heavy lids. "Yes, I heard about that. 'The dirty little rat,' she called him to me, which can hardly be said to be an expression of affection. And that's all you wish to tell me?"

"Presents," Mrs. Mabeuse prompted. "To be sure," said Mr. Pulaski briskly. "She showered him with presents. Expensive paints and ivories, a watch—"

"I've heard about the watch, too, an objet de luxe bought for her chauffeur's little son, who now has his duplicate," Smif interjected.

"She needn't try to make it look less suspicious by giving a watch to a kid," Mr. Mayer said venomously. "Her husband has abandoned my cousin, left her cold, with three young children and no means of support." Again the abandoned one's hand nestled in his.

Mr. Pulaski took up the argument, signing to the other for silence and perhaps for circumsppection.

"Deeply as she has loved him, his wife is prepared to give him up, since he has been weaned away from her and she has nothing to offer in place of the luxury her rival can lavish on him. But it is only fair the rich should pay for what they take from the poor for their amusement. Mr. Mabeuse is still a young man. We have capitalized his earnings, allowing for a reasonable increase as his genius becomes recognized, and we think two hundred thousand dollars is not too much to ask for the loss of his services."

Smif rose. "Thank you very much for a masterly exposition of your position," she said, addressing Mr. Pulaski. "If you will leave your card with my Buttons I will let you know what conclusion we arrive at."

"See here," Mayer jumped to his feet and faced her truculently, "we want a decision on this in a hurry, and there's only one decision that's going to be satisfactory, see? My cousin and her kids have got to eat."

"Quite," said Smif, "it is generally accepted as a necessity of existence, although the amounts required are a subject of grave controversy. I, myself, in a recent course of banting, have practically done without food for days—Frankly, I'm not impressed by anything you have put forward. Your position in a court of law would be a precarious one, while I know Mr. Phelps well enough to assure you that if one word of this—ah—story leaked out he would carry the case through every court possible, with all the incidental expenses, delays and postponements, before he would consent to the payment of one penny."

"And destroy his daughter's reputation in the process?" Mr. Pulaski hinted.

Smif laughed. "You really are a frife old-fashioned, Mr. Pulaski. This is not the reign of Queen Victoria. I hate to disappoint you, but I'm terribly afraid Miss Phelps would get a great deal of fun out of such a suit. It is only the point of view of the older generation that I am taking into account when I agree to consider your claim. Meanwhile, hold your tongues!"

"I get you," said Mr. Pulaski. "Lady, wild horses wouldn't drag a word out of any of us. But when do you think you'll have news for us?"

"Next week—the week after," Smif replied indifferently. "I'm a busy woman. Your case must wait its turn."

"That's not my way of doing business," Henri Mayer muttered. "But you've never had the pleasure of doing business with me before, Mr. Mayer," Smif suavely suggested, as she rang for Buttons to bring their hats and usher them out.

"Mr. Nesbit's here," Buttons told her. "He is!" she exclaimed joyfully. "Good-by, Mrs. Mabeuse. You'll excuse me, but do let me wish you all the luck in the world—in your next venture," she added as he left them, going through the passage to greet Stone.

CHAPTER IX

Poor Pam, waiting in anxious patience in Madame Georgette's shop, was temporarily forgotten in Smif's pleasure at Stone's return.

"I'm truly glad to see you," she said, "but I absolutely haven't a minute to spend with you. Come tonight to the Badminton. And, Stone, have you any miniature except that one of your great-grandmother? Anything you value less? I want you to take one to be copied by an artist who is not too scrupulous. I'll explain this evening."

Stone went, unwillingly obedient, hardly realizing the compliment paid him by the usually self-sufficient Smif; while she returned to the lounge and sent for Pam.

"I think we've won the first engagement," she told the girl, rapidly recounting all the details of the recent interview. "The news, so far, is good, you see. There is a serious side to it, however, in the fact that I am certain that Mrs. Mabeuse is more than willing to take advantage of this situation to be off with the old love and on with the new, in the person of a cousin, one Henri Mayer, who accompanied her as her valiant defender. Don't worry and don't come to town unless I telephone you to ask you to lunch with me. Oh—one question before you go. I've a cousin from Virginia in town who would be as silent as the grave. Do you mind if I enlist him on our side when I need help?"

"I trust your judgment absolutely, Smif. Only, if you tell anyone, please explain that I'm not the moron this makes me look. As a matter of fact, I find it hard to believe that such a thing could happen to a girl like me."

Pam left to seek her car at the spot appointed, and Smif interviewed her various clients, trying to interest herself in their trivial ills, real and imaginary, and to give them whatever it was they had come to her to seek.

