Opossum's Home and Diet

The home of the opossum is a hole in anything high or low just so it is near timber and water. Its food consists of almost anything edible, its diet changing with the seasons. It would be easier to list the few things that it does not eat rather than the foods that it does. Chicken and eggs seem to be on the preferred list, however.

FRED LOOK PASSES AWAY WEDNESDAY

Advanced Age Causes Death of 90-Year-Old Tawas Resident

Frederick Look, 90 years, four months and 23 days old, passed away early Wednesday morning, January 24, at the home of his son, Otto Look, in Tawas township. Infirmitudes due to advanced age were the cause of his death.

Frederick Gustave Look was born August 31, 1843, in Pommern, Germany. In the year 1868 he was united in marriage to Augusta Timreck. They immigrated to the United States in 1891 and first settled in Tawas City. After about a year they moved to Prescott, where they lived for two years. They then came to Tawas township where they resided until 1905, during which year they returned to Tawas City. They lived here until the death of Mrs. Look in 1926. For the past several years the deceased had been making his home with his son, Otto.

Nine children, four sons and five daughters, were born to them. Those surviving are: Mrs. Herman Gaul of Tawas City, Otto Look of Tawas township, and Mrs. Andrew Briggs and Mrs. Wilbur Rockhold of Detroit. Three sons, Gustave, Theodore and Carl, and two daughters, Ida and Mrs. E. S. Anschuetz, preceded him in death. He is also survived by 24 grandchildren and 29 great grandchildren, besides many other relatives and a large circle of friends.

Funeral services will be held Saturday afternoon at the Emanuel Lutheran church. Rev. W. C. Voss will officiate. Interment will be made in the Emanuel Lutheran cemetery.

School Notes

High School
The Board of Education recently voted to apply for a 60x100 combination gymnasium-auditorium through the P.W.A. A building of this nature is very necessary for the welfare of the school and community. In addition to a place in which to play basketball, it is needed as a place in which to hold choruses, orchestra recitals, school plays, etc. It is also expected that the plans will call for a kitchen and a dining room in the basement in order to provide a place in which to serve banquets for the school and other organizations of the community.

Dr. John B. Bornwell, Professor of Medicine, University of Michigan, will speak over W. J. R. Sunday at six o'clock. His topic will be, "Tuberculosis in the Children of Michigan."

Report cards will be given out Wednesday. The card will contain the examination and final marks for the first semester of the school year.

The boys played their first basketball game Friday, January 19, at Alabaster and were defeated by an estimated score of 46 to 7. No accurate score could be kept because the points were made so fast toward the end of the game that the score-keeper couldn't keep up. Therefore the low score of the Alabaster boys. It was a great game for the boys and they say that they'll do better next time. The midget team lost to the smaller Alabaster boys by a score of 14 to 6, after holding their opponents even during the first half. They also report a good time.

CO-OPERATIVE FARM PROJECT CONSIDERED

Group of Jobless Detroiters Write For Information

The establishment of an agricultural community in Iosco county to be run on a co-operative basis is being considered by a group of unemployed Detroit laborers.

A letter signed by Ray Beach, of Detroit, was received recently by County Clerk Frank E. Dease in which information was requested concerning the suitability to such a purpose of the land in Sherman, Burleigh, and Alabaster townships, particularly that drained by the AuGres river and its branches.

The following excerpt from the letter will give an idea of the plans being made:
Frank E. Dease
County Clerk
Tawas City, Mich.
Dear Sir:

A party of unemployed Detroit citizens who left the farms several years ago are looking for land where they can locate and co-operate with each other in growing small fruits and garden vegetables. We would establish a canning plant to prepare our surplus for the general markets.

There are several sections of land in Towns 21 North, Range 5, 6 and 7 East, which are crossed by the AuGres river and its branches. Can you tell us anything about this land? What is the soil? Is it mostly light sand, or is some of it good loam soil which will be good productive land if properly drained?

What is the elevation of the river and its branches above the Lake level where it crosses the section line running west from Alabaster? Is this section line open for traffic? Can it be traveled in wet weather?

Kindly give us all the information you can; also the names of the supervisors of these townships or some of the farmers along this section line, so we can get full information before coming up there. Also, please give us the name of some one living at Alabaster, and oblige,

Runaway Car Crashes Through Store Window

A car owned by the Northern Oil company ran away last Monday and crashed through one of the plate glass windows of J. A. Brugger's grocery store.

The car had been standing at the side of the Northern Oil company garage. A. P. Krueger, manager of the company, wished to use it, and the battery being weak, he cranked the motor. The car was accidentally in high gear and started off toward the Wilson Grain company coal shed. Mr. Krueger clung to the hood and attempted to reach the running board in order to shut off the ignition, but was brushed off as the car passed a sign post. Nearing the coal shed, the car was turned from its course by an obstruction and careened across the street, striking the front of the store and smashing the window. Mr. Krueger suffered severe bruises in his fall.

The first session of the Tawas Bay Yacht Association bridge tournament was held and played Tuesday evening at the State Park Community House and was very well attended, there being some twelve tables, and a very interesting time was had by all who attended and played.

This is a very creditable showing for the first night and exceeded the expectations of the sponsors, and there is no doubt the attendance at the coming sessions will be doubled as the games progress.

The next meeting and session will be held on Monday, January 29th, and each Monday evening thereafter during the term of the ten sessions.

N. J. LEACH CASE IS DISMISSED

The case against N. J. Leach of Clio for killing a deer in a state game refuge was dismissed by Judge Herman Dehnke on Wednesday. The motion for dismissal was made on the grounds of inadequate publication of the order setting aside the land as a game refuge. The notice had been published twice during 21 days previous to closing the land to hunting. Judge Dehnke interpreted the statute as intending that the notice should be published three times during that period.

The land on which the deer was shot is situated on Silver creek and is owned by Leach and Carl E. Brownell of Flint. It was included in the state game refuge by the Conservation Commission last October.

When Leach was tried in December before Justice W. C. Davidson the jury brought in a verdict of guilty. The case was carried to circuit court by Leach to test the validity of the procedure followed by the Conservation Commission in setting up a game refuge. An appeal will undoubtedly be made to the supreme court by the commission.

In the case of Christine Ulrich Holland vs. Laura M. Tobin a decree dissolving the injunction was made. An injunction had been previously granted to prevent foreclosure of mortgage, but the one year grace allowed for redemption had expired.

Kills Large Wild Cat With Bow and Arrow

Edward Anderson of Alabaster brought down a large wild cat in the AuGres swamp last Sunday with a bow and arrow. Anderson and Charles Beck had trailed the animal, and their dogs had it treed when the shot was made.

A home made arrow was used. The bow was made by J. N. Allen of the Birmingham Archery club.

Anderson is very much interested in archery and had hunted deer during the season with bow and arrow.

IOSCO SCHOOL OFFICERS MEET HERE TUESDAY

H. E. Nesman Gives Address on General Problems of Schools

The biennial meeting of school officers of Iosco county was held at the County House at Tawas City Tuesday afternoon and evening, January 25. The meeting was well attended in spite of the fact that slippery roads made it difficult for officers from the outlying districts to be present.

The principal speaker was H. E. Nesman, of the State Department of Public Instruction. Mr. Nesman gave an interesting address on the general problems of school administration. He stressed, particularly, the financial difficulties which are being faced by so many schools and school districts at the present time.

In explanation of this difficulty he said that while the schools of the state had $86,000,000 at their disposal in 1933, this year they are forced to operate on only $45,000,000. This regrettable deficiency of funds has naturally been the cause of the closing of many schools, and in others the reason for drastic cuts in teachers' salaries.

He urged upon Board members the importance of granting tuition to all prospective high school students who make the proper petition for it, in spite of adverse financial conditions. In elaboration of this theme he pointed out the increased difficulties of the young people's obtaining employment after leaving the district schools, and the danger of idleness leading to delinquency. He stated that the cost of keeping one boy in prison is approximately ten times as great as the cost of a high school education. Furthermore, according to the school laws it is the duty of the board to grant the $40.00 tuition fee to any student who files his application with the board before the first Monday in July.

