Tawas Township Farmer Dubs It "Headache

"Headache tax," as Henry Anschuetz names it in a letter to the Tawas Herald, or an "honor tax," as christened in a more favorable communication from "J. E. C." everyone has a very decided opinion about the new old age pension tax

A discussion of this tax may be heard on any street corner. Some would pension all citizens above the age of 70 years. Others think that $3,500.00 is too high for the property limitation of the pensioner, as made in the new law, and that too many would be slightly Mony de not find. would be eligible. LIDA LARRIMORE

Part One

CHAPTER I -1-

"There were four mulberry trees. They grew around the fountain in the center of the Square. Their leaves were rough and heart-shaped and when it was ripe the purple fruit dropped of its own accord into the grass. The . . ."

"Janie!" That was Mother calling from downstairs. Janie sat very still and almost held her breath. If she didn't answer, perhaps Mother would think she had gone out somewhere. She smiled, thinking how, at nineteen, the subterfuges of her childhood still clung. Silence! No sound but the wind in the locusts and a hand-organ playing in the Square . . . wild Irish rose, The sweetest flower that grows" . . . No sound from Mother. Janie drew a long deep breath and dipped her pen in the ink

"The mulberry trees were very old. There was a legend about them. One of the early settlers, a certain Sir Godfrey Ballard, from whom our family is descended-"

That sounded like bragging. If it was accepted, Professor Vail might read it aloud to the class. Every one would think she was putting on airs. Janie drew her pen through the clause and continued.

"-brought them from his English garden to grow in the virgin soil of New Kingston, then a tiny settlement on the banks of the Delaware."

Janie's eyes, hazel eyes, spaced wide apart under brows like slender wings, lifted from the "theme," strayed out through the window and down into the Square. Little girls were playing house under the mulberry trees as she and Celia and Muriel had played there a very long time ago. Janie and Celia and Muriel . . . Cleaner than the little girls who played there now. Starched white petticoats, sashes. slippers tied with bows. Muriel's governess watching them from a nearby bench. Joseph bringing the pony cart. Janie and Celia and Muriel. Sailing boats in the fountain . . .

Mother again. Another interval of waiting. Another long sigh of relief. Janie's attention returned to the

"It is said-" She crossed that out and substituted-"Sir Godfrey Ballard, so runs the legend, grew them from cuttings taken from a mulberry tree in Shakespeare's garden at Stratford." There. That should make an impression on Professor Vail. Perhaps it was true. . . .

How fragrant the locust blossoms were! Like lilies on Easter Sunday. It must be dull for Celia at the shore vith Great-aunt Rose. Lovely to nell the ocean, though and watch the aves curve up in scallops on the ind. Lilies made you think of Celia. thite and gold. "Little Saint Celia!" Rats! . . .

"JANIE!" Very loud this time. Coming closer. Footsteps climbing the third floor stairs. Janie began to scribble with furious haste . . . "Rats-Rats-Rats. Three blind mice. See how they run" . . . Shingled brown head bent over the table. Jaws set. Forehead wrinkled into a frown. Ink on her nose and her fingertips. A lady absorbed in literary efforts and lost to the world outside.

Mother opened the door. "Janie!" she said reproachfully. "I've called you half a dozen times.

What in the world are you doing?" "Writing a theme. If it's good enough, I may get into Professor Vail's short-story class next year." "That's splendid, dear." The reproach changed into enthusiasm. Mother wanted Janie to write. Since she wasn't pretty like Celia, she had to do something of the kind. "What is the topic?" Mother was beaming. "What are you writing about?" "The Square." "Well for Heaven's sake!" Mother no longer was beaming. "I should think you could find a more interesting subject than that."

Janie's enthusiasm wilted like a pricked balloon. You couldn't make Mother understand. She hated the Square now that everybody who mattered at all had moved out to Manor street and Delaware Heights. Well, rather would understand. Janie rightened a little. She would tell

m about it tonight . . . "Going somewhere?" she asked, noicing that Mother wore her secondest hat with roses around the brim. 'I want to get the material for lelia's dress." Mother was drawing n white silk gloves a little yellowed rom washing. "The sample was in er letter. That's why I called you. lo you know where it is?"

"Here, I think." Janie pulled open and drawer of her writing table. Yes, e it was. Cella's dainty handwrit-An a hotel envelope . . . Haddon . That was a pretty name Dorothy Vernon of Haddon In England they made but of apples mixed with mul-

Janie produced the precious scrap and Mother tucked it inside her bag. "It's probably all gone now," she said with a plaintive sigh. "Such a lovely shade of lilac!"

Janie smiled to herself. Mother always worried about things like that. She was sure the cream was sour before she tasted it, that the pipes would burst next winter and that every unopened letter contained distressing news. It was remarkable, she thought, hat Mother had managed to keep her youthful prettiness in spite of such mountains of worry. She was plump, in a dainty fashion, and not much taller than Janie. Her skin was smooth and fair. There were few threads of gray in her wavy light brown hair. Her eyes were the high lovely blue of a picture post card lake and seldom shadowed with real anxiety. Worrying, with Mother, Janie decided, was merely a habit, like putting on your left stocking first and picking up pins in the street. "I hate to walk up town." Mother was looking at herself in Janie's mirror. "The sun is so hot."

"Don't go then," Janie advised . . No, Mother didn't worry inside. She was preening herself like a pretty pigeon . . .

"But I promised Celia I'd send her another dress."

"She isn't exactly in rags and tatters." Janie remembered the bags and the shiny new hat box. "She should be able to manage."

"You don't understand, dear." Mother's blue eyes were reproachful. "Celia is sensitive. She can't take too many favors from dear Aunt Rose."

"Rats!" said Janie-but not out

"It's hard for her to be dependent." Mother powdered her nose. "And she's always so brave about it. Celia." she added tenderly, "has a beautiful disposition."

