TAWAS RIVER HAS SMALL SMELT RUN

Make Small Catches

A small run of smell up the Tawas river to spawning grounds has been reported by Conservation Officer Arthur Leitz. Local sportsmen, using nets near the mouth of the river, have made small catches. The fish are said to be of large size.

This is the first time a run of smelt has been noticed in the Tawas liver, although an occasional smelt has been caught there before. It is thought that the present run would have been larger had it not been fo the recent cold weather. Increasingly larger runs in future years are expected.

Beulah in Benzie county has been a famous spot for smelt runs. Fishermen have traveled there from this locality and from other parts of Michigan to enjoy the sport of catching the fish.

Likely Winner of Odd Race Says She Isn't Trying.

Toronto.-Ontario's celebrated tenyear "stork derby," purse of $500,000, looks like a walkaway for a contender who declares that she isn't even trying -Mrs. Grace Bagnato, who has given birth to eight children since October

The stakes in the "stork derby" were provided by Charles Vance Miller, K. C., prominent Toronto barrister, who died in October, 1928, and who bequeathed the bulk of his fortune to the Toronto woman who gives birth to the largest number of children in the ten years following his death.

With more than seven of the ten years now having passed and with the contenders rounding into the home stretch, Mrs. Grace Bagnato appears to have the inside rail position, always barring the possibility of triplets putting some "dark horse" into the

Mrs. Bagnato, now only in her early forties, has given birth to 22 children, all told, and declares that, irrespective of the Miller trophy altogether, she expects to have two or three more before October of 1936. In fact, she insists that the $500,000 isn't even an inducement at all; although admitting that it, or even a slice of it, would come in very handy indeed.

"But we aren't thinking about the award, at all," insists the Italian for we aren't counting on it." Several attempts have been made, in the past, to cancel the "stork derby," on the ground that Miller never seriously intended his estate to be so utilized. Several of his close associates declare that he only drew up the will in question as a joke, and that he intended to prepare a later testament, which would revoke it, but that he died suddenly, before having an opportunity to do so.

A protest arose against such a step, however, with the result that the government abandoned its proposal.

Soon afterward it became known that efforts had been made to "buy off" both Mrs. Bagnato and Mrs. Brown, and that certain unidentified men had offered them from $50,000 to $100,000 in cash to asign their rights to the estate. It was suggested, but not definitely established, that these offers might have been made on behalf of the government. Both Mrs. Bagnato and Mrs. Brown declined them, however, taking the stand that a bird in the hand is not worth two in the bush when the bird in question is

Comic Opera Is Making Strides Among Turks

Istanbul.-Turkish comic opera has made such rapid strides recently that it is getting into trouble with the educational authorities.

Complaints are made that it is interfering with the"serious treatise"straight drama-and the educationalists have appealed to the new comic opera librettists and composers to cease production.

The governor of Istanbul, however, says that there is not enough money to be made as yet in Turkish straight drama, and so the lighter brand of theatrical entertainment will continue.

"THE PEN AND SWORD"

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

"The pen is mightier than the sword." History attests no truer statement. Nations which relied for protection upon the sword, perished through the sword. Brute force has never accomplished any results of permanent character. "He that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword." The cry is everywhere heard, let us have peace. The price for securing this peace is not to be paid by the use of arms. Many interpreters of history agree that the creation of firearms on so large a scale and the economic necessity of disposing of them primarily led to the great war. Be that as it may-it goes without saying that no problem is ever settled until it is settled right. The settlement of a problem depends primarily upon the influence of thought expressed in public opinion when the pen becomes mightier than the sword.

The most powerful influence for moulding public opinion today is the product of the pen, expressed through the public press. It is an astounding fact that according to the census of 1930, "the total daily and weekly distribution of newspapers was fifty-six million." It is reported that of the twenty-four million families in America, two-fifths are now reading chain newspapers, and only a small portion of the remaining three-fifths do not have daily access to the metropolitan press. The newspaper is the most vital and important propagandist in the world, and its influence for good or bad is unbelievably great.

Our efforts at moral reform as well as international good will (a matter of spirit and mental attitude) can be realized more through the moulding of public opinion by way of the pen than by the brute force of the sword. © by Western Newspaper Union.

Feeds Six Ducks;

Brings Thousands

Winnipeg.-Raids of swarms of wild ducks, estimated to number at least 3,000, are causing great trouble to farmers in the vicinity of Rocky Mountain House, Alberta.

Lacking sufficient natural feed, owing to unusual conditions in the five-mile area of spring-fed marsh at the heads of Raven and Clear creeks, they are ravaging farmers' barnyards and stealing food laid out for cattle and poultry.

This situation is confirmation of the Biblical prophecy that bread cast upon the waters shall come back several-fold. Seven years ago a farmer, one Budden, fed three pairs of wild ducks over winter. Next year a larger flock came back to the vicinity and the number has increased each year, indicating that news has a way of getting around

In This Gay Window Treatment Color Achieves an Effect of Sunshine, and Flowers and Foliage Give the Cheer the View May Lack.

How to curtain windows in sunless rooms or those in which the sun lies but a very short time, so that the light filtering through, or falling on, the material gives an impression of sunshine, is a subject that every homemaker has to consider at one time of another. It is amazing the difference in the cheerful aspect of the room, when the curtains are well chosen for this purpose, and when they are not. A dreary room can be transformed into a pleasant one through correct curtaining and since the aspect of a room reacts on the spirits and even the health of occupants, the matter assumes importance.