Besides a general discussion of the problems facing the school districts of the state, Mr. Nesman explained some of the recent school legislation. The most important of this legislation is the recently passed Thatcher-Stas Act which takes effect this year. This act is more commonly known as the $15,000,000 State Emergency Fund Act, and provides that sum as an emergency fund to be apportioned to districts which, for some reason or other, cannot obtain their running expenses. The law provides that the fund be apportioned to any district applying for aid on the basis of three mills on the district's assessed valuation, tuition of $40.00 per high school pupil, and $700.00 for every 12 pupils in the district according to the school census. For each additional pupil $90.00 is allowed. Districts not able to meet these requirements may fill out a statement and submit it to the State Administrative Board.

Apportionments of the fund are to be made on the first day each of September, December, and March, unless the board decides to make an advanced grant. Grants from the fund are not considered as loans. At the close of Mr. Nesman's address Miss Myrtle Cowgill, Iosco county nurse, delivered a short talk on the importance of cleanliness in the schools as an aid to efficient child training.

At the evening session the assemblage was entertained with a couple of vocal selections by the members of the County Normal class.

Audience Will Cheer Film "Lady For A Day"

Distinctly in a class by itself as regards motion picture entertainment and possessing a story so universally appealing that it is impossible to predict anything but outstanding success for it, "Lady For A Day," the Columbia super-production starring Warren William with May Robson, starts its local run Sunday for three days, January 28-29-30, at the Family Theatre, East Tawas, and will be greeted by the audience with enthusiasm.

"Lady For A Day" is like a fantastic fairy tale, yet it is real and human. Its appealing humor and touching dramatic scenes make the laughs and tears blend wholesomely with an emotionally agitating effect that is at once overpowering and heart-warming.

A revelation to picture audiences will be the magnificent performance of May Robson as "Apple Annie." The complete cast, from the star down, deserves the highest praise for matchless, inspired performances.

Richard Dix Scores in "Day of Reckoning"

When a man goes to prison—what happens to his family? This question is answered in the startling prison drama, "Day of Reckoning," showing at the Family Theatre, East Tawas, next Wednesday and Thursday, January 31 and February 1.

Richard Dix scores one of the outstanding hits of his career in the dramatic role of John Day, the man whose home life is broken by prison. He contributes stark realism to the scenes in the prison cells and is tender and understanding in his efforts to keep his family together.

Madge Evans, as the superficial and extravagant wife, plays her part with vivacity and is required to do several unsympathetic scenes which she overcomes with her charm. Una Merkel carries off sympathetic honors as the faithful family servant who remains true to Dix's interests until he is released from prison.

Rigid Rules of Etiquette for the Ladies in 1827

"A young woman sitting next to a gentleman at a table should never lift her eyes above the lapel of his coat, lest by looking directly into his eyes she appears bold," is one of the twenty-five pointed suggestions in the "Table Etiquette" section of "The Ladies' Indispensable Assistant," published in 1827 and recently unearthed in Washington. Another valuable hint states that "if possible the knife should never be put into the mouth at all, and if at all, let the edge be turned outward for safety's sake."

Each of the twenty-five suggestions is a far cry from modern rules of etiquette, says the Washington Post. Indeed, as one reads the sentence, "Let men guests be versed in conversation and women pleasant but not coquettish," one wonders if that was as difficult in 1827 as it would be today. At the conclusion of the chapter, however, the author sounds a note of comfort in stating that "if all rules are forgotten, the guests will not go far astray who retains a regard for others, and the hostess may be confident of the success of her dinner, provided she has the manner of hospitality."

Apparently, however, this author had an idea of simplicity that in no way coincides with the prevailing one, for the hints for "simple family meals to which, perhaps, a few friends have been invited," include ten different menus of from six to eight courses each. And "the shortest of all of these lists squirrel soup, fresh codfish, boiled ham, roast turkey and cranberry sauce, fowls stewed whole, oyster pie, smoked tongue, fried sweet potatoes, boiled tomatoes, buttered peas, squash, coconut pudding, chocolate layer cake, mince pie, beaten biscuits, calves' feet jelly, prune juice with milk (or currant wine) and drip coffee."

The menus for special dinners offer even more variety. Each one contains at least sixteen different dishes, and one includes twenty-nine. Directions are given for preparing choice dishes favored by statesmen from the time of George Washington through the administration of John Quincy Adams, and a number of Dolly Madison's famous "receipts" are included, such as ice cream, "which was served at a state dinner about 1811, the first time it was ever heard of."

Then, too, there is a section devoted to "Tried and True Prescriptions" for preparing everything from roasted redbirds on toast, "Johnny cakes" and spoon bread to concocting persimmon beer and "grandmother's cherry bounce." Whether or not such cookery was calculated to improve the human race need not be argued here, but all of this is proof enough that the Washington housewife of 1827 had plenty to keep her busy, for this was before stoves were commonly in use, and meals had to be prepared in iron pots (swung on cranes in the fireplace) or in ovens, skillets and kettles placed

Hungarian Noble Famed as "Greatest Horseman"

Though horse breeding was at its best between the Fifteenth and Seventeenth centuries, racing as an institution is due to Count Stephen Szechenyi, "the greatest Hungarian," who introduced regular horse races in Budapest about 100 years ago. Horses became yet more of a fashion, and it became the habit to drive to the city park even four or six in hand.

The greatest horseman of the last century was Count Maurice Sandor, son-in-law of Metternich. His exploits were known far and near and inspired artists and poets. He was greatly admired in England as the winner of many a steeplechase. His boldness had no equal. He never went up the stairs of Fortress hill in Buda otherwise than on horseback and loved to jump, regardless whether it was over three four-horse carriages, or the heads of soldiers who tried to stop him with their bayonets. He was greatly amused at the consternation he caused. He liked to go to fairs and jump over the loaded carts of terrified tradesmen. He could ride any wild horse and could not be equaled at races and long-distance riding.

Why Hospitals Use a Liquid Laxative

Hospitals and doctors have always used liquid laxatives. And the public is fast returning to laxatives in liquid form. Do you know the reasons?

The dose of a liquid laxative can be measured. The action can be controlled. It forms no habit; you need not take a "double dose" a day or two later. Nor will a mild liquid laxative irritate the kidneys.

The right liquid laxative brings a perfect movement, and there is no discomfort at the time, or after. The wrong cathartic may keep you constipated as long as you keep on using it! And the habitual use of irritating salts, or of powerful drugs in the highly concentrated form of pills and tablets may prove injurious.

A week with a properly prepared liquid laxative like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will tell you a lot. A few weeks' time, and your bowels can be "as regular as clockwork." Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is an approved liquid laxative which all druggists keep ready for use. It makes an ideal family laxative; effective for all ages, and may be given to the youngest child. A GREAT ASSET By LEONARD A. BARRETT

Heredity is a more important factor in life than environment. The forces we have inherited enable us to overcome a bad environment. Lincoln lived amidst surroundings which ordinarily would have killed all initiative and enthusiasm. Because of strong inherited tendencies, which he acquired largely from his mother, he was able to master those conditions. Judas, in Biblical history, lived in an environment which should have made him a great man. But his inherited tendencies, which mastered him, made him known in history as the betrayer. A person must either master his environment or it will master him. One of the greatest blessings is a strong healthy body. Any person who has inherited health is to be heartily congratulated. A healthy body can overcome disease. A physician may be subject to contagion in the environment in which he works, but if he possesses normal health and exercises proper precaution, he is not likely to be infected. The tendency of health is to ward off and overcome disease. This same fact holds true in the world of moral and spiritual values. Our environment during the past three years has been of the most depressing nature. Persons who were able to hold on and to overcome and not be mastered by their depressed tendencies, were in the majority of cases those who had within them the power to win. Doubtless, in the majority of cases, this was an inherited tendency. The greatest gift parents can give to their children is not material wealth, or social prestige, but an inheritance of health of body, mind, and spirit.

Spurious Money Gangs Are Driven Into Hiding

New Rogues Give Secret Service Most Trouble.

Washington.—The widespread wave of counterfeiting which has swept the United States during the past year has been practically checked by the secret service, it was disclosed at the Treasury department.

It was said that since the beginning of the depression there had been a gradual increase in counterfeiting, and during the year just ending it was unprecedented.