Janie made no comment. Celia's courage was a family myth. So was her sweet disposition. There were other myths about Celia. Celia was delicate. Celia was a martyr to circumstances. Celia, in a setting more glamorous than Mulberry Square, could marry anyone she pleased. Mother believed all the Celia myths. Useless to argue. It only provoked a scene. Janie changed the subject. "There are some French silk flowers in Leland's window marked less than half price," she said. "You wanted one for Celia's dress."

Mother remembered her errands up-

"It is hot, isn't it?" She picked up her bag and her flowered silk parasol. "I hate the belt-line trolley. If only I had a car of my own."

"I'll go for you," Janie o "No, thank you, dear." Mother's tone indicated that the mission was too important to be entrusted to Janie. "There's a sale at Allen's, I might be able to pick up something or other." Janie did not insist. Mother, she knew, liked shopping and sales. In the stores she was almost sure to meet somebody who would tell her how clever she was to make Celia's dresses or how pretty Celia looked at the last club dance. Mother liked that. She wore such bits of praise like medals pinned on her chest.

"There are wicker porch sets in the sale at Allen's. Goodness knows we need one." Mother considered a moment, her lower lip caught in her teeth. "I might get it on installments."

"Father hates installments," Janie reminded her. "You promised him, Mother."

"Father has no idea how dreadful it is to be shabby." Mother's voice was sharp. "Sometimes I think he doesn't care about us at all."

Janie set her lips. She adored Father. It was hard to hear Mother pick at him without flaming to his defense. But what was the use? There were myths about Father which Mother also firmly believed. Father might have been a famous surgeon. in Mulberry Square. Father cared more about the foreigners and the Father was foolish to bury himself poor white trash in Vine and Juniper streets than he did for his own dear children. Mother believed those things. No use to argue. Nothing to do but change the subject again.

"The forget-me-nots were darling." she said. "I think Celia would like them best."

"They'll probably be gone by the time I get there," Mother said merely from force of habit. "Help Rachel with dinner, Janie, if I'm not back by five. This is her lodge meeting night. She's as cross as a bundle of Mother disappeared in a flutter of flowered voile. Her slim high heels tapped sharply on the stairs. A scent of violet perfume lingered for a moment on the air, grew fainter, vanished completely. Presently the front door closed. Janie looked down from the window. The afternoon was a little spoiled. She lost her interest in the 'theme," and sat looking down into the Square. It was dingy and down at the heel. The benches, shaded by locust and maple trees, needed a coat of new green paint very badly. The men with their lantern-top hats askew. Once it had been lovely . . . Janie and Celia and Muriel . . . Muriel would be coming back soon. She'd probably be too grand to remember her poor relations in Mulberry Square . .

Janie crossed to the mirror. Strange that people always called her "plain." Horrid word! She wasn't really so bad. Eyes sort of nice. Chestnut hair that dipped in a peak on her forehead. Brownish skin with pink underneath. Sort of solemn looking. But she did have a lovely smile. Everybody said that. Too small ever to be queenly or wear a bridesmaid's hat. Not so bad though. Only Celia was so beautibe beautiful. Pleasant to know you can marry anybody you please . "Bobby Shaftoe's gone to sea. Silver buckles on his knee" . . . Now what made her think of that? It didn't matter any longer. She was nineteen years old and grown up past "Mother Goose." Celia was twenty-one. She would marry somebody pretty soon. Maybe then . . . "Janie!"

That was Father!

"Thank you, dear." Father was washing his hands at the bowl in the office. "Did you mind very much?"

"No." That was a fib. Janie's knees were shaking. Her stomach felt empty and queer. The smell of ether always made her sick. But her hand had been steady. Father didn't know. "Will he be all right?" Poor Tony Silver. Beads of sweat on his forehead . . .

"Of course. If he doesn't try to walk on it." Father was packing fresh rolls of gauze into his bag. "I suppose though," he added, "you can't afford the luxury of a broken leg if you have ten children to feed."

"Are you going out again?" Father's eyes were tired. He ought not to work so hard. His shoulders were stooped and his hair was almost entirely white. He looked twenty years older than Mother instead of only just ten. "Why don't you stay home and rest?"

"Can't, baby." He paused on his way to the door and put his arm around Janie. "I appreciate your helping me out. Feel in my pocket," he Janie found a paper bag and investigated its contents.

"Gum drops!" A lump crept into her throat. Father was never too busy to remember the things that she

"So long as you stick to gum drops." He tilted her chin and smiled down into her eyes. "When your taste turns to French bon-bons, you'll have to find a wealthier beau."

"I'll always love you best." "Nonsense. You don't mean that." His voice was very gentle. "But I like to hear it, of course. Now off with you and your gum drops. I've got to be on my way."

The office door closed. Outside a car spluttered and rattled into motion. Janie walked from the office into the hall, through the living room and out on the shady side porch. She felt better now. The fragrance of mockorange blossoms banished the ether smell. She lay in the hammock propped up against a heap of cushions. There was a book on the bamboo table. She opened it and began to read. Worries forgotten, Janie read on and on.

Presently the words seemed jumbled and confused. Janie's eyelias began to droop. Janie's lashes fluttered down against her cheeks. She sighed softly and slipped over the border into the drowsy country of dreams. Footsteps aroused her, how much later she did not know. Janie's eyethem required a tremendous effor-She decided just to wait. The footsteps came nearer, halted for a moment, seemed to be walking towards her up to the side porch steps. A voice said, "Good afternoon.

It was a man's voice, low and pleasant and ever so faintly amused. Moreover, it was entirely unfamiliar. Janie

A young man was standing on the top porch step holding his hat in his hands. Her first impression was a sleepy jumble of broad tweed shoulders, brown eyes, sunburn, a nose that was just a nose, a wide mouth, a square sort of chin and a goldenbrown necktie that looked expensive. Janie jerked up from the cushions. "This is Doctor Ballard's residence, isn't it?" he asked. Janie nodded.

"Is the doctor at home?"

