Andrew Smith

Andrew Smith, age 72 years, eight months and one day, passed away Wednesday, December 5, at his home in Grant township. His failing health for the last year had terminated in a serious illness of seven months.

Andrew Stephen Smith was born April 4, 1862, near Burford, Ontario, Canada, the son of Joseph and Aurilla Smith. He was the second youngest of eleven children. When he was three years of age the family moved to the then wilds of northeastern Michigan and settled on the family homestead in Tawas township, where he grew to young manhood. On April 17, 1887, he was united in marriage to Aramantia Emeline Brinnell of Reese, Michigan, and they came to make their home in Tawas township. On February 22, 1906, they moved to their present home in Grant township where they have since resided. Eleven children were born to them, of whom two died in infancy.

THREE OSCODA
FISHERMEN HAVE NARROW ESCAPE

Trio Is Forced To Ground
Boat In Raging Blizzard
And Wade Ashore

Three Oscoda fishermen, Joseph and George Fletcher and Levi La-londe, caught on Lake Huron Monday, December 19, in a howling blizzard, were forced to run their boat aground about six miles south of Oscoda and wade ashore, breaking ice and fighting their way against the gale for half a mile. They suffered no serious effects as the result of their hours of exposure, however.

Their boat, one of a fleet of ten from Oscoda which was caught in Monday's storm, failing to reach port, a searching party was sent out to comb the shore south of Oscoda and give what aid they could. The party met the three men walking toward home, led by Ray Colbath, Oscoda.

For a time fears had been felt for the safety of the crew of another of the boats, but they returned to port safely just as a party was about to start out to search for them. All the other boats were reported safe.

lean Muir Heads All Star
Cast In Dynamic Drama
"Desirable," Warner Bros.' dynamic and colorful drama of Broadway's theatrical life and its contact with New York's social set, comes to the family Theatre, East Tawas, on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, December 16-17-18, with an all-star cast headed by Jean Muir, George Brent, Verree Teasdale and John Halliday.

The picture, based on the story by the famous magazine writer, Mary McCall, Jr., is filled with highly dramatic and intensely emotional situations, with rapier-like dialogue and a climactic clash between a woman of the world and her sophisticated daughter that fairly takes the breath.

Miss Muir is given the opportunity to blossom out in gorgeous costumes as well as to display her histrionic talent in the stormy and intensely emotional scenes of this production.

George Brent has the role of the lover to whom the girl eventually turns after she breaks her betrothal to a blue blooded aristocrat whose family is shocked at her frank and unconventional ways.

Davis Warns Japan Against Scrapping Naval Treaty—Peaceful Agreement for Saar Plebiscite—Moley and Richberg to Industrialists.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© by Western Newspaper Union.

NORMAN H. DAVIS, American ambassador-at-large and our chief representative in the naval limitation conversations that have been going on in London, has given plain warning to Japan that if that nation insists on scrapping the Washington naval treaty, security will be endangered, suspicion created and the world forced into a costly naval construction race. Mr. Davis was addressing the American Correspondents' association in London, but his words were meant for all the world to hear, and as his speech was the first comprehensive statement of the American position since the opening of the conversations, it was regarded as of the greatest importance. He also announced, for the first time, that President Roosevelt has proposed "a substantial all-around reduction in naval armaments."

Mr. Davis said that, since no agreement for armament reduction has been reached, the United States advocates the continuance of the Washington and London treaties with their assurance of "equality of security." Asserting that the Washington pact put an end to a ruinous naval race and established "a sound basis for peace in the Pacific and the Far East," he continued:

"Only by maintenance of the system of equality of security, with proportionate reductions downward of naval strength if possible, can there be maintained the substantial foundation for security and peace which has thus been laid."

"Abandonment now of the principles involved would lead to conditions of insecurity, of international suspicion, and of costly competition, with no real advantage to any nation."

Unofficially, it is said that when Japan gives formal notice that she is denouncing the Washington treaty, probably on December 20, the United States will immediately withdraw from the discussions in London. Officials in Washington consider that to continue the conversations would be tantamount to acquiescence to Japan's demand for modification of the ratios on which the treaty is based.

No more than any other nation does the United States wish to see the revival of the race in naval construction, but the government will not tolerate the decline of our navy to a subordinate place. Recent utterances of cabinet members and of congressmen who especially have to do with naval affairs make this plain.

In his annual report to the President, Secretary of the Navy Swanson says that although the United States may reduce its naval strength proportionately with other powers, it is imperative that a navy second to none be maintained. He warns also of the dangerous shortage of personnel in the navy, saying that "ships are valueless unless manned by adequate crews of trained, experienced officers and men."

THE government of Yugoslavia has decided to expel all the 27,000 Hungarians now living in that country. The process will be gradual but relentless. Already more than 2,000 have been deported and more are being sent away daily. Hungary called the action of Yugoslavia to the attention of the League of Nations.

PEACEFUL solution of the Saar plebiscite problem seemed assured when the council of the League of Nations unanimously and gladly adopted the report of the Saar committee embodying the Franco-German agreement for payment for the mines in case the region votes to return to the reich. Leading up to this settlement were two announcements of utmost importance. First, Foreign Minister Pierre Laval of France promised that French troops would make no attempt to enter the Saar territory before or during the vote on January 13. "I desire to announce," said he "that France will not participate in any international force which it may be found necessary to send into the Saar. We cannot participate in such a force because Germany cannot participate."