The secret service has smashed what they believe to be two big international rings, as well as a number of smaller rings, thus halting big-scale operations.

One unique case came to light with the recent arrest of two brothers, who owned a small country bank in Minnesota.

Bankers Start "Mint." Their bank closed by the banking holiday last March, they conceived a scheme for making good their losses by making spurious bills.

Investigation by secret service men disclosed they hired an unscrupulous engraver and printer and started to turn out counterfeit notes.

After disposing of a large number in their native state, they went into Missouri, where they were soon apprehended. An elaborate counterfeiting plant was found in their home, together with a large number of the spurious bank notes.

With the recent arrest of Henry Dechow, alias Count Enrique von Buelow, and others in New York and Chicago, secret service men believe they smashed one of the biggest international rings ever to operate in this country.

Von Buelow is said to have had $90,000 in bogus $100 bills when he was taken into custody.

Secret service men admit counterfeiting has developed into a highly organized racket, and that the amount of spurious money is large.

Atlantic Waves May Create New Island

Provincetown, Mass.—Encroaching waters of the restless Atlantic may create a new island off the Massachusetts coast during the next ten years.

Last spring a three-day storm ate away several feet of embankment and inundated the Pamet river coast guard station, and now 13 miles of Cape Cod between Truro and Provincetown is in danger of being sliced from the rest of the cape.

The ocean has only to advance a stone's throw at the point in question to connect with the terminus of Pamet river, a small stream which crosses the cape and joins Cape Cod bay.

Some parts of the cape shore have been cut into 200 to 300 feet by flood tides.

machinery, counterfeits are turned out so cleverly they frequently pass through banks and are detected only when they are sent to the treasury for redemption.

Recognize the Work. When a new counterfeit note is discovered, "old-timers" in the secret service usually can tell by the workmanship who the counterfeiter is if he has had a previous record. In a majority of instances, this proves to be the case. Then it is merely a question of finding him or his gang.

When the engraver is not known, it's then that Uncle Sam's sleuths have a hard job ahead. But they usually succeed.

The secret service also finds there is a surprising amount of counterfeiting in small coins. These "small-timers" palm off bad nickels and even pennies.

Recently they arrested a street photographer, who was making a tidy sum giving his customers spurious coins as change. He made the mistake of trying it on the secret service man who had been "tipped off."

Paris Seeking to Save Historic Royal Bridge

Paris.—Engineer, spare that bridge!—is the cry that is being sent up by loyal and sentimental Parisians as the pick and ax threaten to demolish the Pont Itoyal, built by Louis XIV and cherished by many.

This is the bridge which connects the right and left banks of the Seine at the western end of the Louvre, and the commission du vieux Paris is asking the powers that be to register the bridge as an historic monument, thus saving it from destruction.

The story goes that one day Louis XIV was passing along the quay on the Louvre side when he chanced to see a ferryboat, a "bac" it was called, capsize and dump all its occupants into the water. "Good gracious!" he said to his architect, "I can't have my subjects drowned like dogs! Build me a bridge on this spot at once!" And that's how the Pont Royal happened. And that's how the Rue du Bac got its name—the street that continues the Pont Royal on the Quai d'Orsay side of the river.

The complaint that imperils the ancient bridge is that it takes up too much room.

War Vets Plan Memorial for Loved Dog Comrade

San Francisco, Calif.—When the Sixty-seventh coast artillery left San Francisco for France during the World war Barney, dog pal of the regiment, went along after he had been persuaded to enlist.

When the company embarked for France Barney was concealed in a bass drum while the commander was conveniently out of sight. He went to France.

He was a real pal. And returned amidst the honors of the victors. Recently he died and his grave will be marked by a bronze plaque, the gift of his comrade pals.

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

"MEN attract not that which they want, but that which they are," wrote the distinguished American novelist James Lane Allen. It is a statement to make all of us put on our thinking caps. Everyone has longings, and hopes that the things he wants will come to him. To make ourselves magnets to draw to us the things we want sounds fascinating. It is something each of us can try to do, and prove to our satisfaction whether it works or not.

There are persons who want appreciation. This is one of the most usual of the longings of the human heart. To work and strive to do the best we can, and not receive the appreciation that the labor merits, is discouraging.

How can this state of affairs be changed? Following the statement just quoted, we can try the method which is the natural interpretation of it. We can look to ourselves and see if we, ourselves, are appreciative.

Do we commend our children when they do what we want, or what we realize they should do, or do we find fault when they forget or fall? Do we say a good word to those whom we employ when they spend their energies doing their tasks well, and as they know we would wish them done? Or do we reprimand them when they do not succeed in accomplishing the work well, or are slow, or neglectful?

Two Attitudes. It is not that reproof for any of these failures may not be merited and should at times be given. But is it any more deserved than praise for excellent work? In other words is our attitude one of appreciation, or is it one of fault finding? If the latter let us be honest with ourselves and realize that we fail to get what we want because we do not attract it. We are not magnets to draw what we want, to ourselves, but to draw things similar to our inner selves. We are not appreciative persons, and therefore, we ourselves, do not merit appreciation. If we were we should be magnets to attract it.

Let us take into consideration how much we like to work for, or with, those who are appreciative. Also how much we dislike to work for, or with, those who are constantly picking flaws in what we do or how we do it. It is difficult for us to be appreciative of

"Not Real Floods; Just Warnings"

As the worst floods in the history of the section swept over western Washington, William Greenwood, the modern Noah of Olympia, Wash., stood at the rail of his weird ark, moored on the mudflats of Olympia harbor, and shook his head in deprecatory fashion. "These floods ain't the real flood," he said; "they're merely warnings to sinners to repent before the last great flood." This, he asserts, according to the spirits, is due in 1938, and the final deluge is to be in the form of a gigantic tidal wave. He began assembling his strange craft, which he calls Ark the Second, several years ago, using the hull of an abandoned fishing vessel. It is decorated with mysterious symbols and signs.

"Take the horse around to the stable and find your master," said Smif abruptly. She wanted to be alone. To enter her home as if it were already hers before the world. As she mounted the steps, she asked herself once again impatiently, why Bill-Lee did not write.

Pushing aside the screen door, she entered the hall. Here all was as it had been in the old days. Invitingly open, smelling of—what was that familiar odor? Beeswax! How she loved that smell—and the parlor would have bowls of potpourri, she was sure.

It was amazing how little was changed. Sunk in deep contentment, she wandered from room to room and only when she met a reflection in a long mirror was she conscious of a sense of unfamiliarity. The reflection given back should be of a little girl with wild bronze curls and scratched sunburned legs. Well, she was glad if something had to be changed that it was she rather than the place.

It was in what was evidently Stone's office or study that she found the portrait. It was hung on the wall facing his desk, an old mahogany kidney-shaped affair, the work of a good Colonial cabinet maker, but new to her. Entirely suited to the house, she was glad to observe.

She sat down in his chair and looked critically at the painting.

It really was an extraordinary combination of the two characters, hers and Lorraine Lovely. One could see in it whichever one was looking for. And it was rather pathetic that Stone should have hung it as he had. Evidently he clung to this great-grandmother because she was a Lovely and through her he felt some right to be in possession of the Lovely acres.

A scurrying of little paws brought her to her feet. Voltaire and Beaucaire were outdistancing their master. He must have told them she was there. She went into the corridor to meet them as Stone entered from the parlor.

"Smif!" he cried, "this is too good to be true. When did you come and where are you staying?"

"I reached Culthorpe yesterday afternoon," she said, devoting more attention to the adoring dogs than to him. "And I'm certainly glad to see you and the pups."

"And the old place? How do you think it looks? I haven't spoiled it, have I?"

"That's the strange thing.—Not that you haven't spoiled it but that it looks so exactly as I remember it. I was afraid that I had an impossible ideal in my mind—and here it is as I had dreamed."

Stone was pleased. He could have had no warmer praise than her expressive face offered him.

"It seemed to me too perfect to change," he said, which tribute satisfied even Smif's exacting demands for appreciation of Lovelylea.

"The dogs look well," she remarked. "And at last you are established here for all time. Tell me, have you heard from Captain Miles?"