Smif was tired when she reached the Badminton. By the time Stone arrived, bringing with him a pretty, unimportant little French miniature she had rested and eaten a light dinner consisting of a tiny grilled steak with a tomato and an indulgence of two olives. She wasted no time in putting the facts of the case before him.

"The filthy blackmailing hounds!" he exclaimed, jumping to his feet and pacing up and down the room excitedly. "Of course, the police would make short work of such a scheme; but, if they are called in, it simply can't be kept out of the newspapers. Miss Phelps would be involved in all the publicity of a public prosecution, a perfectly rotten ordeal for a young girl to go through. What's your idea?"

"My idea hangs on the attitude of Monsieur Mabeuse," Smif told him. "This woman is still young and still very pretty. I'm convinced that there's at least a flirtation going on between her and the cousin who came with her today—if he is her cousin. I believe that however the plot was framed originally, when the final settlement is arrived at the husband is to be the gull."

"What do you want me to do?" Stone asked.

"I want you to go to their address and ask for him. Either he has gone away or she has. They can hardly expect to put this through living in the same house. There must be at least a pretense of separation. I fancy it will prove to be the man who has gone. With a miniature to be copied, I scarcely think they will refuse you his address."

"I'll get his address. Is that all?" "How good is your French?" Smif asked. "Could you pass yourself off as a Frenchman?"

"French was my first language." "Go to the house then, pretending to talk no English. There is no servant, so Madame Mabeuse is pretty certain to come to the door. If she speaks French to you, be sure to ask if it is Madame Mabeuse. I'm convinced that both she and her precious cousin are of French origin and that her sudden lack of understanding of the language is part of the plan."

"Am I to go to see Mabeuse?" "I don't know exactly how best to wangle that," Smif knit her brows. "The point is that I want to see him, and soon. I ought to surprise him. The only thing is to say you will call, and when you do, I'll go with you."

Stone got up.

"It oughtn't to take long," he said. "If it's not too late, I'll come back and report. If it is, I'll telephone."

"You are a comfort!" Smif declared fervently.

"There should be one in every family," he assured her gravely as he went out.

He returned before she had begun to expect him.

"A man came to the door," he plunged into his news without waiting for questions. "I wonder if it was the gay Lothario? He had a tiny waxed moustache."

"No," said Smif, "that must have been Pulaski, the lawyer. Mayer was clean shaven. It was the only difference between them."

"He didn't understand any French. I made deprecatory gestures. Shoulders shrugged, palms upturned, head on one side; but I stood my ground and demanded Monsieur Mabeuse? Madame Mabeuse? So finally he stepped back into the hall and called up the stairs: 'Hey, Gert! There's a Belgian atrocity here asking for you.' At once she came down the stairs. 'You wished to see me?' She spoke English and I was disappointed, but I broke into a voluble French explanation. I was sorry to have deranged Madame. It was her husband I wished to consult. That is, if she was Madame Mabeuse? (She nodded yes.) He was a painter of portraits, was he not? I had a small miniature of an ancestor. My idea, if he thought it practical, was to have a life-size copy made—"

Smif clasped her hands.

"Oh, that was clever, Stone."

"But first I wanted him to reproduce the miniature. I desired a replica to send to my sister who lives in Antwerp. The mention of Antwerp let loose a sudden flood of words and the flood was perfectly good and understandable French. Ah, would I not come in? She, Madame, was of Antwerp although her mother was German, pur sang. I did not accept the invitation to go in. I think I was foolish there. I might have learned something of value, but I'm new to the detective business and I was anxious to get on to Monsieur Mabeuse. I produced the miniature. The man had stood around while all this was going on and at last appeared to be getting fidgety. She turned to him. 'It is work for Pierre,' she explained in English. 'What do I do?' He appeared to consider the point for an instant. 'Oh, give him the beggar's address,' he said at last, and she turned to me again, speaking French as a matter of course. 'Monsieur Mabeuse is not here. He is engaged at Number 417 in the next street, very occupied with his work. Probably you will find him there.' I had no difficulty in finding the place and the man, who, strangely enough, had no artist's materials at the house where he was supposed to be painting. However, he told me that he was a rapid worker and would promise to finish the miniature in a few days. I suggested that I would call in a day or two to see how he was progressing, an idea to which he offered no objections. Then I left."

"And brought me two riddles," Smif said. "First: If Madame is preparing to rid herself of her Pierre, why remain in touch with him?"

"To keep him from suspecting it until the time is ripe for him to learn it automatically."

"Possibly—Second: Is Pulaski her flame or is Mayer? Or is she playing one off against the other? I must sleep on it."