Let us take one of the hardest problems to solve, which is the curtaining of windows opening on an areaway, a very narrow street, or close to a wall, a common one in city apartments. The impression of sunshine and verdure can be instilled into the treatment by having pane or glass curtains of yellow, and hangings of green. The range of suitable glass curtain materials is from a good quality of cheese cloth or scrim, costing little, to expensive nets and lace. And for draperies the range is from crepe to choice silk damask. It is assumed that the best that the purse can afford without straining its strings will be chosen for the materials, and that the kind will be selected to accord with the room, whether a main one or a minor one. The effect that is sought is not of elegance but is one of color and artistry in bringing about specific

In the window treatment of a living room with such problems as described, a yellow bowl of brass or pottery, or one of gay Italian or Spanish ornamental pottery is suggested to stand on the sill. If it holds a fern, a Chinese rubber plant, or a palm, you will have actual verdure to greet the eye. Also a colored glass flowerholder, with growing ivy or wandering Jew trailing from it and silhouetted against the yellow pane curtains is

Curtain Arrangement.

It is important to remember that the curtaining must not be heavy enough to shut out the light. It will, of course, dim it somewhat but by arranging the draperies to fall over the frame of the window rather than the glass, and by having the pane curtains as sheer as possible a minimum of light is dimmed. It is only when the view through the window is to be actually shut off that the pane curtains need to meet.

A secondary color scheme is rose and green, either color may be used for the pane and either for the drapery curtaining. While this scheme does not convey the effect of sunshine but of gaiety the cheerful aspect is stressed. Firelight rather than sunshine is simulated. However, the color scheme of a room is a determining factor. For pane curtains, tones rather than strong colors should be chosen. Hangings may be more intense but pure tone is hard to harmonize with other colors in

Loafers Reign of Terror

Owning Your Home

By ED HOWE

HE loafer who looks to his neighbors for more help than he is enthroughout the long history of the human race. The social plan of the earliest family groups and tribes was communism, but certain ones were idle and troublesome, and refused to do their share, so the plan, after many trials, was in every case given up. From that day to this, loafers have demonstrated that communism will not do: Communists themselves are to blame for the long rejection of their

In olden days (the history books say) all knew they must care for themselves, so the idle were not very numerous, and the industrious and worthy were able to regulate them. If a man was especially annoying, it was permissible for anyone to kill him, with consent of the elders. A troublesome woman was whipped by other women. As late as the fine civilization in Athens a man who would not earn his own way was placed in charge of a more efficient and worthy citizen, and taught better manners. Loafers were looked down upon, and not allowed to vote; the more persistent were made slaves, and forced to at least earn their own keep on public

There has been a great change in modern times; the idle have become so numerous and powerful that a part of every penny the industrious earn goes to the support of the shiftless.

When one looks over old history, life seems a continuing Reign of Terror.

Of nearly all the famous ancient cities it is said they were destroyed many times. The story runs something like this: In a far-distant time men discovered (say on the river Nile) a favorable site for a town, and made it into a prosperous city. This prosperity attracted the envy of rival tribes, and the city was utterly destroyed, in connection with much butchery. A long time after another city was built on the favorable site. and destroyed. This process of destruction kept up until the present ruins represent the ninth such catas-

The same story comes from the Euphrates, the Tiber, the Aegian islands, and wherever men have been most active. But for this love of destruction we of today would be much more comfortable and advanced than we are; one Reign of Terror plunged the world into darkness for centuries, and men learned nothing new of value to pass on to their successors.

I recall a time when every man had an ambition to own his home. In these strange days men are letting their homes go on the mortgage, or paying rent, or demanding that the landlord give them more time. (I read of one landlord who succeeded in putting a tenant out, after the renter had paid nothing in twelve months, and this cruelty made the neighbors so mad they burned the house.)

Men will again have an ambition to own their homes, fix them up, and care for them. Men who can't rent houses somehow get rid of them, or the houses will fall down, and no new ones will be built. There is always finally an end to the fiercest battle; the drunkard sobers up, to meet the realities of life again. Men are noisily rattling around now, and refusing to pay their debts, as they expect a change which will render it unnecessary, but there will be no change in the old fundamentals; men must have a roof over their heads, pay their debts, make a living, and these things are easiest accomplished by sober, steady men.

I have long been very proud of a common plug of a fellow named Walter Williams. He was a reasonably good boy around home, and sent to school for a while, but never got his lessons very well; he didn't have much school education when he graduated from the grades into the world of work. . . . He became a good workman, and was promoted to foreman in due course. The neighbors liked him every year a little better, and in time people in neighboring counties heard nice things about him. He never went to college or high school, but took considerable advantage of the education offered in the school of experience. . . . The last I heard of him he was addressing an enormous audience of celebrities in Berlin. He never went to a university but is now president of the State University of Missouri. . . . I'm glad that an ordinary plug of a fellow is able to do that well in my country if he will half try.

They tell of an old man who, when reading, looked so uncomfortable and dissatisfied that some one finally asked him if he were ill. "No," he replied, "but I am so tired of literature."

What do I call truth? What I have found true all my life; what I have fully tested, experienced. I have traveled many roads and always found some kindly disposed person ahead of me has left a sign clearly indicating the shortest and easiest way. Such information has never failed me and I call it truth.

Far Fields

By LEETE STONE

HEY were companions, and they spoke to each other; each in his fashion; from their separate cages. One was a trusty in a penitentiary and the other was a golden canary. The lilting song of the bird and the crisp whistle of the man exchanged daily greetings across the straggling space that separated them,

This was one of the first days of spring to capture glorious geniality from the gently warm sun and faintly stirring air-nature's farewell to a dragging, bitter winter.

Number 991 pressed his cheekbones against the bars of his open window. Even the metal felt less cold and unyielding than usual. Zephyrs stirred his sandy hair which had become much thinner during the ten years of incarceration. This morning out of the ruts of resignation which had claimed his spirit from the first rose a consuming desire for the far fields of freedom and the nomad life that had once been his.