"Not now," she answered, "and the office door is around at the other "I'm not a patient." He smiled down at the small grave person in the hammock. Her hair was tousled. Her cheeks were flushed. She looked, though she did not know it, very sleepy and cross and just about twelve years old. "I'm Hugh Kennedy," he said, as though the name might serve as a passport into any small person's esteem. It did. Janie glanced with new interest at this smiling young man. "Oh," she said. "You're Father's legacy."

"You might call me that, I suppose." He continued to smile. It crinkled his eyes and made them friendly. Janie approved of his eyes.

"We do," she confessed. "Just in the family, of course." "I wrote Doctor Ballard. Doesn't he expect me?"

"Father is careless about letters," Janie explained. "It's probably in on his office desk under a book about bones and a couple of bills from the plumber. Sit down," she added, remembering her manners. "Thank you." He settled himself into a rocker beside the hammock. "Are you Doctor Ballard's little girl?"

"I'm Janie," she answered, "and almost entirely grown up." "How grown up? Older than twelve and a half?" "I'm a Moral Influence," she said to impress this smiling young man. "I keep little boys from breaking windows and shooting craps. I'm the assistant director of the community play-

"I beg your pardon," he apologized.

"I thought you were a child."

"People do." Janie sighed plaintively. "I had to produce a birth certificate before they would give me the playground job even though I've lived here all my life. And the policeman down there is always getting me mixed up with the urchins. It makes life very difficult."

He laughed at that. His teeth were even and very white. Viewed singly, as they emerged from the sleepy jumble, his features were not unattractive. His hair, Janie decided, just escaped being red. His mouth quirked humorously at the corners. He wasn't exactly handsome but he looked like somebody it would be pleasant to know. She began to enjoy herself. She was so seldom permitted to occupy the center of the stage. Celia saw to that. But Celia, thanks to dear Aunt Rose, was safely out of the way. Janie became expansive.

"Actually meeting you," she said, "is like seeing the prince of Wales or Billy Sunday or- You know, somebody you've heard of all your life but never expected to behold with your very own eyes. Father never told us much, except that your father had asked him to let you work here as his assistant when you finished at the hospital. And then later there was a letter from a lawyer in New York."

"It's legal all right," he said a bit grimly. "My sister Louise did her best but it wasn't any use. She wept over me as though I had been sentenced to prison."

Janie bridled.

"New Kingston isn't as bad as that. Or even Mulberry Square."

"I'm sure it isn't." He shrugged his shoulders. "Anyway, I'm here to stay for a year." "Father needs somebody," Janie said gravely. "He works too hard all the time." "He's splendid." Young Doctor Kennedy's voice sounded warm and sincere. "He came for commencement when I graduated from Jeff. He and my dad were classmates, you know. Dad was pretty fine, too. He died eight years ago. I never knew exactly why he wanted me to come here except that he admired Doctor Ballard and always said he was a credit to the profession."

Janie fairly glowed. Praise for Father made her feel happy inside. Her liking for Father's young doctor increased with a sudden bound. His eyes were the color of sherry wine. Red hair meant a temper, perhaps, and the thrust of his chin was stubborn. That was all right. Janie had no respect for people who acted like lids were weighted with lead. Lifting | door mats. He looked expensive—his shoes, his Panama hat, the goldenbrown necktie knotted in a careless but knowing fashion . . "Well, what have you decided about me? he asked with a crinkly smile. Janie was conscious of the fact that she had been staring. A warm pink flush stailed her cheeks. "Tell me, he urged.

"Some tine, maybe," she compromised. "Wen I've found out if am right. Yu'll stay for dinner, of course." Janie borrowed the voice that Mother used when she wanted to be especially gracious. "I'll speak to the cook." "You weren't expecting me," he objected. "I'd better find a 'ptel." "It will be all right." anie fervently hoped that she was teling the truth. "We'll just set another pace." "Thank you." He settled back in the rocker. "Excuse me for just a minute."

Janie rose intending to make a graceful and dignified exit. The gum drops prevented that. Brushed by her skirt, the paper sack opened and sent them rattling down to the floor. Impossible to be dignified surrounded by scurrying gum drops, tiny ones, pink and yellow and green. If they had been bon-bons she wouldn't have minded so much. But gum drops were childish. Janie felt as though she had been caught stealing jam.

She looked up from the gum drops to Father's young doctor. He was smiling. Not making fun, she was grateful to him for that, but smiling the way you would smile at a child you rather liked. Janie smiled, too. Straight up into his startled eyes she smiled her wide gay gorgeous smile that every one said was lovely.

"Whew!" The exclamation was a long whistling sound of surprise. "What happened? What did that?" "I smiled," Janie explained and felt foolish a moment afterwards. "Was that it?" His voice sounded bewildered. "I thought somebody had turned on a moon. Do you do it often?"

"Not very."

"You should." He looked at her as though he hadn't seen her before. "It's a marvelous smile. Why did you do it then?"

"I was thinking," Janie confessed, "that whenever I try to be dignified, I only succeed in acting exactly like-

She knew he was watching her as she crossed to open the door. She prayed that she wouldn't trip over the sill. Her prayer was answered. She

The kitchen of the old brick house was ruled by a grumpy queen. Rachel was a fat elderly colored woman who had lived with the Ballards since Janie was a baby. She was devoted to all of them though you would never have guessed it from her grumpy complaining manner. Rachel was a pearl beyond price but Rachel was also a tyrant.

When Janie entered the kitchen, she was paring potatoes.

"What are we having for dinner?" Rachel glanced up. The goldbrimmed spectacles, which were the pride of her heart, gave her the look of a plump and indignant brown owl. "Hash," she answered briefly, "and het over apple dumplin's." "We're having company, Rachel." Rachel was not concerned. Janle explored the ice box.

"Here's tomorrow's chicken," she called back over her shoulder. "You can fry it and make some tea cakes." "What yo' maw gwine say if there's nothin' but bones fo' Sunday dinnah?"