Two days later, days which had passed slowly since there had been no further development in Pam's affairs, Smif decided that Stone would be justified in showing some interest in the copy of his miniature.

Monsieur Mabeuse was within when they reached the shabby house and they were told to mount to the third floor where, in a bare room, his work was progressing. Stone fired the first shot immediately.

"I have brought my cousin with me to inspect the miniature. Monsieur Mabeuse—Madame Saitou," he said, by way of introduction.

The two bowed formally and Mabeuse made no attempt to deny that he recognized the name.

"But—but this is most irregular!" he stammered. "I cannot submit—Monsieur Mabeuse has deceived me—I must have advice—"

He moved toward the door, intent doubtless, on getting instructions from Pulaski. Stone, without words, set his back against it, and the artist saw the futility of trying to force his way out.

"Why?" At the sound of her voice he wheeled to find Smif smiling blandly upon him. "What advice do you need? Surely Miss Phelps and you are arrayed on the same side of this case."

"But—but naturellement," he stammered nervously. "Only her attitude toward me was so harsh—"

"Let us sit down," Smif suggested. "It really is important that we reach an understanding. That is, if this plot against you is to be frustrated."

"Plot? Against me? A plot?" The man did not know what to make of her words.

"To be sure," she replied, and there was always something convincing and reassuring about Smif. "You certainly are to be the chief victim. Now we are friends, are we not?"

While Mabeuse puzzled over this they sat down.

"The understanding, I take it, Monsieur, is that you are to swear that a passion for Miss Phelps has torn you from the bosom of your family?"

"How can I help it, Madame? It is a thing so great that one cannot lie about it. If I am put on the witness stand, I dare not fore swear my passion."

"No," said Smif, "assuredly not. I only wanted to make sure of the fixity of your purpose and your love for Miss Phelps. Your wife cannot marry either Mr. Mayer or Mr. Pulaski until she has obtained her divorce from you."

"What is that you say?" Mabeuse, suddenly scarlet in the face, turned on Smif with a snarl. "The poor child has no thought of divorce. Her heart is broken. My wife adores me."

Smif shrugged her shoulders good humoredly. "I should put that in the past tense, Monsieur. Positively, I had no doubt that she reciprocated Mr. Mayer's tender feelings when he sat holding her hand in my office the other day."

"Holding her hand—why was he holding her hand? Why did she let him hold her hand—"

"You certainly can't blame your wife for taking any consolation offered her," Smif pointed out with entire gravity.

"But she knows—" Mabeuse stopped in mid-career.

Smif ignored this. She wanted something more substantial than an incriminating admission that might be open to various interpretations.

"There is no denying that you have been led to place yourself in a dubious position," she said briskly. "What you personally expected to gain by it is a mystery to me. Plainly you are the poor cat who is to pull the chestnuts out of the fire and singe your paws while the monkey makes off with the prize."

Running Water Not Always Pure
That running water purifies itself is one of our oldest sanitary axioms—and yet the suggestion it carries is entirely wrong, says "How to Live." Standing water purifies itself to a much greater degree and in a shorter time. Pollution consists almost entirely of solid material in particles of various sizes. In quiet water these particles settle out, carrying most of the germs with them. Running streams keep themselves constantly stirred up and any pollution they receive is carried for a long time. It is not wise, therefore, to trust water that comes from a pretty spring or waterfall. The only safe principle is not to drink from country supplies at all, or, if this cannot be avoided, to do so only after the water has been boiled.

QUALIFIED
Auto Manufacturer—Yes, we want an agent for our cars in Squedunk—somebody who can enthusiastically praise our make, you know. Have you ever driven one of our cars? Applicant—Well—er—no! Auto Manufacturer—Then I guess you'll do it! All it needs is a real faith in the car.—Brooklyn Eagle.

All the Difference
Dialogue overheard on the beach at a South coast resort. Small boy to his mother: "Mummy, may I go in to swim?" "Certainly not, my dear, it's far too deep." "But daddy is swimming." "Yes, dear, but he's insured."—Sporting and Dramatic News.

Correct Answer
"Who is not amused by the complete disregard for expense with which the average married woman chooses her clothes?" asks a writer. The average married man.—Passing Show.

LIKE OLD TIMES
Friend—What were your sensations in the wreck?
Victim—Just the same as football. Three coaches passed over me and then the doctors came.

CLOCKWORK
Briggs, the owner of the new store, asked his manager how trade had been progressing during his absence. Manager—Like clockwork, sir. Briggs—Good! I'll just have a look at the books.

After a searching inspection of the books, he turned to his manager: Briggs—You're right. It is going like clockwork—every blessed thing we've sold lately has been on time.—Chelsea Record.