Eyes bent on his little chum whose cage hung in another open window over the way this wondrous April day, Number 991 indulged his whimsicality of guarded conversation: "Can we stick another winter here, little one?" he whispered.

Notes of song trilled over to him as if in direct answer.

'Meaning 'Cheerio' and 'Carry on' and all the rest of the uplift stuff," Number 991 muttered with a wry mouth. Nevertheless his shoulders straightened and he responded with a clear whistle.

About to turn away from the window, his gaze-which had been riveted on the cage-was caught by the sight of a child scrambling onto a chair which stood beneath it. The child was small, and had trouble making the grade; but finally stood on the chair and commenced fussing with the tiny door of the bird's prison. At once a woman appeared on the scene, removed the child with apparent scoldings, and pushed the chair away.

The significance of this ordinary incident flooded the man's mind with the conviction that some day the child would succeed with its mischief and his little companion would escape to those far fields of freedom that nagged their hearts perpetually.

Thus the idea of escape was born in Number 991 on this day of lovely promise which had suddenly new meaning for him, Amazed, and somewhat bewildered, he for the first time realized how many opportunities he had missed; wrapped as he had been during the years in the dull inertia of confinement and prison shop labor. The check-up of tools was often lax. It would be simple to confiscate and conceal files and oil. Nights were long in which to softly sever his bars. He felt that escape for the little pal was destined. Why not for him, too?

The chance to secure tools came soon and Number 991 became a different man. He stepped out of the prison rut of resignation into the province of love of life. A thousand sleepless nights had taught him where the night guard of his cell-block would be at any given moment. No detail of secrecy eluded him. Night by night the four little rifts in two of his bars grew imperceptibly deeper.

Intimacy, also, progressed between the bird and the man. Never a morning that they did not exchange buoy-"How you coming, friend?" Carolled over. "Fine! How 'bout you, little one?"

Whistled back.

And often the mischievous child stretched its arms high for the cage, reinforcing Number 991's premonition that freedom for them both was a cer-

The morning came when all but the last few strokes of the file had been taken. A few more deft moments' work would spell separation of the steel, and-escape! Watching the bird across the way, the man's body stiffened suddenly and his cheekbones pressed the bars so closely that he feared they might give way.

The child was dragging a chair under the canary's cage again. Today! The child climbed on the chair; fussed with the cage door, and opened it. The golden bird winged swift flight through the open window, and downward, beyond the man's impetuous gaze that strove to follow.

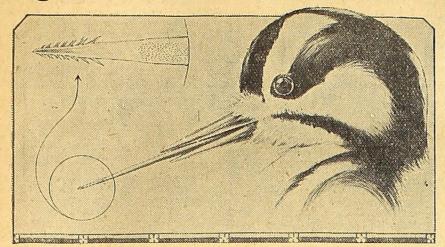

Number 991's joy mounted to the peak of elation. The little pal was free to travel the far fields-travel with him-to indulge fantasy.

Number 991 remained long at the window planning his own escape for that very night. He dreamed as he sniffed the blossom-scented air hungrily. Then he noticed the little boy; shoulders drooped in penitence; go out of the house opposite and disappear around the corner.

But why did the child return running followed closely by a sleek black cat, and carrying something in small, cupped hands as he screamed for his mother. Number 991's eyes strained to see! They caught a glimpse of a lifeless little blob of yellow from which the feathers drooped awry.

Number 991 turned away from his nearly severed bars, despair in the deep lines of his sagging face. With a watchful look everywhere first, he flung the tiny files through his bars and they disappeared in the tall grass of prison acres just as the morning shop bell clanged through the corridors. Far fields indeed!

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.-WNU Service. CIENTISTS have recently discovered in the dark, raindrenched forests of Haiti a species of woodpecker which builds its own apartment house. They reported seeing a dozen pairs of woodpeckers going in and out of nests in a single dead tree trunk.

There are few birds that so satisfactorily reveal their family connection as do the woodpecker. The beginner in bird study may learn that the meadowlark belongs to the family "Icteridae" but he may be excused if he does not learn at once that the bobolink, the oriole, and the redwinged blackbird, all strikingly different in habits and color, belong to the same family. He may study the wood thrush, and be surprised to find later that the robin and the bluebird bear to it a close family relationship. But if he becomes thoroughly familiar with the appearance and activities of just one woodpecker, he will thereafter be able to recognize at once any other member of the family "Picidae" which he may encounter, Woodpeckers are of wide distribution. They inhabit all the countries of the globe except Madagascar and the Australian region. More than four hundred species are known, and many geographical races of these have been described. In North America the family is represented by ten genera, classified into 22 species, several of which in turn are divided into subspecies or geographical races. In all, 64 kinds of woodpeckers are recognized in continental United States, Canada and Baja California.

Sensible and Busy Birds.

Woodpeckers give the impression of being practical, sensible birds. Under ordinary circumstances, they do not show a hysterical fear of man; they are wary, but do not let that interfere with their work. They are very busy birds and most of the time are absorbed in climbing about tree trunks and limbs. They get along together fairly well. One sees few serious combats among them.

They do not possess the stately dignity of the heron, the singing powers of the thrush, or the graceful flight of the swallow. Woodpeckers do not stir the imagination to thoughts of distant lands, as does the wild goose when far overland we see him leading his flock toward the frozen pole. The woodpeckers are known rather as hardworking, substantial citizens of the bird world, rendering service which could ill be spared.

These birds possess highly specialized equipment for their business of getting a living. They are the only birds in our country that can dig holes in solid trees. As a group they pass most of their days pecking decayed trees or stumps for ants or the larvae of wood-boring beetles.