Then Capt. Anthony Eden, British lord privy seal, told the council that Great Britain would contribute troops to the proposed international force, provided Chancellor Hitler of Germany were willing that such an army should be sent into the territory. When Berlin was informed of this, a foreign office spokesman announced that Hitler's government would raise no objections to the plan.

All this was in effect a victory for the policies of Col. Geoffrey G. Knox, the league commissioner of the Saar, for he has long advocated the creation of an international police force for the territory.

Delegates of Italy and Czechoslovakia declared their countries would send troops, and Maxim Litvinov, Soviet foreign commissar, said he believed Russia would be willing to supply a part of the league force.

N. H. Davis

DISPATCHES from Warsaw said the Poles were amazed and alarmed by the Franco-German agreement because they feared the understanding between those two nations would be extended to include Great Britain and Italy. The foreign office hinted that in that case Poland's relations with Russia might be made closer. Poland resents being left out in the cold, for she is determined to be recognized as one of the great powers, and to play her part in the stabilization of peace in Europe.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT returned from Warm Springs to his reconditioned executive offices in Washington with the greater part of his winter program completed. It will be presented to congress in his annual message on January 3. The major items have to do with expansion of the public works administration to provide work relief, revision of the NRA and the AAA, extension of power developments, social security insurance and low cost housing, and the paring down of the budget.

MEMBERS of the Mid-Continent Reclamation association, representing 19 states, met in Chicago and perfected plans for a soil erosion and flood control program, to cost $900,000,000, which the association will recommend to the federal government with a request for a survey to determine its practicability. The plan, which was developed by A. B. Hulit of Chicago, involves the construction of canals and dams over an area extending from northern North Dakota through Texas to control flood waters originating on the eastern slopes of the Rocky mountains.

INTERESTING statements were made to the American Congress of Industry in New York by two of the President's closest advisers, Raymond Moley and Donald Richberg, director of the national emergency council. Professor Moley declared there is no workable substitute for the present capitalistic economic system.

Donald Richberg

"Basically," he said, "the New Deal was an effort to save capitalism and, by spreading the range of opportunity under it, to enable the average man to regain a measure of control over the conditions under which he lived. It seemed to me in 1933, as it seems to me now, that this effort to save capitalism was wise and just."

"By no stretch of the imagination could the vote of November, 1932, have been interpreted as a mandate for the abandonment of the capitalistic system. Finally, even had there been such a mandate, there was and is no workable substitute for our present system."

Moley expressed much optimism regarding business. He told the industrialists, in effect, that they need have no fear of any radical change in the present economic and social order, that industry was needed to stimulate trade, bring about recovery, and that in the last analysis it would be the business men who would distribute the wealth of the nation.

Mr. Richberg admitted the NRA had not achieved all its aims in its effort to bring about industrial self-government, but insisted that its fundamental principles must be preserved in permanent legislation for codes of fair competition.

He warned the manufacturers that the permanent law must be written in co-operation with labor and consumers, as well as private business and government, so that there should be neither work-consumer regimentation by business nor business regimentation by government.

He hinted that if employers consented to legal restriction in return for increased power under the codes, organized labor would be called upon to do likewise in submitting to legislative control.

Organized labor was soundly berated by C. L. Bardo, president of the National Association of Manufacturers. He said its contribution to national recovery had been "the most widespread inauguration of strikes, coercion, intimidation, and violence that the United States has ever seen, as evidenced by strikes in Minneapolis, Cleveland, textile industries, and the general strike at San Francisco."

Bardo pledged the united opposition of the National Association of Manufacturers to the efforts of the American Federation of Labor to obtain through congress legislation imposing a 30-hour week on industry, or any other effort to "fix a rigid and arbitrary work week for all industry."

Industry's platform for recovery, which was proposed at a meeting of the national industrial council, urging return to the gold standard, a balanced budget, and other orthodox economic measures, was adopted.

LORD RIDDELL, who during the World war was Lloyd George's chief liaison officer with the press of the world, is dead in London. He gained fame and great wealth as a newspaper publisher. As a reward for his war work Riddell was made a peer in 1918. His voice over the telephone carried the first news to England of the signing of the Versailles treaty. For some time after the war he continued to be a friend and confidant of Lloyd George. Later there were political differences, but while the close liaison ceased the two men never ceased to be friends. Lord Riddell leaves no heir and the title expires with him.

CENTRAL, western and northern sections of Honduras were devastated by a series of earthquake shocks continuing through two days. The extent of the disaster is unknown at this writing for all communication systems were crippled, but it was reported that at least three towns of considerable size, Copas, Cabanas and Santa Rita, were nearly destroyed.

PRESIDENT MUSTAPHA KEMAL of Turkey has become the idol of all the women of his nation, for, after giving them such social rights as emancipation from the harem, he has given them political rights. At his instance the national assembly unanimously decided that any Turkish woman more than thirty years old is eligible to election to the chamber of deputies, and that all women over twenty-two years of age can vote in the national elections. Thousands of women telegraphed their "deepest gratitude" to Kemal.