Only Telling Him
Beggar—Kind sir, my wife is starving. Jones—Here's a quarter. Where is she? Beggar—Search me! She eloped last month with a poet.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Salesmanship
Customer—To what do you owe your extraordinary success as a house-to-house salesman? Salesman—To the first five words I utter when a woman opens the door.—"Miss, is your mother in?"

When the Cat's Away
"How many men work in your shop?" "With the master, seven." "Six without 'ae master'?" "No, when the master is not there, none of them work."—Fliegende Blaetter, Munich.

THE STORY FROM THE OPENING CHAPTER

Matilda Smith Lovely ("Smif,") youngest and physically the weightiest of the four lovely sisters, finds herself in decidedly straitened circumstances. The family estate, Lovelylea, in Virginia, is owned by Smif's brother, Bill-Lee, who lives in Chile. Smif's dearest wish is to own Lovelylea. It is rented to a Mr. Johnstone Nesbit. Under the name "Madame Saitou" Smif establishes herself as a "Little Sister of the Rich," a consultant. She has a client who desires to evade the loveless pursuit of an extraordinarily stout lady, whom he refers to as Mercy. Later, the lady in question, Miss Martha Washington Mercedes, comes. Her story is that because of her excess weight she has lost her lover, "Johnny." Smif advises her to diet until she has reduced Mercy proposes that Smif should try the "cure" and if the results are satisfactory Mercy will follow her example. For a generous fee, Smif consents. "Johnny" discovers Smif's identity and is himself recognized by Smif as the tenant of Lovelylea, Johnstone Nesbit. He tells her a pathetic story of his childhood in France and England. Circumstances made him the lessee of Lovelylea. Unused to Virginia's ways, he thoughtlessly violates the conventions, and is condemned by his neighbors as "not a gentleman." He has a miniature of his great-grandmother and tells Smif the portrait is that of Lorraine Lovely, also an ancestress of Smif. According to Virginia traditions, he and Smif are "cousins." Smif's "reducing" course gives promise of splendid results. Nesbit takes an apartment in New York. His real name is Rockwell, but for family reasons he took the name of Nesbit. Johnstone Nesbit, familiarly "Stone." Pamela Phelps, youthful friend of Smif, becomes the threatened victim of a blackmailing plot.

Falcon Island

Steaming Falcon Island.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

FALCON island, the "island that never stands still," is on the move again according to recent reports. It is doubtful if any land has been built up and cut down so often within the recollection of man as has this island. Located in the southeastern part of the Tonge, or Friendly group of islands in the South Pacific, it has appeared, then disappeared from sight at least twice. In October, 1927, an eruption occurred which raised it high above the level of the sea and brought it to the attention of men the world over.

Since that time newspapers of many countries have published articles concerning its reappearance. Lavas have been reported flowing down its sides and great clouds of ash and steam rising several thousand feet above it. The location of Falcon Island is latitude 20 degrees 19 minutes S, and longitude 175 degrees 25 minutes W. If one could examine a geological map of this general region, he would find that all the volcanic islands lie in a straight line which runs in a north-northeast and south-southwest direction. Beginning with Mount Ruapehu, in North Island, New Zealand, through the Kermadec islands, continuing through Ata (Pylistaar), Honga Tonga, Falcon, Tofoa, Kao, Metis, Late, and Fanuaal (Amargura), the volcanic islands of Tonga, and terminating in Samoa, this line includes one of the greatest chains of active and dormant volcanoes in the world.

It represents a line of weakness in the earth's crust and along it from time to time molten material is ejected. The world is made aware of these ejections only when the material reaches the surface and forms islands or shoals.

It is very probable, however, that in many places along the line there are submarine volcanoes of whose existence no knowledge has ever been obtained. If one were to predict where the next new island in this part of the world would appear, it would be fairly safe to say somewhere along this line. Practically all the other islands of the region are of nonvolcanic rock, chiefly limestone.

Growth From a Shoal.
The island received its name when H. M. S. Falcon visited the spot in 1865 and reported a shoal. Twelve years later H. M. S. Sappho reported smoke to be issuing from the sea at the same position. In 1885 a submarine volcano burst suddenly into activity and built up a mound which, after a year of intermittent eruption, reached a height of at least 200 feet.

In 1889, H. M. S. Egeria visited the island and Mr. J. J. Lister, an English geologist on board, made some careful observations. He found that during the four years since its formation the action of the sea had removed a large portion of the island, and that only about a third of the original mound remained. He calculated the maximum height of the island at that time to be 153 feet.