No other bird leaves behind such striking evidence of its presence. A hundred thousand warblers may migrate through a small region, and many may remain for the summer and rear their young. When they have gone, little sign of their former presence is left behind; but a half dozen woodpeckers in the same community will leave very definite evidence of their occupancy. Numerous holes in dead trees, with here and there an entrance to a nesting cavity, will all bear convincing testimony that these birds have been in the forests and the orchards of the neighborhood. Woodpeckers nest in hollows which they dig in trees, and all of them lay white eggs on a bed of fine chips at the bottom of the cavities.

Their toes usually number four, two of them pointing forward and the others backward. This arrangement enables the birds to grasp firmly the side of a tree, and especially is this the case when they brace themselves with their twelve long, stiff tail feathers.

One Kind Goes After Sap.

The sapsucker, (a species of woodpecker), is looked upon with serious disfavor by foresters and orchardists, some variety of it being found in nearly every part of the country. This dislike arises from its universal custom of pecking holes in live trees. The bird does this chiefly to get the sap which flows upward through the soft cambium, lying just beneath the bast, or inner bark, and it also eats the cambium and bast. To get this food the sapsucker drills holes in rings around the tree, or, at times, in rows on the trunk, or along a limb.

As the sap collects in the openings, it is consumed by the bird until the little springs begin to fail, when another series of holes is made near the first one. Thus the work continues, until large areas of the tree may be covered with these perforations. The sapsucker will take the sap of maple, mountain ash, pear, plum, apple, cherry, oak, peach, spruce, and a flicker lays four or five eggs. OUR COMIC SECTION

To the household of Doctor Ballard, in Mulberry Square, youthful Dr. Hugh Kennedy, comes as an assistant. Janie is the nineteen-year-old daughter of Doctor Ballard. Her older sister, Cella, a petted beauty, is away from home. Hugh regards Janie as a small chum, but she has a far deeper feeling for him. Cella, returning home, accepts Hugh's open admiration as her due, Just one more in her train of admirers. Tom McAllister is another, and Carter Shelby is a third. Following a visit by Shelby, Celia is visibly de-pressed. Hugh and Celia unexpectedly announce their engagement. Janie, heartbroken, returns to college. She is summoned home when her father is seriously hurt in an auto accident. Hugh blames himself, feeling respon-Hugh blames himself, feeling responsible, for allowing the elderly physician to drive at night, his eyesight not fitting him for the task. Kennedy had been at a theater with Celia, she insisting on his going. Doctor Balard's spine is injured so that he may never be able to walk again. There is hope in an operation, for which he must be taken to New York. Celia meets Carter Shelby again. The doctor is taken to New York Mrs. Ballard. is taken to New York, Mrs. Ballard going with him. The operation is unsuccessful, and Hugh announces his determination to stay "as long as the physician needs him," even though that means the postponement of his wedding with Celia. She resents this.

"I didn't expect this," he said. "I thought you would both be in bed." He smiled wearily. The smile caught at Janie's heart. It reminded her of Father's smile. She realized, all at once, that Hugh was like Father in many ways. She hadn't thought of it before.

"You didn't mean it, Hugh?" Cella had left the armchair. Her hands were clinging to the lapels of his coat. "You didn't mean that you would stay on here in the Square?"

"Of course I meant it." There again was that finality in his voice. "I'm tired, Celia. Must we talk about it to-

"Yes," Celia said firmly. "You can't sacrifice your whole life. It's morbid. It's unnecessary. You can't do it, Hugh."

"Does it matter so very much?" He led her to the davenport, drew her with a weary sigh down into the circle of his arm. "Let's just be quiet to-

"Listen to me, Hugh."

"Please, darling . . ." Hugh's weary sigh, his look of patience was more than Janie could

"Celia!" It was an almost soundless protest. But Celia heard. She looked at Janie. There was no mistaking her meaning. Janie slipped out of the room with Kiltie hugged tight in her arms.

III

"Why, Janie Ballard!"

Janie, huddled into a heap on the stairs, blinked and opened her eyes. "I was sleepy," she murmured. "I couldn't get any farther." "It's one o'clock."

One o'clock! Then Cella must have been talking to Hugh for an hour

"You come straight on up to bed." Celia brushed past her huddled figure. Her heels made a clicking sound on the steps. A door opened and closed. The light from the living room fire shone out across the hall. Janie heard a sound of somebody moving, the weary sigh. Hugh! She walked quietly to the door. Hugh had flung himself down on the davenport. The position of his body suggested complete exhaustion. His eyes stared at the dying fire.

creak of the davenport springs, a long

"Hugh," she called softly. His eyes turned from the fire, brightened, were somber again.

"Aren't you sleepy, Hugh?" "All but my head. That keeps on spinning around."

"Do you want something hot to drink?"

He shook his head. He looked at Janie, sleepy and small in the doorway, tender concern in her wide clear hazel eyes. A brown little girl with a dog. Sweet, funny kid! "Come here," he said.

She crossed at once to the davenport. She looked at him with a tenderness in her eyes. She said nothing

"Stay with me," Hugh said wistfully.

"I hate being alone." She made a nest of cushions on the floor and settled herself among them. By lifting her eyes a little she could look directly at Hugh.

"Am I being heroic?" Hugh asked. Tell me, Janie. You always seem to know about things. You don't really know," he added. "You feel. How do you feel about that? Is it morbid of me to want to stay here and help your father?" She knew that he was repeating things which Celia had said. "Have I a martyr complex? Is it a theatrical gesture? Tell me, young fellow." "I think it's splendid," she said.