SERGEI KIROV, one of the most prominent members of the Russian Communist party's political bureau, was assassinated in Leningrad, and as he was a close associate of Stalin his death was the occasion of public mourning. The government announced that the assassin was Leonid Nicoloff and that he "was sent by the enemies of the working class." But it appears there is something more to the event than a mere murder.

Sergei Kirov

A dispatch from Warsaw said ten Red army officers had been executed as the result of a plot to assassinate all Soviet leaders at the same time.

The Moscow government denied this story, but at the same time it was putting under arrest scores of White Guards, enemies of the Soviet regime, accusing them of "terroristic action." They were tried by a military collegium of the Supreme court and sixty-six of them, including one woman, were found guilty and immediately executed.

The names of those executed were officially announced. Among them apparently were none of the leaders who had figured prominently with the White armies during the civil warfare following the Bolshevik revolution. Nor were there any names of men who have had national prominence subsequently in Russia.

The executions were carried out while Kirov's body was being cremated. He was given a state funeral and his ashes were placed in the Communists' Valhalla beside the wall of the Kremlin where rest the remains of Lenin, John Reed and other heroes of the Red revolution.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S aviation commission, having concluded its hearings on national defense began drafting its report, and it was authoritatively said in Washington that, if congress approves of its recommendations, government airplanes will surely be operating in a new transoceanic service. Details were being worked out, and it seemed likely the commission would adopt the $17,000,000 plan approved by Ewing Y. Mitchell, assistant secretary of commerce, and the national advisory committee for aeronautics. That plan calls for two huge Zeppelin type airships and one smaller metal clad craft along with necessary modern landing equipment.

The commission also will ask congress in its February report to create a permanent federal agency with supervisory control over all civil aviation. This would comprise five to seven members.

BUSINESS leaders of the country who are members of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States demand a reform of the government's budgetary methods. Through a referendum they have given approval to thirteen proposals to this end.

One step recommended was "a more active centralized administrative control of expenditures." This would be obtained by "broadening the executive allotment system of funds so as to include all expenditures, ordinary and emergency, and strengthening it so as to avoid the necessity of deficiency appropriations."

This recommendation for broader control by the administrative branch of the government also suggested that "when feasible" expenditures be reduced below appropriations.

IN LINE with this budget "revolt" is the opposition the business men are demonstrating to the ten billion dollar war relief program proposed to the President by his brain trust advisers.

As outlined by Secretary of the Interior Ickes and Relief Administrator Hopkins this is an undertaking to terminate federal direct relief and put all able bodied unemployed persons at work on government financed projects, while the states continue to afford relief to those persons not able to work.

HOW TO SHOOT

By Bob Nichols

Shooting Editor, Field and Stream

THE shot that is missed more often than any other shot in hunting is the fast-flying overhead shot coming in directly over you. This is the shot that the duck hunter encounters frequently, although it does not present itself very often in upland hunting. When such a chance does present itself, however, what do you do to score a hit?

For years, as a boy, I wasted shell after shell trying to connect with fast-flying ducks coming in directly overhead. Sometimes they would not be more than thirty yards high. Invariably I would score a miss on them coming in. Not a few of the times I would then turn around and drop the bird going away. I couldn't understand why I was missing the incomers.

Older heads than mine were bothered by the same puzzling shot. One old duck hunter—and a very successful hunter—he was, too—once told me that it was useless trying to kill a duck coming in on this kind of shot. His explanation was that the shot simply would not penetrate to the bird's vitals shooting crosswise through the duck's heavy breast feathers. "Let 'em pass," he counseled me, "and shoot into 'em from behind, the way their feathers lay, and you'll kill 'em every shot."

This didn't sound reasonable to me. I had a very wholesome respect for the speed and penetrating power of shotgun pellets at 30 to 45 yard range.

One day, sitting in a cornshock blind I had rigged up for myself, in came a flock of about a dozen blue-wing teal. They were coming straight over me at about 35 yards high, and they were coming fast. My concealment was so constructed that I knew I would never be able to get out of it in time to shoot at them going away behind me. As they whirled into me I pulled up on the leader, gave him what I thought was the proper lead, and fired. What happened so amazed me that I forgot to shoot the second barrel. I had shot at the leader—and killed the last bird in the flock! Which meant that I had shot behind the bird I pulled on and missed it by a good six feet.

When I examined the dead bird I found its breast—right where its feathering was the heaviest—was neatly punctured by four 4's. So—I reasoned—my old advisor was wrong. And if No. 4's would kill through the breast feathers of a teal, they would do the same thing to a mallard, or even a goose. And the whole trouble was that I wasn't leading my overhead incoming shots enough. I couldn't figure out why such a big lead was necessary on this type of shot. All I knew was that you had to double your lead, and that whenever you did it this way you scored. I had proved it. That was enough. But it wasn't until some years later that I arrived at the correct explanation. Here it is:

On the overhead incoming shoot you of course can't see your target at the instant you pull the trigger. You "bury" the target, as the saying goes. But—the instant your eyes lose sight of the target your hands and arms unconsciously stop the swing of your gun. The result is that, instead of shooting ahead of the target with the proper killing lead, you actually shoot almost at the target, and by the time the shot charge gets up there the duck has already passed the danger point and the charge tears a large hole in the air behind him.