Further observations were made by the British admiralty in August, 1895. Falcon island extended 800 yards in a northeast-southwest direction and 700 yards in a northwest-southeast direction. It was nearly circular in form and only 40 feet above water.

In July, 1898, it was reported to have disappeared and its site was occupied by a shoal 100 yards in extent on which the sea broke heavily. Thus it took the sea, the rain, and the wind only thirteen years to cause an island with a maximum diameter of about two miles and a height of 290 feet to disappear completely.

There is a popular misconception that islands of this sort disappear by actual sinking. Their disappearance, however, is due solely to the leveling action of the agents of erosion. Two years later, the shoal to which Falcon Island had been reduced was showing about 10 feet above the water at the northern end—probably the result of wave action which concentrated the material to leeward. In this condition it was subsequently piled above sea level by the southeast trade winds.

In 1913, H. M. S. Cormoran reported that the island had disappeared once more. Finally the most violent eruption on record occurred in October, 1927. From that time until the present, minor eruptions, separated by periods of quiescence, have added slightly to the size of the mound.

Called "New Place" by Natives.
The native name for Falcon Island is Fona Foo (New Place). It lies about 50 miles to the northwest of Nukualofa, Tongatabu Island of the Tonga group. The crater lies on the southeast coast. Its location here is obviously determined by the southeast trade winds, which during and after eruption carry the fine material to the northwest. The waves, driven by these same trades, continue the work and constantly eat into the southeast side, shifting the material to the northwest to build an extensive shoal.

The eastern wall of the crater has the same profile as the western wall, but its summit rises only 200 feet above sea level. On the east it slopes gently to the top of the sea cliff, while on the west it descends more abruptly to the floor of the crater. The bottom of the crater is elliptical in outline and most of its surface is covered by a boiling lake, shaped roughly like a figure eight. The waters in the seaward loop of the figure are a deep, milky green, but in the landward loop they fade to yellowish white. Steam rises from the water and clouds of it drift lazily up the northwest wall. Parts of the lake boil incessantly; other areas bulge upward periodically, bringing black sediment from below.

The crater rim is breached to the southwest, where only a small bit of the original wall remains. This remnant is about 20 feet high and is composed of bedded scoria and ash. On either side of it the storm waves have free access over a low, porous barrier of reworked scoria, through which the lake waters rise and fall with the tide.

The lake is surrounded with ash and sulphur flats, dotted with steam jets, the latter more abundant on the steep western side of the crater than elsewhere. Around the flat is a narrow band of gently sloping land, trenched with V-shaped gullies and grading above into the steep walls of the crater. These are vertically fluted, and in the depressions many steam vents issue. These have deposited quantities of sulphur and other substances, giving the walls a strange appearance. Yellow, orange, or white gullies alternate with the drab ridges.

What the Crater Is Like.
The crater lake and the vividly colored walls are the first impression received while standing on the eastern edge. A closer inspection shows that there are really two craters, a younger one with steep sides lying within an older one.

The crater wall is composed largely of fine ash and scoria, but scattered over its surface are numerous volcanic bombs and blocks of solid lava. Most of the bombs are small, but a few reach a length of more than two feet. They are roughly spindle-shaped and represent masses of lava that were thrown out in liquid condition and solidified while still in the air. Many are exceedingly porous, owing to the escape of inclosed gases; others show a concentric banding made by uniform cooling and contraction. Some of the solid angular blocks of lava exceed three feet in diameter. A few are porous, others dense.

In most places it is impossible to descend the crater walls, because the slopes of the poorly consolidated scoria approach 80 degrees. One may, however, without great difficulty, slip and slide down one of the several steep gullies to the crater floor. Here one unconsciously pauses before proceeding farther.

On all sides are sputtering and whistling steam vents, which issue from walls that are beautifully mottled in many shades of yellow, orange and gray.

It is rather a weird experience to walk out on the delta that separates the two lobes of the lake. The ground is hot beneath the feet, and off the lake comes a withering blast of fetid air. Each steam jet has a hiss, whistle, or sputter of its own. These sounds do not carry far, and as one walks across the flat they quickly replace each other. A low, quietly sputtering vent passes out of hearing and almost between one's feet.

Pumice and fragments of lava lie scattered everywhere. One expects momentarily to break through, yet the ground seems solid enough. The surface of the delta is incised with brilliantly colored sulphurous deposits and tiny balls of greenish sulphur litter the surface below with a line of pumice that marks high-tide level. The waters of the lake near the edge of the delta boil noisily and have a vile taste. The noises, the odors, and the heat oppress the watcher's mind with a feeling of impending activity. It is with a mild sigh of relief that one reaches the top of the crater wall without mishap.