He liked that. He had liked her to admire him doing stunts on the hickory limbs. He was only a boy who had made a mistake and wanted to make up for it. Janle felt very ma-earnestly. "I couldn't leave him. No matter what it costs-' Costs! Janie was breathless and

"It's the disappointment." Hugh seemed to have forgotten Janie. He was talking to relieve his own overburdened mind. "It is hard for her. She loves gayety. She wants to go abroad."

Janie made no comment. She just nestled closer until her head lay in the curve of his arm. He was stroking her hair. She could feel his fingers. Like Father's fingers, gentle and firm and caressing with a touch that made her tingle as Father's fingers had never done. A wave of happiness swept through her, a wave of misery. Hugh was caressing her hair! "I didn't think she would take it like this," Hugh said presently. "I thought she would understand. But it doesn't matter. Even if I lose her, this is something that I am going to do.' Janie saw his lips close in a determined line. She saw the torture in his eyes. She had to help him somehow.

"I guess," she said slowly, "if you are as beautiful as Celia you do expect more from life. You can't bear commonplace things-like Mulberry Square. Especially," she added, "if you've been taught to expect it all of your life."

She was thinking of the people who had taught Celia to believe that she was sacred and set apart; Mother, Aunt Rose, the boys who had loved her. She had often thought that it wasn't entirely Celia's fault. For years she had kept that thought tucked away in the back of her mind so that it might comfort Hugh tonight.

It did comfort him. A look of peace crept into his eyes.

"It's there," he said drowsily. "The hidden beauty. I'll find it some time." He was quiet for so long that Janie thought he had gone to sleep. She glanced up at him. The look of peace had vanished from his eyes. They stared somberly over Janie's head into the glowing flames. Presently he said only half aloud, "But suppose it isn't there. Suppose I made it up . . . mirage . . .

Janie gasped and sat very still. "No, that's not true," Hugh said firmly. "I'm not being fair. But Janie darling, I can't play games."

"Games?" she asked, bewildered. "It's a waste," he continued slowly. "I want to live serenely, honestly. I-I can't bear scenes."

There would be many scenes. Janle was sure of that. Celia had a gift for creating scenes. Hugh would be hurt over and over again. It made per wretched to think that would be hurt. She loved him and she was helpless. There was nothing she could do. She rested her cheek against his hand and winked back the stinging after all, something she could do for Hugh. He needed her a little. He needed her very much.

"Don't leave me," he said, "if I happen to go to sleep."

"I won't," she promised.

"You're a joy in the world, little fellow." The words came very slowly. "There isn't much to you except your hazel eyes and your lovely smile." he added, smiling at the drowsy droop of her lashes. "But I like you in spite of that. You're a very good little

Hugh was simply impossible. In all the weeks since he had announced

"I really want to, Janie," Hugh said | his intention of staying on the Square, she had not been able to shake his determination. There were times when he had wavered, times when she had been almost confident of success. But he had never entirely yielded.

"Father wouldn't expect it." "I shall stay as long as he needs

"Don't you love me?"

"I adore you. But this is something that I intend to do."

How she hated the finality in his voice, the tight line of his lips, the stubborn thrust of his jaw. It was absurd, unreasonable. She was sorry about Father, too. But Hugh's sense of duty or honor or whatever he called it was fantastic. Nothing had been able to shake his determination. She had stopped wearing his ring. He had noticed it but had said nothing at all. He seemed purposely to neglect and avoid her. He shut himself into his room or drove with Janie in that outrageous car they called "Horatius." It was more than anybody could be expected to stand.

Father had been removed to a sanitarium in the West. There would be another operation. And then there would be the sound of a wheel chair in the hall and the gilt and green parlor would be turned into a bedroom. Celia shivered.

She stood at the window and looked down into the Square. She saw nothing lovely in the foliage of the small mulberry trees, in the mauve plumes of the lilacs, in the new pushing green of the grass. She couldn't bear it to live here all of her life. Of what use would Hugh's money be or her own fragile beauty if she must stay in Mulberry Square?

She wondered why she had become engaged to him. A dozen reasons, creditable to Celia, presented themselves. She overlooked the fact that she had been piqued at Carter Shelby's indifference, that she had fancied Muriel was gloating over her.

She told herself that it was because Hugh had loved her greatly and she had pitied him. She recalled the promises he had made as they sat together in that ridiculous car in the scented intimacy of a narrow side road. His ardor had thrilled her, had restored her wounded pride. His promises were peep-holes into a dazzling future. If she could possibly have foreseen . .

A hurdy-gurdy was playing a familiar waltz. Celia identified the tune with a sudden swift lifting of spirits. She had danced to it with Carter Shelby on New Year's day at "Sportsman's Hall." She hummed the words softly. "Come with me where moon-

Carter Shelby! He had told her that he would do anything to make her happy. If she should go to him and say simply, "I'm very unhappy, Carter. My engagement was a mistake," would he take her away to those far lovely places which he had so beautifully described? She thought that he would. Thoughts slipped rapidly through her mind. Fate, she decided, was turning the handle of the hurdy-gurdy. All at once the three shadow Celias nodded their golden heads. The real Celia, after weeks of toying with an idea, had made a final decision. She glanced at her watch. One o'clock! She could take the 2:20 into the city and make connections with the Washington express.

She had made up her mind and she did not waver. As she bathed, she assured herself that she was doing the best thing for everybody concerned. Mother would understand. It was her dearest wish that Celia might escape the Square. Father would be satisfied if he knew she was happy. He wanted them to be happy. Dear Father! She would send him books and an inlaid chess board and baskets of beautiful fruit. Hugh would be terribly hurt but she thought he rather deserved it. And Janie, dear little Janie- Well, Janie could never understand.

She decided to take no luggage. Her suede bag would hold a nightgown, her tooth brush, her lip stick and powder and rouge. It was better to get away quietly. She could send later for her clothes. She hadn't much money. Enough to buy a ticket to Washington. She wondered idly if Aunt Lucy and Muriel were at home.