Rachel grumpily inquired. "Mother won't care. Please, Rachel darling."

"You go set the table." Rachel lumbered over to the ice box and lowered herself with a grunt.

"You're a darling!" Janie embraced Rachel, the chicken and a bunch of asparagus with equal and ardent "Go on wid you!" Rachel gave Janie a gentle shove. "How Ah'm gwine make any progress wid you clamped tight to mah neck? Jest you set de table pretty whilst Ah th'ow dis bird in de pan."

Before she set the table with Grandmother Ballard's silver and what was left of the rose-spray china, Janie did a curious thing. She walked into the living room and took from the shelf of the old-fashioned square piano a photograph of Celia. It was a beautiful photograph, expensively framed in silver. Janie studied it thoughtfully. Celia was lovely. The light shining through her hair gave her an ethereal look. You thought of a Christmas card angel. You thought of a porcelain saint in a silver niche . . .

For a moment she hesitated. Her hand moved to replace the photograph. She changed her mind. With a small bronze ornament she shattered the glass in the silver frame. Then she carried it out into the hall closet, wrapped it in a raincoat and burled it under a pile of old galoshes. Janie was honest and hated deceit; but Janie was only human. (TO BE CONTINUED.)

VAST CEMETERY Face Full of Pimples IS WAR MUSEUM

Impressive Remembrances of Italian Valor.

Caporetto!

Those who are old enough to remember the October of 1917 recall the great retreat of the Italian army through Caporetto to the Piave river. Under the direction of the German high command, the Austrians attacked the Italians over a wide front "beyond the Alps" with such vigor that resistance was for a time impossible. The retreat quickly assumed the proportions of disaster. Britain and France, themselves sorely pressed, had no other alternative than to rush reinforcements to the Italian front.

Just when it seemed that Italy would be put out of the war, her soldiers and her allies made a stand at the Piave river. Italy was saved and the allied cause did not suffer the calamity which threatened. The Globe has gathered a collection of pictures taken in a war cemetery at Redipuglia, Italy, near Montfaucone (not Montfaucon, France, near which is the American cemetery at Romagne). The unusual thing about the Italian cemetery (which is the final resting place of 30,000 soldiers, of whom only 5,800 were identified before burial) is that it also is an impressve war museum. The markers are male of things military, the debris from many battlefields.

One of the pictures shows the graves f a father and son. Beneath the photgraph appears verse, which, freely traslated, reads:

Look t my breast, Father.
Are yo' glad?
Albert, nore now I feel I Am your father:
But yourpoor mother Is left aloe. Another moher, Italy, Will Console her.

Over the grave of one is set up a shielded machine gh taken from the field of battle to Jark the place where a soldier lies. Above the mound that shrouds theother stands a cross, fashioned also from war relics-shell-casings.

Throughout this memoria book there are scattered pictures smilar to the one shown and described ere. The cemetery at Redipuglia is mo than a burial ground, it is a national shrine.—Boston Globe.

Could Not Go Anywhere

Healed by Cuticura

"My face was full of hard, red pimples. My skin was very sore and red and I could not go anywhere without everybody looking at me. The pimples were very itchy and I scratched them until they bled. I lost my night's sleep so many times I was disgusted.

"I tried different things, but without success. I happened to see an advertisement for Cuticura Soap and Ointment and sent for a free sample. I bought more and after I had used three cakes of Cuticura Soap and two boxes of Cuticura Ointment my face was completely healed." (Signed) Miss Anna Krouchick, 430 Emmett St., Scranton, Pa.

Doctors Give Creosote For Chest Colds

For many years our best doctors have prescribed creosote in some form for coughs, colds and bronchitis, knowing how dangerous it is to let them hang on.

Creomulsion with creosote and six other highly important medicinal elements, quickly and effectively stops coughs and colds that otherwise might lead to serious trouble.

Creomulsion is powerful in the treatment of colds and coughs, yet it is absolutely harmless and is pleasant and easy to take. Your own druggist guarantees

Creomulsion by refunding your money if you are not relieved after taking Creomulsion as directed. Beware the cough or cold that hangs on. Always keep Creomulsion on hand for instant use. (adv.)

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

N SPITE of man's destruction of forests and building of great cities, the face of nature has changed but little along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts of North America.

A number of large or otherwise noteworthy species of wild animals originally here have disappeared, but these were of kinds apparently unfitted to survive in a populous country. Among them may be mentioned the bison and the elk, which once roamed the eastern forests, and the wolves and cougars which preyed upon them and other wild things. In addition, among the birds, the great auk, the Labrador duck, the heath hen, passenger pigeon, and parrakeet have vanished.

As against this there is a marked renewal of forests in progress and large numbers of species of wild creatures have adapted themselves to share their world with civilized man. Moose and caribou hold their own in some of the wilder places, and the white-tailed deer is probably more numerous than at any previous time in its history. Each yearly hunting season, within a radius of 300 miles of New York city, sportsmen take more than 40,000 of these deer. In Pennsylvania their increase has been so great that the entire stock of deer has been threatened with starvation, owing to lack of sufficient forage.

Probably the total number of small birds now is vastly greater than existed in the day of the Pilgrim Fathers, owing to the increase of food available on farms and in secondgrowth forests. Millions of migratory wild fowl continue to troop southward every fall to winter in the coastal waterways and marshes.

Many small creatures of field and forest have developed such an insight into man and his ways that they outwit him at times when their interests conflict. Cottontail, swamp and snowshoe rabbits, squirrels, muskrats, beaver, mink, otter, raccoons, bobcats and other small mammals, and even the black bear, are common in many places. Doves, wild turkeys, ruffed grouse, and bobwhites continue to lead the hunter afield.

Tropical Beasts and Birds.