"And that's an amazing thing," Stone declared, "wait till I get his letter." He went into his study and came out with the letter in his hand. "And now," he said half shyly, "let's go out and sit on the steps while we read it together. You've no idea, Smif, how I've longed to do simple little things like that with you. As if I had really been your brother William."

Smif was touched, his words made so clear to her his past loneliness.

"You mustn't call him that." She seated herself while he lounged on the step below her. "He is Bill-Lee to every one around here. Hand over that letter. I'm consumed with curiosity."

"It amounts to an answer, although it came so soon that it must have crossed mine en route. It leaves no doubt of what his reply will be."

Smif flung off her hat and let the breeze play around her forehead; then, her bronze head close to his dark one, holding the paper so that he too could see the bold writing, she read it through in silence.

"Don't tell me there's no Providence!" she exclaimed when they had finished it. "This fits in too beautifully. Isn't it wonderful? Have you begun to search for a place for him? I'll help you—"

"What would you think of Rock-moss?" Stone drawled. "This isn't the only letter I've had. Mercy writes me she is becoming beautiful beyond compare. She's bound to marry now, isn't she?"

He looked at Smif and she looked back at him, not absolutely certain she read his expression aright. A man who never laughed was so baffling.

"Yes," she agreed finally, "I've no doubt Miss Mercedes will marry. Like me, she has been delivered from the curse of fatness."

"You never were fat, Smif," Stone averred. "I grant you Mercy was. I'm crazy to see what she looks like, aren't you?"

Smif was at once aware that she would be able to bear it with equanimity if she never laid eyes on Miss Mercedes again. But it would not do to say so.

"I have no doubt she will be amazing," she said briefly. "Come, show me the stables; then I must go back to Culthorpe."

CHAPTER XIII

As soon as Susan arrived with Charlie and Pam in tow, Smif moved to Lovelylea. She had made up her mind to say nothing to Stone about her purchase of the plantation until she had received definite word from her brother and had sent the first payment to him. She was exasperated by Bill-Lee's procrastination, although she recognized it as characteristic. But she could not be content until the deeds of the property were formally made over to her. When the house-party assembled she was still awaiting definite word from Bill.

An innocuous young couple, the Gardners, from Boston, had arrived with Eve Goodhue under their wing, and one morning they were all in riding clothes waiting for the horses to be brought around when Daly appeared at Stone's side.

"Telegrams, sir," he said succinctly, presenting a salver.

"Is one for me?" Smif asked with unconcealed eagerness. Bill-Lee might have telegraphed in a sudden spasm of conscience.

Stone picked them up and shook his head at her.

"Both for me. You'll allow me?" he added to Susan to whom he had happened to be talking.

"Telegrams never require an apology," she said, "to me they seem to signalize bad news."

"At least that one doesn't." He handed it over to her.

"My dear, I can't read it without my glasses. Tell me what it says."

"Just that two fellows I knew well in England have landed and will join us today."

"And the other telegram—"

Stone read it and it was plain that its contents pleased him.

"That is even better news," he declared, "but for the present it is a secret."

"Who are the men, Mr. Nesbit?" Pam asked.

"One is Sir Gregory Dunn, who went to Eton with me though he is considerably my junior. The other is Paddy, the young brother of my best friend, a fine fellow. He has resigned from the army and is coming over here to buy a place. I'm hoping to find a plantation for him near me."

"What is his name besides Paddy?" Pam asked idly. This man who was expected was plainly English. She had made up her mind that she did not care for the English.

"His name isn't Paddy at all. That's merely a nickname. It's Miles. Captain John Miles."

"But we know him!" cried Eve. "You remember, Pam? He was one of the ushers at Cintra's wedding. We liked him lots."

"He is an Irishman who wants to make his home in America and become a citizen here. In fact I suspect an American love-affair is one of the principal inducements," said Stone.

"That is jolly," Pam said heartily. "He's the type of immigrant we don't often get. He'll be very popular down here; and the girls aren't the only ones who liked him, Stone. I'll be awfully glad to see him again."

"Are you all talking of that nice Captain Miles who stayed with us at the Manor after Cintra's wedding?" Susan asked. "If you are, add me to the list of official welcome. I thought him a very good sort."

Susan was an observant as well as a devoted mother and when she had so readily canceled the plans for Pam's presentation she had done so because she suspected that something serious had occurred to make her daughter take so positive and unexpected a stand. In some way, Captain Miles was connected with Pam's refusal to go abroad.

The arrival of Captain Paddy Miles and his friend Gregory completed the party which quickly fused into a well-mannered and congenial family. They were all having a good time and did not care who knew it.

Then, into this contented household burst Miss Martha Washington Mercedes. Dressed, as Smif at once realized by Madame Georgette, with a taste and a restraint that threw a new light on that forceful woman's influence, she was at once pretty and striking.

"I heard Johnny had a party over here," she began. "Well, when the cat's away, the mouse will play. But I didn't expect to find you here." She addressed Smif pointedly.

"Miss Lovely and Mr. Nesbit are cousins," Susan told her.

"Miss Lovely?" She spoke interrogatively, feeling the news unwelcome although she did not yet know why.

"Don't tell me you didn't know she was one of the Lovely ladies of Lovelylea?"

"I didn't know it and I do not understand people with two names," Mercy said crossly.

This was not welcome news to her. Plainly Johnny was escaping from her clutches. She must consider what steps she had better take. Yet, after all, the road to man's heart was well known. She would invite them all to dine, although she heaved a sigh at thought of the good things she ought not to touch.

Smif looked forward to that dinner with unconcealed interest and carefully concealed contempt. The food, of course, would be unimpeachable, she had Stone's assurance of that, but the lady of the house—

As a matter of fact, Smif was destined to be surprised in more ways than one. Mercy made no parade of her dieting. She toyed with her food, making a pretense of eating but never letting a morsel pass her lips, and Smif, who had expected to see her fall before such a temptation, felt like clapping her hands in generous applause, and shot a glance down the table to Stone.

She was accustomed to find his eyes ever ready to meet her own. Now, with a sinking of the heart which she did not attempt to deny to herself, she saw that he was concentrated on Mercy. Again and again she glanced down the table at him—always with the same result. She told herself, she ought to be glad. She ought to rejoice that since Stone was set on this match, his future wife promised to be more suited to the position than she had believed possible. Why should she be selfish about it? It need not rob her of her friend.

But in her heart she knew it would, and when Susan's car drew up, she put her hand on Charlie's arm.

"Do you mind staying and riding home with Stone?" she asked. "I'm terribly tired. I'd like to go with Susan."

"Certainly not, certainly not," said Charlie fussily, "get right in, my dear, get right in. Where is Stone anyhow? Where is he, does anyone know?"

And as the door was closed on Pam and Paddy Miles, who had turned down one of the little seats, Eve Goodhue's rich voice answered:

"He stayed behind to say something to Miss Mercedes."

CHAPTER XIV

The next day began as all days began at Lovelylea. Every one was very cheerful and very chatty about the affair of the previous evening, very loud in his praise of the fun and the food.

On the assurance that they would find an equally delicious meal at the Graceys where they were to lunch, the mail arrived, interrupting further discussion of this enthralling subject and as Daly, who had sorted it, came to her side, Smif saw that the top envelope of her pile had been forwarded from New York and was addressed in Bill-Lee's unmistakable handwriting. She picked it up with an exclamation of pleasure—now she could at last be content. No alien would reign in her beloved home. Ripping it open, she drew out the contents.

The letter it held was short and an enclosure within it fluttered to the floor to lie there disregarded while she read:

"Dear old Smif: On thinking it over, I feel sure it is generosity to me that has urged you on to buy the old place. Anyhow, I don't approve of your living there alone, so forget it as I have. It was a silly plan, and I was a fool to encourage it. I've sold Lovelylea for a good fat figure, so it's over and done with for both of us. I'll have enough now to play polo like a gentleman. Perhaps some day I'll come north with a Chileño team to show New York the game—"

There was a little more but she did not read it, sitting for a moment as if she had turned to bronze. Then she mechanically accepted the slip of yellow paper that Daly had picked up from the floor and presented to her.