Should she leave a note for Hugh? What should it be? She couldn't say flatly that she refused to live in Mulberry Square. She had never said that. She didn't quite dare to write that she was going to marry Carter Shelby. She decided not to leave a note. Her engagement ring? She opened the tiny plush case. It twinkled at her from its nest of satin. She left it on the dresser. She left it with much regret. It was a beautiful

Before she left the room, she tore the flap off one of the square gray envelopes. It was marked, in his own writing, with Carter's initials and his Washington address. She tucked it into her bag and, fully equipped for conquest, she closed the door behind

The last time! she thought as she walked down the wide polished stairs. She worked up a feeling of sentiment for the old brick house. She succeeded very well. There were tears on her lashes when she closed the front door.

The last time! She broke a leaf from one of the mulberry trees and crushed it in her hand. It made a stain on her pale gray gloves. She dropped it indignantly.

Great-uncle Charlie was standing beside the ticket window in the station. "Little trip, Celia?" he asked, sweeping off with a gallant gesture his dilapidated felt hat. "I'm going to town." She wished that he wouldn't make her so conspicuous. People were smiling. Uncle Charlie was a dreadful old man. She opened her bag. The flap from the gray envelope fluttered down to the floor. She did not notice it. She asked for a ticket to Philadelphia.

The train was rumbling into the Great-uncle Charlie saw the flap of the gray envelope. He picked it up. Because it matched Celia's costume, he thought that she might have dropped it. It didn't look important. He slipped it into his pocket and thought nothing more about it.

Celia walked confidently through the Washington station. People turned to look after her. It gave her a feeling of power.

"What a beautiful girl!" she heard a voice exclaim.

"Is it Marilyn Miller?" a younger voice asked in a thrilling whisper. The pleased dreamy expression crept into Celia's eyes. She smiled faintly. Her manner was detached. Inside she was simmering with excitement. If you were beautiful, you could take what you wanted from life. She discovered that the flap from Carter's gray envelope was not in her bag. It didn't matter very much. She consulted the telephone directory. There was his name. Carter Valentine Shelby . . . Mrs. Carter Shelby. The Charleston Shelbys, of course. Lovely little thing . . . Her fingers trembled as she dropped a nickel into the telephone slot. The moment of waiting seemed very long. A voice at last. Carter's voice, low and thrilling. His South Carolina accent.

"This is Celia, Carter." She steadied her voice with an effort.

"Celia." She was annoyed. He should have recognized her voice. "Oh . . ." Only that. A moment of hesitation. Celia felt that her knees were growing weak. "I just thought I'd call you," said. "I happened to be in town. Can you meet me somewhere?"

"I'm leaving at midnight." Another hesitation. "But wait . . . I'll meet you." He named a hotel. Celia's knees were steady again. He would meet her in half an hour.

It was a rather shabby hotel in an undistinguished street. When she had paid the taxi-driver, there was very little money left in her dainty suede bag. She sat in a chair in the lobby and was annoyed with Carter. Surely, she thought, he might have suggested a more glamorous meeting place. For the first time a devil of doubt scampered through her mind. A man across the lobby was staring at her admiringly. The devil of doubt scampered away. She was confident again.

The moments dragged by. She glanced up expectantly with every whirl of the revolving door. At last she saw him, tall and graceful and dark, hurrying to meet her, making all the other men in the lobby look thick and dull and uninteresting.

"Celia!" He was smiling down at her, holding both of her hands. Was there a hint of apprehension in his eyes? She preferred to think there was not.

"It's lovely to see you, Carter." The silver harp strings were singing.

"When did you arrive?" "At seven."

"Have you had dinner?" "No." She was hungry. She hadn't thought of it before.

The dining room was dingy. Carter gave an order. Cella removed her gloves, rested her elbows on the table, her chin on her folded hands. She smiled at Carter through a pink blur of light. He was looking at her hands. "You haven't-" He paused. She knew that he had missed her engagement ring. "I've been very unhappy," she said plaintively. "I found I had made a

There was no hint in his eyes of the joy she had anticipated. The devil of doubt and his fifteen brothers were scampering through her mind. An uncomfortable silence fell upon them. The waiter brought an assortment of food. Celia ate without tasting. She found it difficult to swallow. "Why are you here?" Carter was smoking a great many cigarettes. "I've been unhappy," she said slowly. "I had to get away."

He looked at her strangely. "Mrs. Grove and Muriel are in Ashville," he said. 40"

Ringnecked pheasant chicks were brooded satisfactorily in colony houses with attached wire-floored sun porches. After the chicks reached six weeks of age they needed more room. Battery brooding proved unsatisfactory because of excessive mortality and poor feather development.

Better early growth of ringnecked pheasant chicks was obtained on rations of higher protein content than those used for chicks of the domestic fowl. The best growth and feathering and the greatest feed consumption per 100 chicks were obtained through the use of a ration analyzing approximately 28 per cent protein.