So far we have had to do only with the creatures of more northern latitudes, but within our southern limits come such tropical beasts as the jaguar, ocelot, jaguar-undi cat, coatimundi, peccary, and prehensile-tailed porcupine, with parrots and other strange birds and a very different plant life, that make a new world to the northern visitor,

With so much of the original capital in wild life to go on, it is specially pleasing to note the great awakening that has taken place among the people of the United States during the last twenty years in their recognition of the value of wild life as a great national asset that must be maintained and perpetuated. This change from comparative indifference has come as the direct result of an educational campaign conducted for years by many organizations.

The survival of so much wild life along the eastern coast and its bordering hinterland is due largely to this region's physical characteristics. To the north, in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Maine, are vast, thinly peopled, forested areas abounding in streams and lakes. There travel is still so largely by rough roads and small boats that conditions remain favorable to wild life. The rock-bound coast and outlying islets also provide homes for countless sea birds, just as do similar conditions on the shores of the North Pacific.

Beginning near the mouth of the Hudson, a great coastal plain extends southward to eastern Mexico. To the north it begins with a width of only a few miles, broadening to from 100 to 250 miles in places, until it narrows again near Tampico. In this entire distance there are no outcroppings of metamorphic rocks and apparently none of sedimentary formation except the coquinas of Florida. Long stretches of this plain are fronted by sand beaches penetrated here and there by bays, sounds, inlets, and the mouths of rivers. Back of the exposed beaches lie many great marsh areas and shallow bays, with numberless sand bars, low islands, and mud

Fine for the Water Fowl.

In such places thrive aquatic plants with myriads of fish, crustaceans, and other food which in winter sustain millions of swans, geese, ducks, gulls, waders, and other wild fowl,

Washing for Ten Took Two Days -until she tried Oxydol

"Washing used to take all day Monday to do, and all day Tuesday to get over. But -by doing all the heavy work in washing for a family of ten, by making my clothes beautifully clean without effort, by making them so much easier to rinse and iron - Oxydol has given me back two brand-new days a week!"

THE amazing new discovery of the world's most famous soap experts, the makers of Ivory-this new and improved OxydoL does these things no other soap can do or has

(1) Soaks clothes clean in 15 minutes. Without boiling, without back-breaking rubbing. Hence—cuts washing time 25% to 40% in tub or machine, saving hours of labor. (2) Gets clothes 4 to 5 shades WHITER, by scientific Tintometer test, than other soaps. Whiter in ONE washing than ANY other soap can get them in TWO to FOUR washings!

(3) Yet, due to the special mild protective elements it contains, it neither fades nor injures color or fabric. Even cotton prints and children's dainty frocks are safe. And—it's so kind to hands that you're amazed at its power to

Thick 3-inch Suds in Any Water

OXYDOL is specially fitted to water conditions in each district where it's sold. The OXYDOL you get here already contains just the right amount of water-softener to fit the water you use. You can see the results in the suds. OXYDOL multiplies 500 TIMES in suds! Makes rich 3-inch suds in any water, hard or soft! And OXYDOL is economical. By actual test, a regular 25c package will do the work of 8 to 10 cakes of bar soap or 2 to 3 times as much flakes!

GET YOUR SEPARATOR NOW!

Then Start Easy Payments March 1st

To help cream producers who are badly in need of new Separators we are making an unusual offer.

We are authorized to extend terms to you so that you can get your new DeLaval Separator NOW, for a small down payment; and then use it without a cent of cost until March 1st, when you start easy payments. And these payments are easy, as little as $1.00 a week---so that the separator will pay for itself.

No one can afford to use a badly worn, cream-wasting separator or lose butterfat by wasteful hand skimming, when a new cream-saving DeLaval can be bought on such easy terms.

There never was a time in the 56 years of DeLaval leadership when users could obtain so much value as in the DeLaval of today. There are four complete series to choose from, providing 17 different styles and sizes for every need and purse.

In skimming efficiency, ease of operation, length of life, beauty of design and finish, nothing can compare with a DeLaval.

To Erect Bronze Statue of Noted Explorer.

Washington.—David Livingstone will be honored soon by a bronze statue to be erected in Victoria Falls Park, Southern Rhodesia, beside the great waterfall which he discovered in 1855.

The noted explorer and missionary s depicted with cane in one hand, Bible in the other, and field glasses at his side. The statue will be placed so that it constantly will be bathed with mist and spray from the roaring waterfall below.

"Victoria falls is the most famous scenic attraction and one of the most unusual geographical features of the continent of Africa," says a bulletin from the National Geographic society. "Geographers consider it one of the three greatest waterfalls in the world, rivaled only by Niagara in North America and Iguazu in South America. Although a score of other waterfalls excel it in height, Victoria possesses many aspects which at once set it apart.

Lacks Majesty of Niagara.
"From immemorial times an atmosphere of mystery and superstition has hung over these African falls. Livingstone had the greatest difficulty in persuading his followers to accompany him, as they believed the region to be the home of monsters and devils of destruction. Vestiges of these traditions still exist, although the Capeto-Cairo railroad, which crosses the river less than half a mile below the falls, is rapidly dispelling them.

"Notwithstanding the magnitude of Victoria falls, the first view of them is disappointing. Although they are nearly a mile in width and 400 feet in height, the grandeur of their proportions is eclipsed by the sudden disappearance of the river, as it plunges into a narrow, rocky fissure extending across its entire width. Only at a single central point is there a breach in this fissure through which the falls can be seen and appreciated in their full proportions, where the converging waters rush madly to the zigzag canyon below.

"So restricted is this view that there is an entire absence of that aweinspiring and almost paralyzing effect which strikes the visitor dumb with wonder and amazement when Niagara

Huge Quantities of Gas Wasted in Texas Fields

Houston, Texas.-Enough natural gas goes to waste each day in the East Texas oil field to supply fuel for Cleveland and New Orleans.

The computations were made from oil men's estimates that approximately 100,000,000 cubic feet of gas is burned daily in flares lighted near producing oil wells. The gas, after forcing the oil from the well, is piped off to the side and burned as a safety and a health measure.

Often many wells are linked in a network of pipes that carry the gas to a central point where it burns in a continuous flame.