A good rule to follow on this type of shot is to pull dead on the incoming duck and then, just at the instant of firing, swiftly jump the muzzle up over the target so that it will seem to be shooting at a point about twice as far in front of the target as would seem necessary. In other words, try to "double your lead"—a very good rough estimate of what it seems you are doing when you do it correctly. Try this—see how readily it solves the "puzzle!"

Man's Organic Make-Up

Is Likened to an Army

Comparing the life of man to a military maneuver, Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, of the Smithsonian Institution, believes each organ and each part of the body has its own growth curve.

This deduction, it was said, arises from extensive studies of living material and great accumulations of human skeletal material by the institution's division of physical anthropology.

It is thought that each person, as far as growth curves are concerned, is an aggregation of thousands of dependent, yet fairly independent individuals. The true growth curve of an individual, the institution pointed out, is a recent determination.

Doctor Hrdlicka's findings revealed that each bone, each feature, the brain, and all other organs progress from birth to death with a regular curve, and that each curve is specific for a certain part or organ.

Thus, it was explained, life for such a complex organism as man is roughly analogous to a highly complicated colony of social insects, or to a military maneuver where thousands of different movements must be co-ordinated in one general movement at all times, although each soldier retains a certain amount of individuality.

Fundamental similarity of organ growth curves, Doctor Hrdlicka said, is proved by the fact that they do not differ greatly in any race.

Hemp Is No Longer Chief of Rope-Making Materials

Product of Philippines Is Now Mainly Used.

Washington.—Important adjuncts of the day-to-day round of modern civilization are the various fibers of the world used in making rope, according to the National Geographic society.

"Whether you are a schoolgirl, skipping rope, a cowboy, lassoing cattle, a painter, standing on a scaffolding, a motorist, whose car is being towed, a housewife, hanging a clothesline, or a yachtsman, reefing a mainsail, you are dependent on rope for the accomplishment of some daily task."

"Once 'rope' and 'hemp' were synonymous, but today very little rope is made of hemp. Abaca, a fiber grown in the Philippines, has all but shouldered hemp out of the rope industry. But because of old traditions in rope making, and an early error, abaca is spoken of in the cordage trade as 'Manila hemp.'"

First Used in China.

"If the thread of the story of rope—and first hemp—is traced back far enough, it will lead to the court of Shen Nung, emperor of China 2,700 years before Christ. He taught his subjects to grow 'ma' (hemp), a plant of both male and female forms, used for making hempen cloth. In the Eighth century India knew the hemp plant principally as a source of drugs. Neither the Hebrews nor the Egyptians were familiar with it; but during medieval times it was found in northern Africa. Migrant civilizations introduced hemp into Europe about 1500 B. C., but no commercial importance was attached to the European plants until the French imported Chinese hemp centuries later. Italy turned its attention to hemp growing, and today the highest-priced hemp in the markets of either Europe or America is grown there. South America received its first plants from Spain."

"New England and Virginia cultivated hemp in early Colonial days. The southern crop flourished and, in 1802, the blue grass region of Kentucky supported two extensive ropewalks (factories for making rope). During the Nineteenth century Kentucky led the United States in the production of hemp."

"By 1850 England was selling a better rope for marine purposes than could be made in the United States. American manufacturers began to take greater interest in the 'hemp of Manila' used by the British. That Philippine product abaca, it was found, is derived from a plant of the banana family. It was grown a considerable distance from Manila, but was taken there for export. American cordage makers were adaptable enough to begin importing the new fiber, and soon American made abaca rope took its place among the best rope in the world. True hemp—the kind that had been grown in Kentucky—then found its greatest level of usefulness in commercial twines.

Jute Also Ousts Hemp.

"Although the rugged, salt-water-resisting abaca fiber proved to be the best for making rope, it was not the most serious competitor of true hemp. Jute, India's contribution to the world's fibers has completely ousted hemp from many of its former uses. It is the cheapest and most easily spun of any of the soft fibers and is woven into sacks for coffee, sugar and grain, and covering for cotton bales and packages of merchandise in transit. Weaker and less durable than any of the important textile fibers, it is less satisfactory than hemp for twine, carpet warp, or furniture webbing.

"Cotton, as well as jute, has elbowed hemp products from the market. As in the case of jute, however, cotton is neither so strong nor so durable as hemp twine. Nevertheless, twine-making by cotton mills is an important secondary industry, the value of which is written in millions of dollars each year."

"Any geographic consideration of rope must not overlook sisal and henequin. They are obtained from the leaves of two closely related but distinct plant species originating in the Yucatan peninsula. Over a half-million acres in Mexico, and other countries of the peninsula, are planted with henequin, but sisal is cultivated there today only to a limited extent. The great sisal-producing regions are Netherland India and British East Africa. Henequin and sisal are used in the manufacture of binder twine, other hard fiber twines, and ropes of small diameter."

Secret Service Asks for Additional Men

Growth of Counterfeiting Is Swamping Department.

Washington.—Increase in the United States secret service force to combat a wave of counterfeiting may be sought in the next session of congress.

The present force of only 172 secret service men, whose principal duty is to curb counterfeiting, has found it difficult to cope with the rising flood of spurious coins and bills. The fake money is being pushed into circulation by criminals finding other avenues of crime closing.

Congress has recently ignored treasury requests for a larger secret service, but is expected to be more receptive this year in view of secret service figures showing the counterfeiting rise.