Claw Guards on Toms to Save Injury to the Hens

With a few cents worth of rubber tubing for each tom, turkey growers can solve one of their most serious problems, that of having hens severely lacerated and sometimes even killed during the breeding season by the sharp claws of the male birds. Doctor W. A. Billings, veterinary specialist at the Minnesota University farm, suggests putting a short length of rubber tubing over each toenail of breeding

Tubing one-fourth inch in diameter with one-sixteenth inch hole, is the variety recommended. A half-inch piece of tubing is slipped on over the toenail and left protruding a little beyond the sharp end. It is suggested that the claw be smeared with rubber tire cement or glue before the rubber is put on. The guards do not interfere with the gait of the toms and do not seem to annoy them in any way. The use of these guards not only will protect the hens, but will make it unnecessary to use saddles or canvas coverings for

Chlorine for Poultry

A new method of combating bronchitis, colds, roup and other respiratory diseases in poultry has been developed by the New York State Veterinary college and the State Institute of Applied Agriculture at Farmingdale, Long Island, N. Y. The method calls for the use of a new dry, hyochlorite powder containing 15 per cent chlorine, which is dusted into the air over the birds with a dust gun after the birds are on the roosts at night. This permits the birds to inhale the chlorine liberated from the powder, destroying the bacteria, drying up the secretions and helping to prevent the spread of

Turnips for Poultry

Turnips may be fed to poultry either raw or in cooked mashes. When fresh and sweet, they appear to be as good raw as are mangels but they do not keep so well and, as soon as they begin to decay, are likely to give a disagreeable flavor to the eggs of fowls eating them. The feeding of turnips not perfectly sound is probably responsible for the general belief that any turnip will taint eggs. Turnips contain a large amount of vitamins but they are hard and woody and for that reason are not quite as good as some other root crops.

The Australorp Fowl The Australorp fowl is, in reality,

a Black Orpington. The breed was developed in Australia from the original Orpington which originated in England. The egg laying Australorp is a tighter feathered bird than the Orpington, not quite so bulky in appearance but of precisely the same weight. They are not a new breed in reality, although they have not been to the fore very long. They are the egg-laying type of Black Orpington with a modified body.

Expedition Will Study Life in Ocean Depths

Scientists to Go Down Half sea life not known before were disa Mile for Observation.

Washington. - Continuation next summer of the unique deep-sea investigations of Dr. William Beebe under a grant of funds by the National Geographic society of Washington has been announced by Dr. Gilbert Grosvenor, president of the society. Doctor Beebe, who is director of the department of scientific research of the New York Zoological society, and a noted oceanographic naturalist, has developed during the last few years an entirely new method of undersea investigation which permits men to descend safely to depths which hitherto could not be reached.

Use Two-Ton Diving Ball. Accompanied by an assistant, Doctor Beebe plans to descend to a depth of nearly half a mile below the surface of the sea inside the heavy steel ball (the "bathysphere") in which he has previously made the record descent for a living man-2,200 feet. The unique diving ball is familiar to millions of Americans who saw it last summer and fall when it was on exhibit in the central room of the hall of science at the Century of Progress exposition

It is a thick-shelled sphere four-anda-half feet in diameter and weighing two tons. It has windows of fused quartz fashioned to withstand the many tons of pressure to which it is subjected by the sea water. Through the windows beams of light are sent out into the water and the strange creatures of the ocean depths are observed. A steel cable lowers the sphere from a barge at the surface, and rubber-enclosed wires afford telephone communication and electric light.

No Air Tubes to Surface.

Furnishing air from the surface to the great depths reached by the bathysphere is impracticable. The observers are sealed into the ball, and an automatic valve steadily releases a supply of oxygen. Chemicals exposed in racks absorb moisture and carbon dioxide. At the end of the dive the observers are living in an atmosphere of slightly compressed air.

During Doctor Beebe's descents in 1930 and 1932 a number of forms of

Pheasant, Given Shelter, Turns "Dog in Manger"

McKean, Pa.—A cock pheasant that was allowed by Robert Meeker, of Mc Kean, to stay in his chicken house repaid the kindness shown to him by fighting and nearly killing 30 White Leghorn cockerels. Mr. Meeker had found the pheasant in the chicken yard when the weather was 30 degrees below zero and gave the bird shelter in a chicken house where he had penned up 30 Leghorn roosters. He was worried for fear the wild bird would be set upon by the cockerels. His fear was groundless. After the first day the pheasant was boss of the coop and before the end of a week it had assumed a dog in the manager attitude, refusing to allow the chickens to eat until he himself had all he wanted. The cold spell and Mr. Meeker's patience ending about the same time, the cock pheasant was driven out, and again peace reigns among the Leghorn roosters.

That Body of Yours

JAMES W. BARTON, M. D.

Dangers of Underveight

WHILE most individuals whose weight is not within normal limits, are carrying too much weight, with the ailmen's which so often accompany it, nevertheless there are a number of underweights who have considerable physical distress and do not realize that underweight is the cause of this distress.

When a meal is eaten the underweight individual immediately becomes conscious of this meal; it feels heavy, Any change of position of the body increases this sense of weight and in some cases actually causes pain.

Usually the stomach hangs down too low, as there is no fat to help support it, thus it cannot empty its contents into the small intestine so readily With some of the food remaining in the stomach when the next meal is eaten, indigestion with gas pressure pains may follow.

Naturally with the weight of meals causing discomfort, and the slowness of the emptying of the stomach causing further discomfort and pain, the individual is inclined to eat even less food than he needs and continues to lose weight.

A few years ago operations were performed to hold up the stomach or other organs that were hanging too low in the abdomen. Operations are not as frequent now as more scientific methods are being used to fatten up these very thin individuals.

They are encouraged to eat the more concentrated foods such as butter, cream, fat meat, eggs, and to sit down and rest for a few minutes after each Comfortable abdominal belts are worn which permit natural breathing, yet hold up the abdomen and its con tents. This removes the "draggy" feeling, and so helps the stomach and intestine that when they squeeze or contract their contents, these contents are carried along their course with out having any high hills to climb.

In order that all the food will be out of the stomach before the next meal is eaten, these thin individuals whenever possible, lie on the right side for fifteen minutes just before lunch and before dinner. By lying on the right side, any food in the stomach will flow down into the small intestine, leaving the stomach clear and ready for the next meal.

There are severe cases where the stomach or other organs may have to be fastened up by operation.