It was a check for the amount which, at his request, she had advanced Bill-Lee, to be applied on the purchase price of the plantation. Legally, should she refuse to accept it, she might be able to enforce her claim—at the cost of informing the world that her brother had broken faith. That she would never do. Her decision was made on the instant.

With a murmur of letters to write before the party set out, she rose and left the room.

Pam was occupied with Paddy Miles; Susan was watching her daughter's happy expression with tender understanding. Her Charlie might not be a romantic figure but she had married him for love not for money. Most of the others were trying to follow Stone's finger as he traced their route of the day on a map he had spread on the table. Only Eve Goodhue saw Smif's face and half rose as if to accompany her, then sank back in her chair, fearful of intrusion. There was no doubt in her mind that Smif had suffered a blow of some sort, and this impression was confirmed a little later when one of the maids came with a message that Miss Lovely had a headache and was lying down. She would not attempt the long ride with them, and hoped they would make the necessary apologies and explanations to Mrs. Gracey.

"She must be feeling very bad," Susan said, rising. "I'll go up—"

"Let me, mother," Pam begged, "please! I want to see her for just a minute. I'll find out if she ought to have a doctor—"

"We can both go—"

"I wouldn't," Eve spoke deprecatingly. "Headaches get better if one is very quiet. I had one once, so I know."

There was something in the way this was said that caused Susan to sink back in her chair. Eve Goodhue was a very definite personality.

"Very well, Pam, you go," she consented, "and don't stay long."

"Only a minute, mother." Pam passed out, giving her mother a friendly pat as she went by.

Outside Smif's door she knocked lightly. Smif had expected this. She knew some one must come to inquire if anything could be done for her, but she longed passionately for their departure. She wanted to be alone at Lovelylea to take her farewell of all that she had loved through an absence that would have weakened the tie to any save a faithful heart.

"Come in!" she called cheerfully enough. She had herself well in hand.

Pam peeped in cautiously as if she expected some serious manifestation of an illness that had laid low so stout a soul.

"Is your head very bad, Smif darling?" she inquired.

"Not at all," Smif replied promptly. "My head is a polite prevarication. It's something inside me that's dropped a stitch. I know the Box Hall cook and I feel that discretion is the better part of valor for the present, so I'm going to stay—here," she had been about to say "home," only stopping herself in time. Lovelylea was home no longer. Not when Miss Mercedes was to be its mistress. Smif had jumped at once to the conclusion that Bill-Lee had sold to Stone. "Keep the others away. Pam, that's a good scout. I do feel peculiarly rotten, but I'll be all right by the time you get back."

Pam halted for an instant on the way to the door, then returned with a soft little rush and slipped to her knees by the side of the couch.

"I don't want to bother you, Smif dear, but there's something I want to tell you even before I tell father and mother, because I believe you wangled it somehow. Paddy and I have fixed it up. We're going to be married and I'm awfully happy. . . . An Irishman is different from an Englishman, isn't he?"

"To be sure he is," Smif agreed heartily. "Paddy Miles is a peach, or whatever their favorite fruit is in Ireland. I can't think of anything but the potato."

"Paddy'll love that. I mean to tell him you said he was an Irish potato,"

Pam said. "He's awfully funny about himself—and us," she added in a softer voice. "He vows he entirely lost visibility in the British matrimonial market when news of his cousin's numerous heirs got around. He even says he was afraid I wouldn't be able to see him without the glorifying light cast by a title. But he was coming back after me anyhow this autumn," she ended exuberantly, anxious that Smif should not misunderstand.

"Of course he was, darling," Smif reassured her. "Stone says he's one of the best, and crazy about you." She was glad for the girl's sake, heartily fond of her, yet so tense in her own misery that moments seemed like hours and she thought she would never find herself alone.

Pam dropped a kiss on her cheek. "I'm off," she announced, "and I'll see that none of the others bother you."

The door shut behind her at last and Smif lay in semi-darkness waiting for the sounds that would signal the departure of the party for Box Hall. She knew the hour set for the start. She knew that Stone could be trusted to get them going according to schedule, but the minutes still lagged and she looked at her watch half a dozen times before she heard the welcome clatter of horses' hoofs as they came around from the stable.

She got up from the couch and seated herself near the window to wait for the return of the stable boys and, sitting there, she looked down on the same vista her father and she had seen when they had watched Remus, the foxhound, hurrying off on his urgent private affairs while the long lines of rain, like fine-drawn threads of ice, fell steadily, to melt into puddles on contact with the earth. Once again she had a vision of the past. . . . Then she shook herself back to reality, mental and physical. The boys had passed and she was wasting time. Before the others returned she meant to visit all the spots she loved the most; to burn them indelibly into her memory; to store them up against the barren days to come. She leaped to her feet and looked at herself in her mirror before she opened the door of her room. So far as she could see, she would pass muster if she met any of the servants.

Thoughtfully she went from room to room, peopling them with her memories.

Down-stairs she came at length to Stone's study, to find that door shut. She hesitated before it.

Of course.—The dogs! They had been shut in so that they would not try to follow their master. Poor darlings, they and she would be in much the same case once Mercy was mistress here. Persona non grata Well next to Stone, they loved her. They should come with her on her rounds.

She opened the door and walked into the room. It was a cool morning and a little fire of hickory logs was burning in the fireplace, before which the bulldogs stretched, sleepily luxurious. Although she had come for them, she took no note of them, for at the desk a man was seated.

"Stone!" she exclaimed. "I thought you had gone with the others."

He turned at the sound of her voice making no reply where none was needed.

"I hoped you'd show up soon," he said. "I want a talk with you. I've something to tell you."

Apricot From China

The apricot, one of California's most important fruit products, is believed to be a native of China. It was first introduced to the Pacific state back in the early mission days and has flourished there ever since. Its life habit is much like that of the peach, and some effort has been made to establish it in the East. However, in the East it faces one plant enemy so well known to peach growers, the curculio. There are three known species of apricot, the American tree growing in a beautifully foliaged tree of spreading nature with a round top. The leaves are a bright green and the flowers pinkish white.

Foods That Have 'Affinity'

Custom, for Instance, Has Long Associated the Matter of What Vegetables Should Be Served With Boiled-Dinner Ensembles.

There are certain foods which by custom have come to be associated. Every one who sees boiled dinner on the menu immediately thinks of corned beef and cabbage, with the accompaniment of potatoes and turnips and sometimes of carrots and onions as well.

In some places smoked ham is used instead of the corned beef. When the first cool days come in the fall, I begin to long for a good boiled dinner. Pork, potatoes and sauerkraut make another good combination meal—if you like sauerkraut.

Boiled tongue, with a savory sauce, should have creamy mashed potatoes served with it. Fried parsnips or squash are good vegetables to serve with this. Crooked neck squash, or one of the Italian varieties, are the best for frying.

In the last few years vegetable dinners have become more and more popular. These so-called dinners are often used for luncheons, and are to be found both noon and night on most restaurant menus. Several restaurants are famous for their special treatment of some of the vegetables.

At one hotel, the cauliflower is always broiled. Another grill room serves a whole-broiled vegetable dinner. Sometimes one of the vegetables is glazed. Occasionally a poached egg accompanies the vegetable, with Hollandaise sauce. Or the sauce may be on one or two of the vegetables. Menus of several such dinners are given here:

Vegetable Dinner.
Poached Egg, Hollandaise
Peas Spinach String Beans
Glazed Onions and Carrots

Mashed Potatoes
Meat Gravy
Beets Peas Glazed Carrots
Cauliflower

Mashed Potatoes Spinach
Broccoli and Zucchini
With Hollandaise

Broiled Vegetable Dinner.
Mushrooms Tomatoes
Sweet Potatoes Asparagus

Baked Ham.
Have a fresh ham boned. Soak for three days in a mixture of 2 quarts of vinegar, ¼ cup sliced onion, 1 tablespoon whole cloves, 1 bay leaf, 1 blade of mace. Turn occasionally in the liquid and bake in it, using moderate oven, allowing about 30 minutes to the pound. Half an hour before serving place around the meat potatoes which have been parboiled ten minutes and cut in halves. Buttered spinach and fried sliced apples may be served with this.