Counterfeiting has not reached alarming proportions, but treasury officials are anxious to hold it down to the smallest possible figure. In the peak year of counterfeiting ending June 30, 1933, less than a million dollars in spurious money was picked up.

The growth of counterfeiting over the depression years is shown in these secret service statistics.

Year ending	Counterfeited	Arrests
June 30	seized	made
1929	$59,078	686
1930	391,958	978
1931	540,538	1,583
1932	921,499	2,569

The figures indicated both increased activity by the secret service and increased counterfeiting. Most arrests have resulted in convictions. More than half of the counterfeit money is seized before it gets to the public. Secret service agents claim prohibition repeal has increased manufacture.

It is believed that Representative Joseph W. Byrns of Tennessee will be elected speaker of the house when congress assembles in January. This is his latest portrait.

Madras Candidates Leave Fate to Gods

Madras.—To avoid the trouble and expense of a local municipal council election, candidates at Kumbakonam let their gods select who should serve. They gathered at the temple and cast lots before the deities. As a result, twenty-one of thirty-two members were returned unopposed.

Other voters wished to choose candidates by ballot, but could do nothing as the temple procedure was declared to be a "clear expression of the divine will."

Devotion of Man and Dog Ruled Superior to Law

New York.—The age-old devotion existing between man and dog was placed higher than law in a Supreme court decision uniting a faithful wolfhound with his master.

A receiver sought to collect $30,219 from George de Maziuff, art dealer, to satisfy a judgment. "Bozzy," the wolfhound, was listed for seizure with numerous paintings, antiques and objects of art.

De Maziuff appealed to the court. "I am a bachelor, living alone," he said. "The dog has been my constant companion for nine years and has shared my prosperity and adversity with me. An attempt is made to take my faithful pet away from me."

Justice Edward J. McGoldrick said the receiver would take possession of all De Maziuff's belongings except the dog.

"The old dog has no value in the market," the justice ruled. "It is an Alan, and that breed is known as a one-man dog. There are many well-authenticated stories of their voluntary starvation on the master's grave."

Uses Alarm Clock to Save Fines for Parking

Boston.—Boston has a new "no-fix" parking law. Under it the motorist who misparks his car automatically pays a $3 fine. But Sam Curtis has found a way to beat the law. Here's how:

Outside his radio school a car may be legally parked for one hour at a time. When his car has been parked 50 minutes an alarm clock rings and Sam moves the machine to a new location nearby, where it may legally remain for another hour.

Indians Prove Selves Champion Potato Pickers

Augusta, Maine.—Although the Indians are reputed to have sold their birthright for jugs of "firewater," and ended up by playing "pro" football, there is still one job at which the red man can take on all comers. Members of the Tobique tribe from Canada are the pick of the Aroostook potato pickers. The record for fast picking, held by one of the Indians, is 168 barrels a day. The picker received $8.40, plus meals.

Flies Homemade Plane on Tiny Supply of Gas

Philadelphia.—A miniature plane that carries one and one-third ounces of gasoline in its tiny tank was built and flown successfully here by Paul Karnow, eighteen years old, during his spare time.

The plane has a 6-foot 4-inch wing spread and is powered by a motor generating one-fifth horse power.

In Rumania

Wedding Procession in Rural Rumania.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

IN RUMANIA, east and west are so interwoven that it is difficult to determine where one leaves off and the other begins.

Some historians attribute the strange blending of the Orient and the Occident within the Rumanian borders to countless invasions. Each invader, whether Roman, Hun, or Turk, left his strong imprint on the nature of the people.

Though Paris may be France, Bucharest is hardly Rumania. This capital has almost nothing in common with the country. It is a gay, cosmopolitan city, often, if not aptly, called the Little Paris of the Balkans.

Its streets are crowded with smartly dressed women, officers resplendent in their colorful uniforms and gold braid, and men and women of the foreign colonies, who contrast strikingly with peasants in native dresses and gypsies in rags and tatters. Its restaurants and coffee houses, always famous for good food, are abuzz with the latest political rumors and gossip.

The opening, in the autumn, of parliament by the king is a brilliant event. For several blocks and for hours the palace guards in their bright uniforms, high patent leather jack boots, shining helmets with white horsehair plumes, stand smartly at attention until the members of parliament, the diplomatic corps, the army generals, and the king have passed.

The great moments are the arrival and the departure of the king, in an open landau. Footmen in satin breeches, long coats of brocade, and three-cornered hats, and a ferocious coachman cracking his whip at six milk-white or coal-black stallions, on whose backs ride postillions in bright red hunting costumes, add to the striking medieval picture.

Sleighride in Bucharest.

It is fun in winter to hire an open sleigh drawn by horses bedecked with bells and red ribbons, and driven by a coachman in a high fur caucula (cachoula), a tall astrakhan cap, long velvet coat, and wide girdle of metal. There are still a few coachmen living in Bucharest who belong to a curious alien sect called Scapiti, now almost extinct. The men were allowed to marry, but at the birth of the first child they were made sterile. One sees them often driving open carriages. They are fat and their skin is like yellow parchment.

The wide avenue leading up to the Arc de Triomphe, past a pretty little race course and the golf links of the Country club, is a miniature suggestion of the Champs Elysees in the French capital. Many stately palaces and homes line its streets. Rumania has gone modern in her new houses and apartments.