The present Falcon island lies far from steamer lanes. Yet the waves have already washed an odd assortment of foreign objects upon its shores. Wooden boards, bottles, fragments of glass, shells, bits of seaweed, and coral are found mixed with the scoria of the lee shore. Fragments of coconuts are exceedingly abundant.

World Again Hails "Lindys"

Colonel and His Flying Partner Have Blazed Another Trail, in Their Daring Flight Across the South Atlantic Waters.

(From the Literary Digest.)

Every time they hop an ocean, glide a continent or a planet, or trace some mysterious detour in the Arctic or the tropics, Colonel Lindbergh and his flying partner amaze the world anew with their incomparable poise, simplicity, usefulness, bravery, indefatigability, and team-work.

They are beings apart, almost mythological figures in a modern world, yet their work is most intensely of today and tomorrow.

High achievement, high romance, and piercing tragedy have conspired to veil them in an almost Olympian mist. But they know no Olympian idleness. Always they are undertaking hard, long, dangerous labors which snatch them away from ease and comfort, from the superficial rewards of fame, and expose them to hardships and perils in Arctic wastes, Chinese rivers or tropical fever swamps.

Only the other day the world was given a casual picture of the Lindberghs spending almost a week in baffled efforts to raise their heavily laden plane from Bathurst bay, on the Guinea coast of Africa, for their hop across the South Atlantic to Natal, Brazil. No breath of breeze came to help them rise from the tropic stagnation.

One reads of the sun and the steaming swamp. One may know what tropical flies can do. One pictures the labor of unloading forty or more gallons of gasoline to lighten ship and make the take-off possible. One reads of sixteen hours cramped in a little cockpit.

But the comments of Anne Morrow Lindbergh, proficient navigator, radio operator, and aviator, show many a touch of quaint enjoyment. It was a "lovely trip" rolling down to Brazil from British West Africa, and the southern squalls that flurried their equatorial hop were gentle breezes to her tolerant eyes.

As for the Greenlandic icy mountains, they were perfectly lovely, too. Not a word about cold fingers or toes.

A charming incident marked the hop from Africa to South America. Mrs. Lindbergh was busy in her "rumble seat" with her navigating arithmetic and her wireless communications. Suddenly the air brought a message addressed to "Mrs. Anne Lindbergh," and as she was the only person of that name around the South Atlantic, as far as she knew, there couldn't be any mistake. It read:

"Would you answer a few questions for the Boston Traveler in the first interview from an airplane? Distance 5,000 miles."

She wirelessed back brightly: "Wait a minute. I'll ask Lindy."

And evidently the rumble seat communicated with the driver's seat, for after a pause, according to the Associated Press, which sent out the story from Boston, Mrs. Lindbergh put this tactful alibi on the air:

"Thank you very much, but I think we are too busy here and your message may take too long to send through. Heavy static interference. Must wait. Will try you later, Anne."

And the main charm of this incident, to one observer, is its disclosure of the irrelevant but delightfully human fact that she calls the Colonel "Lindy." It brings the Olympians a little nearer.

Other human touches enter into accounts of the Lindberghs' sudden flight from Natal in a northward and homeward direction. Every step the Colonel ever takes on a flying tour is unannounced, because, as he once explained, he wishes to reserve freedom to change his plans at the last moment or in mid-air. By thus sailing under his own sealed orders, as it were, he avoids the complication of disappointed crowds, reception committees and so on, all of which interferes with a serious flyer's job, and is very much to his distaste. On the night when he dropped out of the sky on Le Bourget field he learned what a dangerous animal a crowd could be.

Interest in the northward flight was intensified by the fact that the Colonel's proficient co-pilot, navigator, and back-seat driver on the voyage of life was overjoyed by the feeling of flying nearer and nearer to her baby in New Jersey. And that gives a special interest to a little speech

Should Man Know Himself?

Great Writer Has Advised It, but Homely Philosopher Points Out Some Impracticabilities That Seem to Have Point.

"It seems to me that if we knew ourselves better we might have a better opinion of the world," said Mr. Cato Ninetails; "and it is quite probable that if we knew ourselves better the world would have a better opinion of us. In advising us to make it our business to know ourselves, Cervantes warns us that it is 'the most difficult lesson in the world'; and it is, for if we would be frank with ourselves—which we seldom are—it isn't often that we want to know ourselves. Such knowledge is likely to give a jolt to our self-esteem, which isn't pleasant. All of us have limitations, and many of us have great limitations, but most of them we are unconscious of, and the rest we ignore, when we let the imagination dwell on what we ought to be and what we could do if the perversity of worldly circumstances did not prevent us.