Savory Sauce.
2 tablespoons fat
4 tablespoons flour
1 teaspoon salt
Pepper
2 cups liquor in which tongue has been cooked
¼ cup chopped sour pickles
2 tablespoons sliced stuffed olives
Melt the fat, add the flour and seasoning. Stir until smooth, add the liquor, and stir over fire until it thickens. Add the pickles and olives, and boil two minutes.

Tongue.
A smoked tongue should be soaked in cold water several hours before cooking, while a fresh tongue may be placed in boiling water. Cook slowly until tender (three to four hours), cool in the water, and then remove the skin. Tongue may be served with savory sauce or may be served cold, sliced, and garnished with cucumber pickles.

Boiled Dinner.
Select a piece of brisket corned-beef. Wipe with a damp cloth, tie in shape, cover with cold water and bring slowly to boiling point. Let it boil for five minutes, skim the top and let simmer over low flame for one hour. At this point add a head of cabbage cut in quarters, and let simmer 20 or 30 minutes.

Second Boiled Dinner.
Place an end of smoked ham in a kettle of boiling water. Simmer for 30 minutes or longer. Add yellow turnips cut in quarters, a head of cabbage cut in quarters, potatoes, carrots sliced, and small onions. Add salt, if necessary. Boil 30 or 40 minutes. Drain, arrange vegetables and meat on a hot platter and serve.

Buffalo Herd Thrives in Alaskan Territory

A herd of 23 buffalo transplanted to Alaska five years ago has thrived and more than doubled in number, according to a report to the bureau of biological survey, United States Department of Agriculture.

The Alaska game commission and the biological survey in 1928 transferred the buffalo to the territory from the bureau's bison range in Montana. Funds for the purpose were appropriated by the territorial legislature. In spite of some fatal accidents, the animals soon accommodated themselves to the new environment.

The transplanted herd is of special interest, says the biological survey, because the animals composing it are the first to live in that region in recent times. In the Pleistocene era the group was represented by other species, apparently larger than the modern ones, and now long extinct. The nearest wild buffalo now live in the region of Great Slave lake, in the Mackenzie valley of central Canada, at least a thousand miles to the southeast. These are closely related to the form now being established in the region where their prehistoric relatives lived so long ago.

Porcupine's Revenge
A porcupine may avenge its own death weeks after it has been eaten by some other animal. If one of its quills, which are well barbed, penetrates the skin of an enemy it is likely gradually to work deeper into the flesh until it eventually strikes a vital spot and causes the animal's death.

Tuesday evening the Prescott boys' and girls' basketball teams were our opponents. The girls' game was well played and ended with a score of 21 to 6 in favor of Alabaster. The boys' game was quite close during the first two periods, but a rally in the second half gave the Prescott team a wide margin over Alabaster, the final score being 32 to 11. The third game was played between the Prescott and Alabaster independents, in which Alabaster was nosed out by one point, 21 to 20.

Remember the game we chafe with Harrisville there this Friday evening. Both teams, boys' and girls', will play.

Explaining Sympathy
Sympathy is in great degree a result of the mood we are in at the moment; anger forbids the emotion. On the other hand, it is easiest taken on when we are in a state of most abject self-satisfaction.—Lew Wallace.

Variation in Needs
A sunflower plant requires about a quart of water a day. A beech tree may need as much as eighty quarts in the same time.

Real Joy of Life
Satisfaction, real satisfaction, always comes from within. It is of the heart, not of the world. One of life's keenest joys is the anticipation of each day's problems; its greatest contentment is the knowledge of some work well done.—Giff.

JUST SITTING AROUND, . . . NIGHT AFTER NIGHT

Margaret and John have lots of friends—and are well-liked by all. But they have no telephone to enable friends to reach them easily.

So Margaret and John just sit around, night after night, missing many good times. Yet, for only a few cents a day, they could have the countless advantages of telephone service.

Besides being a social asset, a telephone helps in finding employment . . . in keeping in touch with one's work . . . in "running" errands. And it offers priceless protection in emergencies, making it possible to summon doctor, firemen or police, instantly.

Argentine Pampa

Argentine Cowboys.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service. THE Argentine government is augmenting its fighting forces against devastating locust hordes with 12,000 miles of sheet iron barriers to be used on its famous pampa.

Pampa was the Indians' name for plains. Spanish colonists took the name, and thus the world knows the vast, flat Argentine grasslands that sweep from the Atlantic seaboard to the foot of the Andes mountains.

History picked the pampa as a vast stage for one of its most eventful and swift-moving dramas. Probably no other region, in so brief a time, has seen more astounding changes. More Europeans are settled here; more magic cities are leaping up; more railways are being built; and more wealth amassed than in any equal area below the equator. Ask Paris waiters if any other visitor spends like an Argentine cow king, who "leaves all change on the plate."

Alfalfa alone, as we shall see, migrated to this new land to bring it amazing economic strength. In a few short decades, with such forces as prize bulls, barbed wire, cold storage and fast ships, man turned a wilderness into a farm so big and rich that now it helps fix the world price of bread and meat.

This swift rise of a new Canaan, whose theme song, as a Texan hinted, is the ceaseless moan and bellow of myriad kine, affords a fantastic example of mass migration. Its marvel is not in the fact that millions of white settlers swarmed across the South Atlantic to this fecund pampa. That was extraordinary, of course; you can imagine the infinite host slipping down under the equatorial horizon like figures turning in a phenakistoscope.

Extraordinary Migration.

But the whole truth is harder to imagine. Not only did the millions move from southern Europe, but, as if lifted and carried overseas on some magic carpet, they took with them to the pampa a cross-section of European life. Speech, culture, religion, manners, and customs they carried; likewise tools and trades—even their animals, fowls, grains, fruits, flowers—weeds.

Today their thistle almost covers Argentina. Tradition says the first thistle seed came over accidentally, in the long hair of army mules! Along immigrant trails into the pampa a scattered fringe of European grass, weeds, vegetables, and berries first grew up, where fodder, camp refuse, and seeds from food were dropped, just as along the Santa Fe and Oregon trails our covered-wagon trains introduced many berries, plants, and fruit trees from farther east. History holds no parallel in time or space to certain aspects of this amazing movement of people and plant life.

But, one asks, since whites first landed, some 400 years ago, why was the conquest of the pampa so long delayed? The reasons are plain, yet curiously interesting.

Except for Indians, who at first dwelt near the River Plate country, the pampa was empty. No glittering pagan cities, no rich gold mines or Inca treasure were here to lure the Conquistadores. Also, Europe still lived then from its own farms. It had not yet grown so thickly peopled or so highly industrialized that, as later, it had to look overseas for more bread and meat.

Here, as in our own land, white settlements were long confined to limited regions. The Atlantic seaboard had been settled for many generations before we knew much about our Far West. So it was on the pampa, with this difference: Spain, who early ruled most of South America, long allowed sea trade only through Porto Bello (Puerto Bello), in Panama. It took about two years, by land and sea, to exchange goods between Cadiz, in Spain, and the settlements along the River Plate. (Plata).

Early Inland Development.

This decree, while it made life hard for traders in Buenos Aires and encouraged smuggling by Dutch and English ships, really hastened the development of certain Argentine back country by many centuries. Tucuman, Cordoba, Mendoza, and Jujuy, for example, though far inland, were founded centuries ago because they lay along the Andean mule paths over which Spanish goods came down from Panama and Peru to the Plate settlements.

Some of the first sugar mills in the western world, crude and primitive yet making good sugar, were built about Tucuman.

Pack trains and creaking caravans of high-wheeled freight wagons plied for many years between the Argentine northwest and Buenos Aires. While the pampa was still as empty as Oklahoma in 1870, they crossed it on a well-worn trail, just as our own ox wagons traded from Missouri to Santa Fe in the ante-railway days. And there was the same Indian menace.

Old maps show a string of forts across the Argentine west of Buenos Aires. Here the Indian frontier was hundreds of miles long, and the forts stood guard between Indian raiders and the white settlers.