There is much music other than in the cafes. Bucharest boasts of rather good opera during the winter and a really fine symphony orchestra plays modern music. The National temple is well patronized and plays by Rumanian and foreign authors are given. Once ornate, the building is now shabby, although an air of faded elegance still pervades the place.

The parliament buildings and the Rumanian Orthodox church stand on the summit of the only hill in Bucharest. Bucharest is a city of churches. From everywhere can be seen rising the rounded domes of the Rumanian Orthodox church. The people are religious, but matter-of-fact about it. Despite the Slavic influence, there is no mysticism here. Religion is simply a part of everyday life. The church is like a protective father, and they respond with simple faith.

Down by the banks of the Dambovita, which Eddie Cantor made famous in one of his songs, is the great market, where flowers, fruit, food, household goods, and Rumanian handicrafts are sold in the open booths of peasants and petty tradespeople. Because so many peasants are unable to read, signs on many stores and shops are illustrated with pictures of the articles for sale within.

Among the Peasants.

Around Bucharest the country is not unlike the agricultural state of Kansas. Here is a tremendous wheat and corn region. Visitors enjoy going through the villages in this fertile district. Crazy little Rube Goldberg houses, whose white-washed walls are painted in soft pastel shades and decorated with borders of flowers or animals, present an amusingly shaky aspect along the streets. Rumania is one of the few countries now left in Europe whose peasants usually dress in native costume.

The Rumanian peasant is lovable. Always gracious, courteous, and good-natured, he is industrious, yet somewhat inefficient. He works hard in his fields and forest, but always in a primitive manner, using the crude tools of his forefathers.

Many residents of Bucharest spend their summers in Predeal, at the top of the Carpathian Pass, on the boundary line between the "Old Kingdom" and Transylvania. During their holidays they have many opportunities to observe the ancient methods of work followed by the peasants.

One is particularly impressed with the native manner of washing clothes. The laundress builds a fire in the yard beneath a large iron pot, in which she puts the clothes to boil. Then, in a large wooden trough hewn from a log, she rubs and washes the garments with her hands, without even the aid of a washboard. Next, she wrings out the heavy linen with her own hands. Back-breaking work it is, but the clothes emerge spotlessly white.

Gypsies Are Numerous.

In the Danube Delta country, during the spring and summer, many gypsy camps are found. The gypsies carve out of wood huge water troughs, all variety and manner of cooking utensils, washing equipment, etc. With their wild animal eyes, scraggly black locks, wretchedly dirty, and clad in rags, gypsies are a proof of the disillusionment of reality.

Who has not conjured up some gay, romantic picture of gypsy life from afar? Yet how distressing when one meets it at close quarters! But gypsy music is beautiful. Almost at every street corner in Bucharest one encounters an urchin with his violin, ready to play for a few lei.

Winters in Bucharest are bitterly cold. Often one is distressed to see gypsy boys, half naked and shivering, begging at the street corners.

The delta country covers a tremendous area spreading between the three branches of the Danube. Most important of Danube channels is the Sulina, which carries most of the river traffic coming down from far-off Germany, Austria, Hungary, Yugoslavia, and Czechoslovakia.

The European commission of the Danube, which assures free navigation of the river, struggles constantly to keep the silt, washed down from half of Europe, from clogging up this artery to the Black sea.

On the Danube's banks are two important ports, Galati and Braila, which receive vessels of ocean draft. Principal exports are wheat, corn, barley, lumber and some oil.

Valcov Is Interesting.

Valcov, Rumania, is more Russian than Russia. The men all wear full beards and are dressed in long velvet coats buttoned very smartly up the front, while the women in their full skirts and heads covered with bright scarfs, make a gay picture. Children are everywhere chewing sunflower seeds, the Russian substitute for gum and peanuts.

Valcov is like a tiny Venice, with its canals serving as main thoroughfares through the town. Both in the fishermen's houses and in the market places, the traveler always finds at least one lovely lily.

Entering first an immense storage building, one sees where the fish are cleaned, sorted, packed in ice for shipment to Bucharest and other consuming centers, and smoked or salted for export. There is a great variety of salt-and-fresh-water fish, including some strange Danubian species. At the back of the storage house is a deep cave topped by an earthen mound, where hundreds of tons of ice, cut from the river and canals in winter, are stored against the summer heat.

Crossing the main canal by an arched wooden bridge, which recalls the Rialto, the traveler arrives at the large open market. Here the fishermen bring their daily catch to be sold under the supervision of the state fisheries. They go out in groups of five or six to each sturdy boat made water-tight and blackened by tar. The boats set out in time to reach the fishing grounds by daylight; the fishermen say they must catch the wary sturgeon while she is still asleep.

The fishing ground varies with the seasons; sometimes it is the Black sea and sometimes the Danube and the channels of the delta, where the sturgeon come to spawn. The boats return about noon, are unloaded, the fish weighed, and the caviar extracted.

The sturgeon are put up for auction and the buyers must be very expert to judge the amount of caviar in the fish before it is opened. These were the most famous and richest of Russia's caviar fisheries before Bessarabia became a component part of Rumania in 1918.

Just a Little Smile

IGNORANCE IS BLISS

At one golf course there had been some talk of standardizing tips to caddies, and one day the secretary explained his ideas to a group of members.

"We feel," he said, "that a caddy should not receive a tip of more than one shilling and sixpence per round. You'll agree that's reasonable."