"The ordinary workaday variety of us—that is, most of us—do not feel that we could paint a picture, carve a statue or play a violin in a way that would be acceptable to the discriminating taste of the world; but in contemplating more practical—and more profitable—occupations we have a feeling, which is easier to assume than to defend, that if we could get the job we want, the working of it would tend to itself pleasantly and advantageously enough. It is getting of such a job that sometimes adds so much to our knowledge of ourselves. We may find that it requires a skill and a poise that we are wholly unequal to, and limitations that Mrs. Dwight W. Morrow made that we were unconscious of are revealed to us; but even then we are inclined to regard such a situation as the amazing exception, and are as ready as ever to attempt the impossible—for a sufficient consideration.

"Now, if we knew ourselves better such embarrassments, and the feeling of resentment they create in us, would be avoided, and one of the results would be that we should not be left with a more or less persistent grudge against the world. Another would be that we should avoid the failure that is almost certain to lower us in the opinion of the world.

"It is doubtless the desire for material possessions and celebrity that creates our exaggerated self-confidence. If other people have successfully done such things—well, we are every bit as deserving; and so from time to time we resentfully acquire an extension of our knowledge of ourselves. It is pleasant to be successful, for in addition to the usual profit and good opinion of mankind that success brings, there is a personal satisfaction in it that is no small part of the remuneration; but success is far from common; and, indeed, most of us who get along pretty well are merely hanging on to the ragged edge of adequacy—we'll do, even if we don't do very well. It seemed to me that Buck, who, as a family physician sees people at their worst, ought to have reached some conclusions on this subject.

"Buck," I asked him, "what do you think of the idea that a man should know himself?"

"Impractical," he declared; "no man would ever believe such things about himself."—Indianapolis News.

at a Y. W. C. A. meeting on the day when the news was published of the Lindberghs' arrival at Natal. According to the New York Herald Tribune:

"As you know, my children, Anne and Charles Lindbergh, have just flown across the South Atlantic," she said, smiling as the audience burst into applause. "At a time of such great happiness, it is a wonderful thing to be among old friends, and I know you will forgive me, if my tongue slips for joy."

Dull English "Orators"

The historic feat of the late duke of Devonshire in yawning, to the delight of Disraeli, in the middle of his own maiden speech in the house of commons, is generally reckoned unique of its kind. Actually, however, it has been beaten by Sir Guy Fleetwood Wilson, who retired some years ago from the office of finance minister of the council of India. The occasion in question was when Sir Guy was required to answer the criticisms on his first budget before the viceroy's legislative council. "It was on March 29, 1909," Sir Guy relates, "and the day was abnormally hot and close, even for that time of the year in Calcutta. Partly owing to the heat, but largely no doubt owing to the wearisome effect of my first attempt at oratory, one by one every single member present went to sleep; and it is the simple truth that after a while I actually fell asleep in the course of the delivery of my statement."

Household Diary Has Real Value

Matters Worthy of Record Can Be Chronicled for Reference.

The day of the diarist as a recorder of events in literary style seems to have passed almost completely. But this does not indicate that diaries are not kept. They may be mere jottings of daily events, to show where the writer was and what were the happenings of the calendar days. Some persons keep diaries in order that they may realize the good times they have, and nothing but pleasant occurrences are recorded in the happy day summaries. Often diaries are kept chiefly for business affairs, the transactions of each day being given without comment; and very briefly. The pages can be referred to, to refresh the writer's memory. These diaries often prove of value in establishing facts in years later.

One of the best diaries for the home is an impersonal household diary. For example, in it are set down such data as when furnace fuel was bought, and when a new supply was necessary, and the total cost of each quantity as well as its price per ton, or the price in similar units of purchase, if of other fuels. When furniture was bought, if new, is set forth, or when upholstered it the covering was worn out on old chairs, etc. Also what the new material cost, what kind it was, and the charge for the work of recovering the leeches.

Such a household record is a finishing touch to have, as by referring to it will be discovered what the up-keep of the furniture amounts to, whether the price paid for the new piece was reasonable or not according to the wear it gives. The worth of the particular upholstery material is also tested by its durability, which can be determined from the pages of the diary.

The record of the garden will prove helpful from year to year, telling, as it will, when plants were set out, or when seed was sown, when bulbs were taken up, whether the place in which they were stored was good or not, according to how the plants developed from them next season. When the lawn was fertilized, and the gardens dug and fertilized in the spring, and the costs, should be set down.

It is by such jottings in few words that this sort of diary proves valuable. The personal element is eliminated, or at least, minimized. The volume is not one for the writer's eyes alone. It is a household diary for anyone to consult who cares to be enlightened on the subjects written about.