From approximations it was computed the wasted gas would supply fuel for the average daily demand of a city of about 1,700,000 population.

Texas' five largest cities, Houston, Dallas, San Antonio, Fort Worth and El Paso, have a combined population of 1,058,000. Toss in ten cities the size of Galveston and gas burners in all of them could be lighted with the waste fuel from the East Texas wells.

At Beaumont, where approximately 2,000,000 cubic feet of gas is burned daily in flares in the surrounding district, efforts have been made to interest communities in laying pipelines to the fields and bargain for waste gas to be used for fuel.

Right of Teacher to Paddle Upheld

Lancaster, Pa.-The right of a school teacher to administer an old-fashioned paddling to unruly students was upheld recently by a jury in Quarter Sessions court when it acquitted Mrs. Ruth Weitzel, a country school teacher, of stand that the teacher "broke a paddle on me and bounced me up and down on the chair, hard.' Then schoolmates also testified. John was said to have become involved in a fight when he attempted to separate two other youths who were fighting.

A walk of half a mile brings one to the 'place where the rain is born,' as the natives call the Rain forest. This is a phenomenon of rare beauty and interest, especially to the botanist, for here the tropic heat and constantly falling spray produce a wealth of vegetation of wonderful luxuriance and variety.

"But the most thrilling scene is from the eastern extremity of the Rain forest at Danger point, where the treacherous vines and grasses, clinging to the rocks with hungry, desperate roots, tempt one to the very verge of the precipitate cliffs that seem to tremble with the terrific shock of the cataract. So dense here at times is the mass of vapor hurled from the seething cauldron that the sun's rays can no longer penetrate it, and complete darkness envelops one as he is deluged by the downpour, while the terrific thunder of the falls drowns all other sounds and makes "As the rainy season commences in his own voice inaudible,"

London.-Scotland Yard had only one unsolved murder during 1933, a year which in all probability will be recorded as the most memorable in the history of the Metropolitan police

Although the policies of Lord Trenchard, commissioner of police, have been violently assailed and ridiculed in the press and by caricaturists, progress has been made with his unique schemes of reorganization.

The year saw the beginning of what will prove to be a complete reorganization of the whole Scotland Yard's administration.

But what has been of more international importance is its initiation of plans for closer co-operation between

She was named the country's No. 1 girl singles player in rankings recently announced by the United States Lawn Tennis association, which will be submitted for final approval at the annual United States Lawn Tennis association meeting in February. With Frances Herron of Los Angeles, Miss Miller also was ranked No. 1 in the girls' doubles. Miss Miller is eighteen, and has been playing four and a half years.

the detective forces of the Yard and its continental neighbors.

For the first time in history Scotland Yard officers flew to Amsterdam to meet and co-operate with officers from Belgium, France and Germany, and in so doing brought to justice a clever gang of international thieves.

The success of the idea was not confined to forgers. The whole ramification of international crime cussed, and a "working arrangement," in code, of course, was established. which provides the different police forces with a complete itinerary of international jewel thieves.

Throughout the year there were 21 murders, 15 of them occurring in the first half of the year.

Eleven other cases were those of murder and suicide. The remainder were mainly the murders of children, which aroused intense public feeling.

On one or two occasions during the year gunmen made their appearance, but their careers were brief and their sentences long, one receiving 14 years' penal servitude for shooting at a policeman.

Apart from actual crime, the greatest interest was in the alterations that took place within the force itself. Lord Trenchard continued the work begun by Lord Byng of "cleaning" the force, and during the year many officers, some of high rank, were dismissed from the force.

"Gold Capital of World" Comes Back to Life

THE historic mining town of Barkerville, B. C., is once again coming into its own. In the "boom" days of the 1860s, when the placer gold rush to the Cariboo area was at its height, it was known as the gold capital of the world, with a population once numbering as high as 15,000. Now it is coming back to life again as the latest rush for lode gold in the area is under way, and prospectors are crowding into the town that in late years has been nothing more than a ghost town with a population of a few hundred. THORNTON W. BURGESS JUMPING FOR LIFE

W HAT a person can do well he almost always enjoys doing. Nimbleheels, own cousin to Danny Meadow Mouse, is the very best jumper on the Green Meadows, so it is quite natural that he should enjoy jumping. He jumped and he jumped and he jumped for Peter Rabbit's benefit. Peter stole out from the dear old Brier Patch and sat up in the moonlight that he might watch Nimbleheels better. Such jumping Peter had never seen before, and both he and Nimbleheels became so interested that they quite forgot that it is never safe to play on the Green Meadows unless a sharp watch is kept for danger.

Suddenly a shadow swept over Peter. There wasn't a sound. Keen as are Peter's long ears he heard nothing. Luckily for him he was sitting absolutely still at the time. Had he moved the least tiny bit the end of Peter would have been right then and there, for that shadow was Hooty the ow at all until he shot up into the air above the tops of the grasses almost under Hooty. It is a question which was the most surprised, Nimbleheels or Hooty. Swiftly, but without a sound, Hooty turned in the air and Nimbleheels had no more than disappeared in the grass than Hooty was hovering right over it, his great eyes piercing down fiercely for a glimpse of the little Mouse he knew must be hiding among the grass stems right beneath him.

Peter sat quite still with horror, which was, perhaps, just as well for Peter. Could it be that the little friend with whom he had become so well acquainted was going to be snatched away in the cruel claws of Hooty

Suddenly Hooty screamed and at the sound out from the grass shot Nimbleheels in the longest jump Peter had yet seen him make. Hooty struck with his great curved claws, but he was too slow. As before, hardly had Nimbleheels landed in the grass than Hooty was hovering right over the very spot. Nimbleheels did not wait for him to scream but was in the air in another long jump almost as soon as he reached the ground. This time he jumped to the side instead of in the direction he had jumped before. Probably it was this that saved his life. Hooty was not ready for him in that direction and so he missed him

BEAUTY TALKS

MARJORIE DUNCAN

MASQUES AGAIN POPULAR

A FAMOUS French beautician, recently arrived in this country, tells me that masques are regaining popularity.