From the lookout towers on these forts soldiers watched the waving seas of pampa grass for signs of skulking Indians. Sometimes a warning that Indians were sneaking through the tall grass was given by fleeing animals or by sudden alarm and movement among the birds. Again, charging past the forts on horseback, Indians, carrying long spears, raided the ranches behind the lines, and in the course of years many Spanish women and children were seized and carried into captivity. These Indians stole cattle, also, by the thousands and drove them over the Andes for sale in Chile.

Indians Finally Subdued.

Through all these turbulent times the pioneer colonists stubbornly pushed their settlements farther and farther out on the plains. Finally, about the same time that Custer, Miles, and Crook were conquering the last of our warring tribes, Argentina sent the famous General Roca on his now historic drive against the pampa Indians. This campaign ended forever all danger from these predatory savages.

The heat and hammering of Indian raids, outlaw fights, and desperado forays, the trials of revolution and civil war, produced a fighting breed, hardy and audacious, fit to handle the thundering herds and guide the rising tide of immigrant farmers from southern Europe.

Although the swift growth of pampa farms and cities is of more recent date, foundations for this power and wealth began in the days when San Martin marched his cavalry over the Andes and helped Chile and Peru win freedom from the Spanish yoke.

History always emphasizes war and politics. To such prosaic yet significant events as the coming of high-bred live stock, the introduction of foreign grains and forage plants, or the advent of railways, wire fence, and windmills, or the rising tide of immigrant home-seekers, history often makes but casual reference. Yet on the pampa, all through the Indian raids during the lawless days of Facundo Quiroga, the Pancho Villa of Argentina, and especially during the wars with Paraguay and Brazil, these economic forces were gaining momentum and paving the way for what is today the rich and virile Argentine Republic.

The pampa, with its 250,000 square miles, is to Argentina what the Nile valley is to Egypt. It works with the rhythm of a great factory; so many square leagues of corn and alfalfa fed to so many million head of cattle and hogs mean so many shiploads of meat for Europe.

And there is wheat! So much wheat that a big crop here affects the world price at Liverpool, and so hits the pocketbooks of wheat farmers in the United States, Canada, Australia, Russia, and elsewhere.

Coming of the Railway.

Let us look at what you might call the "stage props," or mechanics and scenery, which the Argentineans have set up to make their humming pampa one of the world's amazing industrial spectacles.

In the old days when a gaucho's wife wanted to visit her neighbors she sometimes rode sitting on a dried horsehide. Her husband, mounted on his horse, dragged this horsehide sled with a long rope tied from it to his horse's girth. On this primitive conveyance, rough as a North American Indian travois, the pioneer pampa woman rode, slipping over mudholes or bouncing through clouds of dust.

Over this same pampa now palatial passenger trains, with sumptuous diners, sleepers, and glistening observation cars, race from town to town, over level tracks, often with no curves for scores of miles.

Hailing from Newburyport, Mass., and shipwrecked on the shores of Argentina, William Wheelwright built the first really important railway over the pampa. Today his pioneer line forms part of the Central Argentine system. He planned the Transandine line, but did not live to see it built.

THE BEECH-NUT PICNIC

OVER in a certain part of the Green Forest grow silver-barked beeches, the trees that Peter Rabbit thinks are the most beautiful of all trees that in winter are bare of leaves. Already they were partly bare and the leaves which still cling to them were crisp and yellow. The beech trees, like Johnny Chuck, were about ready to go to sleep for the winter. You see, their summer's work was about finished. In fact, it was quite finished, for beneath them hiding among the crisp fallen leaves were ever and ever so many ripe, brown, three-sided little nuts, the sweetest little nuts in the world. That is what Buster Bear says, anyway, but perhaps he isn't a fair judge.

"My, but This Is Going to Be Some Picnic!"

Those brown three-sided little nuts were the gift of the silver-barked beech trees, for the joy and well-being of some of their feathered and furred neighbors. All summer long those little prickly husks on the beautiful beech trees. At first, they had been green, but with the coming of fall they had turned brown. Now had come Jack Frost of a still October night and opened the prickly little husks. Merry Little Breezes had shaken out the little brown nuts and they had rattled merrily down through the branches to the ground and rolled this way and rolled that way under the crisp fallen leaves.

Now, many sharp eyes had been watching those little husks on the beech trees and waiting for the coming of Jack Frost to open them. The owners of those sharp eyes knew when Jack Frost did come. Of course, he always makes his arrival known by going about and slyly pinching all whom he may find, just by way of greeting. So very early in the morning after Jack Frost had opened the little prickly husks, many feet turned toward that part of the Green Forest where grow the beautiful beech trees, and some wings were turned in that direction, too. It was the day of the annual beech-nut picnic.

HOW TO COOK EGGS

THE secret of egg cookery lies in the simple principle, which is a rule with all protein foods, never to cook them at a high temperature, as heat toughens and hardens protein foods. Eggs, being the most delicate of these foods, should have especial care in cooking. When we speak of eggs as boiled hard or soft, we do not mean boiled at all. Eggs will cook hard at 170 to 180 degrees, depending upon the length of time to which they have been subjected to the heat. Eggs to be cooked in the shell, if desired hard, should be placed in a saucepan, using one pint of boiling water for each egg that is of room temperature when put into the water; if taken from the ice chest, more boiling water will be needed to cook the egg. Cover closely and let stand on the back of the range or in a warm place for 30 minutes. The egg is then hard cooked, but the white will be tender and easily digested. If a soft-cooked egg of various softness is desired, remove at six, ten or twelve minutes. Once the principle is learned for cooking eggs in the shell it is learned for other forms. Low temperature, below the boiling point, is used for poached eggs. When cooking foods with eggs, place the dish in water, especially in the oven cooking. A successful meringue is one that expands by long slow cooking in the oven for 20 minutes in an oven of 250 to 300 degrees.

Ragout of Eggs.

Cook two cupfuls of mushrooms in three tablespoonfuls of butter, moisten a tablespoonful of flour with a little from a half-cupful of milk, add to the mushrooms, season with salt and paprika, add the remainder of the milk, a little grated onion. Cut six hard-cooked eggs into halves, removing the yolks. Place the whites on a hot platter hollow-side up. Fill the centers with the mushroom mixture, pour the remainder around the eggs. Put the yolks through a sieve and sprinkle over the mixture. Garnish with parsley.

Great Project Futile

The most monumental construction work of the Orient was a failure. It was the great Chinese wall, portions of which still stand undamaged by time. It extends 500 leagues, and is 45 feet in height and 18 in thickness—a most singular monument both of human industry and of human folly. The Tartars, against whom it was meant as a defense, found China equally accessible as before its formation. They were not at pains to attack and make a breach in this rampart which, from the impossibility of defending such a stretch of fortification, must have been exceedingly easy; they had only to travel a little to the eastward, to about 40 degrees of latitude, where China was totally defenseless.

Woman's Viewpoint, as One of Sex Sees It

It is woman's common falling now to take love too seriously and marriage too casually. She would be far better off if she reversed the procedure.

The American girl is the victim of her pretty and well-nursed delusions. She believes that when romance fades out of marriage the marriage itself should be dissolved, because she fools herself into thinking that romance and love are one. Nothing could be more fatal for her personal security, for her happiness, for a contented old age or for society.

It was necessary, perhaps, that we go through a period of matrimonial experimentation. The rather abrupt departure from the idea of marriage as an eternally fixed institution causes us to fling ourselves to the other extreme. Hence we have survived an ugly time when fidelity, common sense and even ordinary decency have sunk to a low ebb. We are emerging from it more unhappy than before. The home is the root from which all our other institutions spring, and permanent marriage, regarded seriously by both men and women, is the soil that nurtures that root.—Mrs. Walter Ferguson, Woman's Editor, in the New York World-Telegram.

Big Changes Made on Face of Earth

1933 Sees Great Engineering Projects Under Way.

Washington.—Outstanding changes brought about on the face of the earth during 1933 by dynamite, steam shovels, picks and spades, riveting "guns," and concrete mixers are summarized in a bulletin from the National Geographic society dealing with the engineering accomplishments of the year. Owing to the pushing forward of public works in the United States and a number of other countries, in an effort to combat the economic depression, and to threats of war in other regions, the bulletin points out, more than the normal number of construction projects were under way in all parts of the world.