The Last Crier?

At Provincetown, at the tip end of Cape Cod, where the Pilgrims landed in 1620, there lives in the poorhouse a man who is probably the last town crier in America. For a dollar he will cry the town for a meeting of Saint Michael's society, a cake sale at the Methodist church or the costume ball of the Art association; sometimes he cries a sale at Matheson's store.—Journal of Economic and Business History.

Bathtub Once Shunned as Something Unholy

After the fall of Rome and the rise of the Christian empire, the bath became an outlaw. Evangelists, citing the unholy Romans, spread the gospel that bathing invited moral and spiritual destruction. Superstition came along to put evil spells in an overdose of water, taken externally. (Beliefs that bathing is harmful, if not deadly, except on certain days of the year, still prevail in certain parts of Europe today.) In time, medical authority was found to insist that bathing was unhealthy.

For hundreds of years, Europe literally went without a bath. The first settlers in America belonged to the anti-tub faith. In all the history of the early colonists, there is no record of a pioneer being surprised by an attacking Indian while taking a dip in river, creek or pond. The observance of the prohibition against bathing was so general and profound that it just was not an issue at all worth mentioning, until long after the United States had become a nation.

In these later days, invention of the tub has been credited by some writers to America. This false assumption doubtless has been provoked by the late but sensational development of plumbing in this country. However, Europe was experimenting with the predecessor of the modern tub long before the American settlers had a good bath.—Kansas City Star.

School Notes

The Board of Education is making use of the P. W. A. by making needed improvements in the school building. Some of the improvements are the plastering of the unplastered rooms and the painting in the halls and toilets.

The January meeting of the local Parent-Teacher Association will be at the school building, January 11, at eight o'clock. Better come!

Dr. Alexander G. Ruthven, President of the University of Michigan, will speak over W. J. R. Sunday at 6 o'clock.

The following pupils are on the honor roll this month: Patricia Braddock, Ernestine Cecil, Isabelle Dease, Albertine Herman, Leonard Fosbach, Arlene Leslie, Arnold McLean, Lois Nelem, Dorothy Ulman, and Walter Wegner.

Third and Fourth Grades
Betty Nelson won the third grade spelling contest Wednesday.

We have moved to the German school while our room is being re-decorated.

The following people were on the honor roll last month: Roy DePotty, Richard Prescott, Nona Frances Repp, Marian Clark, Betty Jane Ferguson, Ruth Giddings, Lyle Hughes, Billy Musolf, and Betty Nelson.

Primary Room
Donna Moore, Dorothy Hill, and Norma Jean Hill, who have been absent several weeks because of illness, returned to school Monday.

The names of Leland Britting, Maxine DePotty, Ida Koepke, and Norman Koepke have been added to the dental honor roll, making a total of 17.

Elsie Mueller visited in our room Tuesday afternoon and Richard Hawkins Wednesday afternoon.

On the honor roll for December are: Maurice Hayes, Elsie Rollin, Gilbert Sievert, Gary Smith, Ruth Westcott, Dorothy White, Gay Young, Maxine DePotty, Neil Libka, Norma Lou Westcott, and Wayne White.

half hull protruding from the forward wall, over the entrance door at least four or five feet into the hall above the heads of those below.

The finest and most striking effort however, was a reproduction of a large lighthouse which stood in the center of the room and was about four feet wide at the base and tapered up to a height of about 15 feet, and surmounted at the top with the usual light, lenses and guard railing around, and the light so arranged with electricity and machinery that it slowly revolved about, showing alternately red and white, just exactly as a regular government lighthouse on the Great Lakes or ocean coasts.

At each window were drapes and golden ropes with gilded anchors, and in the panels between were large six-foot stars, illuminated by lights set behind exact replicas of ancient war galleys and yachts used in early historical times.

From over the light house in the center of the hall brilliant long lines of colored ribbons extended in all directions to the outmost corners of the room, and below those extended like rows of gaily colored inflated balloons which, at a signal when the festivities were about closed, were dropped from the corners, and each dancer and participant had a chance to get one and explode it or do as desired.

The orchestra consisted of the "Rushlow" band from Saginaw comprising ten pieces, and of whom each man is a specialist and entertainer in some particular line, which was interspersed between music numbers so as to keep a constant and lively interest and pleasure program throughout the entire evening from nine to one o'clock, and in conjunction with the band music made a most enjoyable ensemble. The platform where the orchestra played was most elaborately and beautifully enshrined with varied colored ribbons and a myriad of colored lights, and was a perfect bower of beauty in itself, in harmony with the hundreds of colored lights and balloons in the dance hall proper.