So I went to her hotel to learn what was new in masques. I was very much surprised to see a little bit of a box with small packages in it. "All ready, see," she said, "just to add an egg and use a white stocking, if we

It was all very interesting. The white stocking, she explained later, was optional, but she always liked using one, cutting out holes for the eyes and nostrils and then slip-stitching them very quickly so that they would not stretch out of place very much. This secures the masque if complete relaxation is desired or a nap possible. The latter she endorses very heartily. For the new wrinkles that come with frowning, scowling or fatigue, a masque is splendid to whisk them away. For that yellow, muddy look that follows temporary indisposition, fatigue or exposure, a masque is just the thing. For sluggish skin, it draws the circulation to the surface. It wards off perspiration, removes scarf-skin. A pink, healthy, glowing color should take the place of that heavy leaden look. For relaxed skin or muscles it is astringent but not too drying.

And here is the thing that intrigued me. The French woman of our story owns several salons in Europe, the Orient and this country. An experienced operator applies the masque, while the client lies back and relaxes luxuriously. "That is fine for those who have the money," as one of my readers wrote me recently. But as the creator of the mask said: "This, what you call depression, it is in our country as well as yours and we too serve ourselves and save."

The masque works in very nicely after our cleansing step, and the rest of the treatment remains quite the

If you are troubled with broken veins you should not apply excessive heat or cold to these areas. Use the most soothing of creams and do not use strong astringents to such spots.

The care of the skin is a simple thing if you use intelligence and the best of cosmetics. Don't buy things only because they are cheap or only because they are expensive. Find out whether or not they are good for you.

BE YOURSELF!

WHEN Peggy was five years old, she promised to be an individual. She had definite ideas as to the colors she liked best, the way she wished her hair cut, the length of her socks and so on. What Sister Jane or Cousin Helen chose didn't matter. "Why must I do what they do, or wear what they wear?" she would say.

As she grew older, more and more people would say: "There's a person, interesting, individual."

Very suddenly something happened. Some one made the mistake of telling Peggy that she looked very much like one of the prominent screen stars. And Peggy was sixteen then, and self-conscious. She started an intensive campaign of imitation. As the screen star was reported to wear her hair, Peggy wore it.

From another source Peggy learned that her luminary liked extreme gowns, which was all very well for the screen star, but quite otherwise for young

The subject of our sermon spent more time studying her idol than she devoted to her school. The soap the screen star used, the lipstick she chose, the powder she preferred, the style of her gowns, the arrangement of her hair; all these Peggy not only knew, but imitated.

Study your own possibilities, not your neighbor's or your screen star's. It is fine to imitate a shining example of loveliness, but be sure that type and circumstances are sufficiently similar and that a full measure of success may be expected.

What if platinum blond or reddish auburn is the trend; your raven locks are an outstanding feature with you. Play up the color. Be different, Be yourself. Standardization is beauty's destruction. If you are one of the few individuals who look strikingly smart with straight hair, refuse to curl. One can look smart without looking old-fashioned; one can be individual without being eccentric. Study your own skin, your own figure, your own coloring and let your own needs decide what preparations, what exercises, what make-up you should use. Emerge a successful and beautiful "original" instead of a poor, ludicrous "carbon copy."

Don't rub your powder on-it causes enlarged pores and grinds small particles into your skin. Nobody should be afraid of soap on the face-does anybody take a bath without soap? Even dry faces need it,

The skin is an important factor in feminine charm. This must definitely be on the asset side for a woman to really look her loveliest. pieces "in the low round," some are plaques in bas-relief, some are silhouettes or "pierced work," and others pieces and several thousand other fragments found were originally mortized into the throne, tables, couches and cabinets of Ahab's palace, and perhaps also in friezes and panelings for the walls. Some are richly overlaid with gold or inset with lapis lazuli and other colored substances.

The discovery of the Samarian ivories has helped students of biblical history approach many problems which long have vexed them.

Ahab, Doctor Lake states, was one of the strongest rulers of Israel. Through his marriage with Jezebel, he allied his kingdom with Phoenicia, the great trading nation of the Mediterranean, and thus made possible the introduction of new luxuries and new customs to the near East.

Among the foreign importations for which Jezebel was largely responsible was the worship of Baal. The queen brought with her 450 priests of Baal and each day, according to legend, she and Ahab brought their weight in gold to sacrifice before the idol.

It was this sacrilege and extravagance, with its attendant corruption and exploitation of the people, which finally stirred the Israelites to revolt.

The old Bible narratives contain several references to the "ivory house" of Ahab and Jezebel, and it has long been a symbol of the splendor and luxury of these idolatrous rulers. Up to the present time, however, no trace of this ivory house had ever been found, and its existence had often been questioned. In the first book of Kings (22:39)

the ivory house is noted as one of the great achievements of Ahab. Later, the prophet Amos invoking the divine wrath against the Samarians for their sinful ways declared, "the houses of ivory shall perish, and the great houses shall have an end." Again, he wrote, "woe to them that are at ease in Zion and thrust in the mountain of Samaria . . . that lie upon beds of ivory and stretch themselves upon their couches."

Excavations by the Harvard party showed that the palace of ivory stood on the summit of the hill of Samaria, in a vast open court, covering perhaps seven or eight acres of | all it cost her .- Toledo Blade.

It is believed that all of these This is confirmed by the fact that the excavations revealed a fragment of a tusk and one unfinished piece of carving.

The building of Solomon's temple s described in detail in the first book of Kings, but no relics of the temple have ever been found and excavations in the city of Jerusalem are now forbidden. Consequently, great importance is attached to the fact that many of the designs found on the Samarian ivories correspond closely to the biblical description of the Temple of Solomon.

Such, for example, are the "lions, exen and cherubim" described in the temple, the "lions on the step of the great throne of ivory" and the wreaths of chain work and lily work.