"Engineering activity was especially marked in highway construction," says the bulletin. "In the United States work progressed in all the states on more than 3,000 separate road-building projects financed with public works administration funds. For the most part, these projects represented relatively short stretches of road supplementing and improving existing highways.

"Two scenic highways of more than local interest were completed or brought close to completion: 'Going-to-the-Sun' highway in Glacier National park, and the 'Skyline Drive' along the crest of a section of the Blue Ridge mountains in Virginia.

Railways Shrink in U. S.

"While net railway mileage increased in 1933 on several continents, especially Asia, a much greater mileage was again abandoned in the United States than was built. Less than 50 miles of new track was laid in Uncle Sam's domains during the year, while more than 2,400 miles was abandoned.

"Railways were extended in Chile, Brazil, Peru, Uruguay, Argentina, and Colombia; in Spain and Italy; in French Morocco, Central, South, and East Africa; in Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, the Soviet Union, Poland, and Turkey; in China; and in Australia.

"One of the most important railway projects undertaken during 1933 was the double-tracking of the Trans-Siberian railroad.

"Greatest railway activity centered during the year in Manchuria and Korea, to central Manchuria.

"Famous Aswan dam across the Nile, 450 miles south of Cairo, had its second heightening job completed during the year. It will now impound more than five billion tons of water.

"The 20-mile dam across the Zuider Zee in the Netherlands, the last gap in which was closed in 1932, took final shape during 1933, and in September its top was officially opened to rail and highway traffic.

"After nearly three years of excavation and preparation of the Boulder dam site on the Colorado river, the first concrete was poured June 6. Two years will be required to pour the 5,500,000 barrels of concrete that will go into the structure.

"By means of a four-mile highway bridge, opened April 25, Venice became more closely connected with the mainland, and for the first time automobiles were driven to the edge of the island city.

150-Mile Canal in Russia.

"A new bridge across the Hudson at Albany was dedicated in January.

"Work was started on the two huge bridges in San Francisco which are to span San Francisco bay and the Golden Gate.

"The Soviet Union completed the most important artificial waterway of the year—the Baltic-White Sea canal extending for approximately 150 miles from Povenetz, on Lake Onega, to Soroka, on the White sea. It has 12 locks and 15 dams.

"At home, barge service between

New Orleans and Chicago, was formally inaugurated during the summer on the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway.

"Nineteen-thirty-three saw a considerable addition to the world's tunnels. In Japan the five-mile Tanna railway tunnel was completed after 16 years of work. In Chile, completion of the three-mile Las Raices tunnel gives a direct rail connection between southern Chile and southern Argentina. Spain completed a two-and-a-half-mile tunnel between Burgos and Madrid. In Africa, 'holing through' of the Mount Bomba tunnel removed the greatest rail-traffic obstacle between Brazzaville, French Equatorial Africa, and the Atlantic.

"Subways were extended in three of the great cities of the world: New York, London, and Paris; and opened

Wilson is conducting a training school for the cubs.

The three youngest are Prince, Cleo, and Queenie. Their parents are Duke and Queen, long-time residents of the local animal park. Their older brother, Bozo, has missed considerable schooling because of a long siege of rheumatism. His cage mate, Buddy, has been awaiting his partner with whom he will take lessons in wrestling.

Wilson plans to teach Prince and Queenie to box.

"Queenie would make a fine fighting lion," said Wilson, "she'll trade blow for blow."

Where Little Victims Regain Health

More than half the physically handicapped of the country, variously estimated from 150,000 to 450,000, are crippled as a result of infantile paralysis and most of these victims could be benefited immeasurably by exercise in warm water of institutions like the Warm Springs Foundation for Infantile Paralysis. Here are shown several cheerful sufferers from the effects of this dread disease, who are happily recovering at Warm Springs, Ga. To help youthful victims such as those pictured above, a national committee of leaders from all walks of life plans for January 30, President Roosevelt's birthday, a series of balls in at least 5,000 communities in the country for the purpose of creating a permanent endowment for extension of the work at Warm Springs.

Good Samaritan Must Pay $3,000 to Injured Girl

Merced, Calif.—A Merced county constable's errand of mercy following an unusual accident recently resulted in a $3,000 damage judgment against him.

En route his automobile and two others collided and the injured girl was hurt additionally.

She sued Hulen and won a judgment.

14,200 Italian Settlers Take Up Reclaimed Land

Littoria, Italy.—Trainloads of peasants arrive here every month and thousands of these hardy farmhands start life afresh in this city, which was once the center of the now reclaimed Pontine marshes. Here, at least, there is no depression.

These rugged folk come from the most varied points of the peninsula and their one wish is to till the soil. The vast expanses of the reclaimed Pontine marshes today make their life dream come true.

Veteran farmers stand at attention and mechanically click their heels together before uttering a monosyllable. A good many lately have been coming from the Friuli region. Property is so subdivided and scarce there and so thickly populated that lots destined for farm-sharing often measure less than a hectare. Hence they become wanderers in search of work, almost gypsy-farmers. The Pontine experiment is curing the disease. Men are falling in love again with their soil, their plow and oxen.

It is the intention of Mr. Kalish to present the statue to Gen. Hugh Johnson, administrator of the NRA.

And, whenever a player is unable to fill out an evening during the series, he will be permitted, with the sanction of the committee, to engage a substitute to play for him, and the substitute's score will count for the original player.

Each team's opponent hereafter will be drawn by lot from a hat, so that the one each will play against will not be known until the drawing is made each night of play. It is felt by the committee that this arrangement will add zest and interest to each night's game, and give an atmosphere of pleasant uncertainty to the contests as they develop.

The lunches served by the Misses Lois Doak and Oka Millard at the hall proved to be very tasty and at the numerous requests made by the various contestants they will be continued for the duration of the tournament under the same management.

Enrollments for the tournament will close Monday night. If new entrants will leave their names with any member of the committee in charge it will eliminate unnecessary confusion in drawing for opponents at the last moment.

Below are given the standings for last Tuesday night's play. These will appear each week in this paper.

Postage Stamp History

A revolutionary reform came in 1843 when postage stamps were officially adopted by the cantonal government at Zurich, Switzerland, the first philatelic issues of the Continent. On March 3, 1847, the United States Post Office department secured congressional permission to issue stamps. Two denominations were placed on sale: five and ten cent values representing Franklin and Washington, respectively. A new series appeared in 1851 and stamped envelopes for letters was introduced March 3, 1853.

Aged Letters in Door

Business letters mailed during the nineteenth century, some 64, 65 and 67 years ago, were found in an old-fashioned double-panneled front door when workmen removed it from offices in Manchester, England, recently. The missives had lodged in the space between the panels, behind which was the letter box. They were addressed to H. Barbour & Company, a thread company, which was merged with another firm many years ago.

A NEW SERIAL

Mulberry Square

By LIDA LARRIMORE

Hazel eyes, chestnut hair that dipped in a peak on her forehead, brownish skin with pink undertone, a wide, gay, gorgeous smile; too small ever to be queenly or wear a bridesmaid's hat . . . that was JANIE BALLARD who loved MULBERRY SQUARE, even though time and change had taken away some of its charm.

Lovely, fragile as a lily, delicate and beautiful—that was CELIA, JANIE'S sister, who hated MULBERRY SQUARE, who wanted to escape, drift about the world, to Paris, London, the Riviera . . .

Then HUGH KENNEDY came to the SQUARE to be Dr. Ballard's assistant. "JANIE noticed his hair first of all—it seemed to match the sunlight; she had an impression of broad tweed shoulders, brown eyes, sunburn, a square sort of chin." In that instant JANIE instinctively realized what HUGH might some day mean to her. But CELIA wanted him, CELIA who had always gotten what she wanted. And HUGH believed in her, believed in some hidden, lovely quality that stirred his imagination and set him dreaming dreams.

Into this tangle of bright young lives came tragedy, but in its wake there came to these four a new, and true, perspective, which enabled each to find for himself and herself a happiness that none of them had scarce dared to picture—even to themselves.

"Mulberry Square" is to be our next serial. It is a story, the reading of which will bring pleasure to every reader. A real, outstanding serial that we are fortunate in being able to secure.