The Research Worker

T IS certainly gratifying to the medical profession and to all others who give the matter thought, to see grateful patients recognize the difficulties of research workers and endeavor to give them some financial aid.

Thus, in England, a group of asthma sufferers have completed an organization to aid research physicians who are doing work on the cause and relief of asthma.

H. G. Wells, the author, has invited his fellow sufferers with diabetes to follow the example of the asthma suffers, and help all workers and institutions spending their time on diabetes.

He points out that, thanks to a regulated diet and to insulin, they are living active, happy lives, while a few years ago many "would have been un comfortable and dying slowly or already dead but for the work of a small group of experimenters and practitioners who have brought this particular maladjustment or disease under control." Mr. Wells says that diabetics, now financially able to do so, should not only help these research workers but help also those diabetics who are not well enough off to get the diet and insulin treatment. In other words diabetics in good or fair circum stances should tax themselves for the benefit of all diabetics.

When we remember the years devoted to the dietetic control of dia betes by Joslin of Boston and others. then the work done by Banting and Best, discoverers of insulin, in Toronto, under the most trying circumstances, with the final refining process of insulin developed by Collip, we can get some idea of the patience and perseverance of practitioners and research men.

As you know, if these men were paid for the lives saved, it would run into many millions of dollars, aside from the happiness achieved and suffering relieved.

All that research men ask, in fact, they do not ask for anything; all they would like is that they be supplied with a place and equipment with which to work, and enough to live on. and they are willing to give themselves to the relief of the ills of trumanity. In fact, many of them are doing this without proper equipment, and without resources to actually support themselves.

You'll agree that Mr. Wells has done a good piece of work in calling the attendon of his fellow sufferers to the need of helping the cause of all diabetics.

DRUMS GO BACK TO THE KILTIES

Germans Generously Give Up Trophies of War.

The Second battalion of the Gor don Highlanders have got their drums back. There were rejoicings over the regiment's old-home-coming day for drums, but the drums them selves were mute. It was feared that during the twenty years they had been lost, their heads had been too much affected by time to stand much from the drumsticks.

There is one big bass drum and six smaller ones, from which it appears that British regiments have more tympanum equipment than American regiments. It was in 1914 that the Gordons landed at Ostend, presumably fancying that they would have some few hours to look around and accustom themselves to the task they knew was ahead of them. Something, however, had to be done right off and they raced out of the town to get in touch with the enemy and avoid capture.

As they ran they threw into an Ostend police station the seven drums which they saw would be a handicap to any serious business and there the seven remailed until the armistice, when the Germans gathered them up and took them back to Berlin with them. By invitation Ian Hamilton, Gordon colonel, visited Berlin the other day and at a parade at the Malplaquet barracks the drums were handed back to him. German sailors carried them ashore when he landed at Southampton and he took them by train to Aldershot where there was more parading and edifying speech-making and the reading of a special message from President Hindenburg to the effect that "a very old soldier has much pleasure in sending back their drums" to the present young men of the Gordons, and the band struck up and the trophies were borne away in tri umph. Their ultimate deposit in the Edinburgh war memorial is favored

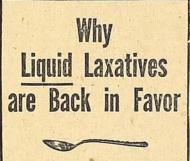

"I should never have asked for the return of anything captured in wars," says Hamilton, but that does not im ply that he would not accept captured trophies, if offered. On either side there was no hesitancy about "asking" after our war between 'he states. Captured flags and various equipment preserved at the capitals of individual states were exchanged during a long term of years. Once President Cleveland sought also to return to the state capitals of the South a lot of trophies preserved at Washington. So great an outcry arose that he abandoned the plan, but in more gracious years much later the return was made.

Probably this restoration of drums is only an early instance among European enemies of many interchanges of a kind with which we became so familiar in former years. after we had begun to realize that the "war is over."-St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Whose Fault?

When a Child Won't Study

"Kept after school!" And it isn't the child's fault, or the teacher's. His mother is to blame. How can a boy get his lessons when his senses are dulled day after day by dosing with sickening purgatives? When a child's bowels are stagnant they need help, of course. But not some drastic drug to upset the stomach, perhaps weaken the entire system; perhaps weaken the entire system; laxative action comes from senna. or form the laxative habit. On the right, parents will find a happy solution of this problem:

| Parents are urged to use just pure California Syrup of Figs. Be sure bottle says 'California'.

Here's a boy who gets good marks, has time and energy for play. He is never ill, hardly ever has so much as a cold. When he does show any symptoms of being sluggish, his mother knows just what to do. She gives him a little California Syrup of Figs—and that is all. It's a natural, fruity laxative that is agreeable to take, and its gentle laxative action comes from synna.

Then It's Reality Romance remains romance so long as it is of no consequence.

"...and it was all so simple when I found out my trouble. My physician said I had no organic disease, but I did have what is so commonly and truthfully called a low percentage of hemo-glo-bin in the blood. "The reasonableness of one of the S.S.S. ads caused me to think that S.S.S. Tonic was just what I needed for my let-down feeling, pimply skin and low resistance. I wanted more strength and a clear skin. "It didn't take S.S.S. very long to get my blood back up to normal—and as my strength and energy returned my skin cleared up."

If your condition suggests a tonic of this kind, try S.S.S. It is not just a so-called tonic but a tonic specially designed to stimulate gastric secretions, and also having the mineral elements so very, very necessary in rebuilding the oxygen-carrying hemo-glo-bin of the blood. S.S.S. value has been proven by generations of use, as well as by modern scientific appraisal. Sold by all drug stores...in two convenient sizes...the larger is more economical.

The public is fast returning to the use of liquid laxatives. People have learned that the right dose of a properly prepared liquid laxative will bring a perfect movement without any discomfort at the time, or after.