The first book of Kings declares that Solomon "made a great throne of ivory, and overlaid it with the best of gold" and later that his navy returned every three years laden with cargoes of "gold and silver, ivory and apes, and peacocks." The finding of the Samarian ivories is held strong evidence of the high development of art and commerce under the kings of Israel.

The excavations in Samaria have been carried on for the past three years by a joint expedition including scholars from Harvard, the Palestine Exploration fund, the British school in Jerusalem and the Hebrew university in Jerusalem. During the period partial excavations were made of approximately one-half of the ancient city of Samaria. The Harvard members of the expedition were Dr. and Mrs. Lake and Dr. Robert P. Blake, director of the Harvard university library. Of the ivories which have been discovered, the majority are now in the collections of the Palestine Museum of Antiquities, and the balance have been divided between the Palestine Exploration Fund museum in London and the Fogg Art museum at Harvard.-Boston Herald.

· LIDA ·

Author of Our New Serial "Mulberry Square"

The charm, delicacy and spontaneity of "Tarpaper Palace" won for Lida Larrimore the warm admiration of a host of enthusiastic readers, and brought to her the almost universal acclaim of the critics. In "The Wagon and the Star" Miss Larrimore wrote another love story that proved even more popular than its predecessor, a story about the sort of pleasant people all of us would like to know. The New York Times, always critical, referred to it as: "A book that satisfies that tender mood that wants lightness and youth and beauty; that wants to be stirred by the heartaches of love and its

Then came "The Silver Flute," another charming romance with quaint and lovable characters, that was hailed as the best this talented writer had produced.

And now it is "Mulberry Square," undoubtedly her best up to this time. A romance that is intensely human, and a human story that is a romance. A story that satisfies the tender mood that wants lightness and youth and beauty, that wants to be stirred by the heartaches of love and its charm.

Fiction is not the only field in which Lida Larrimore has turned her talent to good advantage. She has twice written prize winning plays, and also has had several musical compositions published.

"Mulberry Square" will appear serially in these columns, and every reader will enjoy every chapter.

a whole would be more evenly distributed? Call it a personal or "honor tax" to be paid by all persons, male or female, between the ages of, say, 21 and 50 years who do not pay a real property tax, and let this tax be for educational purposes for the benefit of our blic school system.

Times and circumstances have so changed that to a large number of persons it seems advisable to get along without holding taxable property. Some may say that they do pay taxes, one way or another, but do they pay a rightful share? If the subject were presented fairly to them, it seems to me that almost all would see plainly that a small personal tax of, say, $2.00 per year, would really be an honor tax, showing loyalty in support of our government, just as payment of club and lodge dues and donations to churches is an expression of loyalty to social obligations.

ore, it might tend to encourage among young people an interest in public affairs; affairs for which, sooner or later, they must become responsible. It would also be a lesson in thrift to them, as it would be necessary for them earn, or lay aside from their earnings, the small amount neces-sary to pay their Honor Tax.

Alien residents, too, many of whom send much of their earnings back to the homeland folks, should be subject to this tax. Of course, do not condemn them for their allegiance to home ties, but is there any reason why they should not divide that allegiance with this has provided them with better fare every way than they could get at home?

Now. I hear someone say, "You are talking as though we were living in normal times!" Normal times are the times we must talk of, and try to prepare for, in order to assist in bringing them about. Concerning the Old Age Pension law as now in force I understand that only the indigent noor can receive a pension. Are they not already provided for, and possibly at less expense than through pensioning, especially if the pension did not prove sustaining?

Perhaps a system of Old Age Insurance might be worked out, ith the government acting as a liberal benevolent insurance company, helping those in need and in a way giving them a chance to help themselves where possible to do so. Then, perhaps, in time our Honor Tax payers might come in on the honor roll of such an insurance company.

I would much like to hear the views of others on these subjects.

Truly yours,

J. E. C.

School Notes

The following nine high school students received no mark lower than "B" for the first semester: Patricia Braddock, Ernestine Cecil, Vernon Davis, Isabelle Dease, Albertricia Braddock, tine Herman, Leonard Hosbach, Arlene Leslie, Arnold McLean, Ida Mac Nolem. Of these only one, Leonard Hosbach, is taking five subjects, the others taking four. Isabelle Dease, freshman, received the perfect record of all "A's's.

The records show that a higher percentage of attendance has been attained than any other semester for of 99.1%, followed by the Freshmen with 98.55%. The Seniors were next with 98.1% and the Juniors fourth This high attendance is partly due to the large number of students who have been neither absent nor tardy. Fractically one-third of the total enrollment have a perfect attendance. They are as follows: Doris Brugger, rthur Ziehl, Ervin Shover, Richard King, Gordon Myles, Albertine Herman, Walter Wegner, Patricia Braddock, George Tuttle, Effie Prescott, Isabelle Ulman, Dorothy Nelson, William Mallon, Thomas Metcalf, Florence Ulman, Laurine Frank, Harvey Rempert, Janet Keiser, Laurie Frank, Rose DePotty, Arthur Wendt, John Brugger, Earl Davis,

Counting 'A' as 4, 'B' as 3, 'C' as 2, 'D' as 1, and 'E' as 0, the Seniors outranked the others with 2.19, which slightly more than a 'C' average. The Freshmen were second with 1.93. slightly less than 'C'. The Sophomores were third with 1.77. about half way between 'C' and 'D'

The Juniors were last with 1.50. The Senior class held a bridge party at the City Hall last Friday evening. Seventeen tables cake were served after the games.

High prizes were won by Mrs.

Charles Miller and F. J. Bright.

Music and Art Notes Much enthusiasm has been shown by the student body by the anticipation of the coming operetta. However, due to the fact that the Rivoli Theatre cannot be rented, the lack of a place of adequate facilities necessarily makes the production of an operetta at this time impossible. Several plans have been discussed but none seem adequate to take care