They did agree, all except one Aberdonian, who, looking up with an expression of innocence, said, "Excuse me, Mr. Secretary, but what is a tip?"—Tid-Bits.

Literary Problem

Mrs. Nyland faces a problem of parental responsibility, but the more she ponders it the less possible of solution it appears.

For years she had read to her daughter, Nancy, from juvenile books befitting her years, but one day, when the girl had reached the age of five, she suddenly interrupted the reading with:

"I'm tired of those books, mummy. All the girls in it are so goody-goody."

Mrs. Nyland was too shocked to make a suitable retort. But she admits that the younger generation is getting new ideas, whether from their elders, the movies, or what not.—New York Sun.

Progress

"Are you taking any interest in the war on crime?"

"A great interest," said Senator Sorghum. "Of course, we can't kill off all the gangsters out home. But we're at least taking steps to prevent so many of them from being elected to office."

Sweeping

Full of enthusiasm, she had gone in for politics and was out of the house most of the day. The other night she returned at nine o'clock and sank into an armchair.

"Everything's grand," she said. "We're going to sweep the country."

Her husband looked around wearily and said: "Why not start with the dining room?"

IT SOMETIMES HAPPENS

"That fellow's honeymoon was completely spoiled by a woman."

"Some girl he'd jilted, I suppose?"

"No, the one he'd married."

Daddy's Cranium

The young hopeful of a suburban family objected strenuously to having his hair washed. He argued it was unnecessary and a great nuisance to his mother as well as himself. It was pointed out by his elders that grown-ups as well as children were subjected to the inconvenience.

"Daddy isn't," was the quick retort. "He has no hair, only head."—New York Sun.

Considerate Hospitality

"Is it considerate for a lady who has sent out invitations to remain absent from her own reception?"

"Perfectly proper," answered Miss Cayenne. "It prevents any embarrassment if the guests feel like criticizing the furniture and the house-keeping."

Complete Replacement

Blinks—I'll soon have a new car. Jinks—You're lucky.

Blinks—Hardly. You see I'm simply kept busy replacing the worn-out parts on the old one, and a couple more bumps and it will even have the streamline effect.

War Signal

Usher at wedding, to cold, dignified lady—Are you a friend of the groom?

The Lady—Indeed, no, I am the bride's mother.

MIXED

At a political gathering an orator waxed indignant and exclaimed: "To ridicule the idea is to follow the example of the camel, which buries its head in the sand when an enemy approaches."

The rival speaker rose and retorted: "Surely the gentleman, in giving utterance to this remark, must have meant to refer to the ostrich, which, in those circumstances, has a habit of putting its eye through a needle."—Ludlow Advertiser.

Value Received

"Politics causes a great deal of debate," said the plain citizen.

"Of course," answered Senator Sorghum. "There has to be a certain amount of brilliant oratory so as to make the campaign contributors feel that they're getting something for their money."

WILLING TO OBLIGE

The Traffic Cop—Stop! You ran over a man back at the crossing.

The Motorist—Well, what do you want me to do, turn around and run over him again?

Speed Regulation

"Has Crimson Gulch any speed regulations?"

"Yes," answered Cactus Joe. "When a suspicious stranger looms up we warn him to keep goin' and get out of town as fast as possible."

By-Products From Corn
From the kernels of corn are derived yeast, gluten, dry and wet starches. Dry starch is used in making textiles, paper, confectionery, explosives, adhesives, colors and fireworks. Sugar is derived from the wet starch for use in dietetics, brewing, alcohol, fermentations, etc. Also, corn oil, soap, glycerin, salad and other oils may be derived from the germ in the corn.

Flickers Eat Insects
Flickers feed almost entirely on grasshoppers and ants, the latter being their favorite food. The mother birds pick up hundreds of ants and feed them to the fledglings by regurgitation. The golden-winged woodpecker, or flicker, is indigenous to North America.

No Indian Name for America
There was no universal Indian name for America before Europeans gave it that name. The Indians were of many tribes and nations, speaking many languages. They had no idea of the extent of the two continents and most of them knew only a few of their neighboring tribes. Tribes had local names for the regions in which they lived, and often other tribes had other names for the same territory.

School Notes

High School

The date set for the declamatory contest is December 20th. Miss Worden, John Campbell, and Rev. Voss have kindly consented to act as the judges.

"It is the business of education to insist upon the school or the primary and most effective interest of social progress and reform in order that society may be awakened to realize what the school stands for, and aroused to the necessity of endowing the educator with sufficient equipment to properly perform his task."—John Dewey.

One reason why the schools find it difficult, under the present conditions, to secure enough money to maintain fair standards is the lowering of the primary school interest fund since 1929. The amounts sent to the schools of the state during the past five years are as follows: 1930-1931, $24,000,000; 1931-1932, $24,000,000; 1932-1933, $21,000,000; 1933-1934, $17,000,000; 1934-1935, $14,000,000. The amounts each district has received per pupil during these same years are: 1930-1931, $17.92; 1931-1932, $17.70; 1932-1933, $15.14; 1933-1934, $12.58; 1934-1935, $10.00.

School will close Friday, December 21, for the holiday vacation, and will resume Wednesday, January 2.

The year 1935 is the 300th anniversary of the American public high school. It was 300 years ago that the first American high school—the Boston Latin school—was founded. Now more than 6,000,000 pupils attend high school, and the number of public and private high schools now in the United States is more than 26,000.

SUCH IS LIFE—The Nest Eggs

Big Increase Seen in Mental Cases

Hospitalization Gains 100 Per Cent in 25 Years.

New York.—A 100 per cent increase in the number of mental cases brought under hospital care in the United States during the last twenty-five years is reported by the National Committee for Mental Hygiene in a review of its activities made public in connection with its twenty-fifth anniversary celebration.

According to the report, there were 159,096 patients in state hospitals in 1910, or 173 per 100,000 of the general population, as against 318,948, or 255 per 100,000, as shown by the latest census figures. During this period the population of the country has increased about a third. Thus, it is pointed out, while the ratio of patients to population is 50 per cent higher, their total number has doubled, increasing three times as fast as the general population.

This increase, the report explains, is chiefly due to the intensive development of treatment facilities which followed the campaign of institutional reform launched by the committee twenty-five years ago. It does not mean that the actual rate of mental diseases has increased in that proportion.

Public More Alert.

"A seeming paradox at once confronts us in any attempt to audit the effects of the mental hygiene movement upon the nation's mental health," the report states. "After twenty-five years of increasingly widespread activity in this field of public health, we actually find an increase of 100 per cent in mental cases as measured by the number of persons under treatment in mental hospitals."

"As a matter of fact," the report continues, "this increase is due, in large part, to the results of organized mental hygiene work during this period. Chief among these is the enormous increase in the provision of hospital facilities and a corresponding increase in the readiness of the public to take advantage of these facilities.

"Thanks to the stimulus of the mental hygiene movement and its educational influence, many thousands of hitherto untreated cases were brought to light, more and more of which were brought under treatment as hospitalization improved and the public attitude toward the subject changed from the hopelessness of the past to the confidence of the present."

Humanization Program.

When the national committee was organized in 1909, shortly after the publication of Clifford Beer's autobiography, "A Mind That Found Itself," its chief concern was to humanize the care of the insane, to eradicate the abuses, brutalities and neglect from which this class has traditionally suffered, to focus public attention on the need for reform, to hospitalize asylums, and to raise the standards of care in general.

There followed a general improvement and expression of institutional facilities throughout the country. New hospitals and new additions to existing hospitals were built in state after state, until today the number of hospital beds available for mental and nervous cases is equal to those of all other types of sickness combined.

"In the process," the report says, "the committee strove to remove the stigma associated with diseases of the mind from time immemorial, to spread newer and more hopeful conceptions of the nature of mental diseases and their curability, and to break down the isolation of state hospitals from the general stream of community life. Thanks to the work of mental hygiene agencies, public confidence in these institutions has greatly increased and with it public willingness to use them."

Trials of Animals in France

Of the 92 trials of animals held in the courts of France between 1120 and 1740, the longest and costliest one was started in St. Julian in 1445. It was brought by the citizens against a species of insect which they wanted banished from the town by judicial order. This trial, involving large lawyers' fees, numerous religious processions and other expensive ceremonies, lasted 42 years.—Collier's Weekly.

Fisherman's Tale; Stabbed by Ghost

Calcutta.—A fisherman is in the hospital with a serious wound which he says was inflicted by a ghost. His wife and sister-in-law died a year ago and since then, he says, he has seen their phantoms flitting about in the house. They have even spoken to him. One night the ghost of his sister-in-law appeared, blew out the light and then stabbed him in the neck. He is not expected to live.

Not Bullets, but Ballots

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

The problem of international peace seems nearer a solution. For years we have conscientiously endeavored to obtain peace by a negative process.

Some persons argue that only through an armed force can peace be secured. We have at last discovered that forcing a child to be silent when it cries because of pain does not end the trouble. The child may be quiet, but the insidious pain continues, unchecked.

We have tried to arrive at peace as did the old empire of China through a process of isolation. China built a wall high and thick to keep the enemy out, so we built walls about modern civilization to prevent bullets destroying us. These walls have been costly both to erect and keep in order. Particularly the military wall which has cost some nations an annual sum greater than its national debt. Then an economic wall was constructed which threatened to boycott any other nation which did not agree upon terms of international trade. Lastly, the social or racial wall prevented the possibility of mutual interest and understanding. Gradually, these walls are being torn down, and in place of them the spirit of "a desire to understand" prevails. When once we understand a person of another race or nation, barriers seem removed, and we have a basis for mutual agreement. If a Frenchman cannot speak English, and Englishmen cannot speak French, how can they understand one another? A universal language expressed in terms of good will is necessary if peace is to prevail.

This universal language cannot be achieved by force of arms. Public opinion expressed in its demand for peace is the sure way of achievement. Our ballot—an expression of public opinion—is the most powerful weapon we have. Do we honestly want peace? Do we want it badly enough to pay the price—not in terms of bloodshed, but in terms of "taking profits out of munitions"; in economic adjustments, and in overcoming national and racial jealousy?

Public opinion expressed in ballots and not bullets is the way out.

The Light Through the Translucent Hangings Filled the Room With a Rosy Glow.

THE color of light in a room is important to consider in interior decoration. It has little to do with the type of illumination, viz., electricity, gas, or oil, although the latter two are somewhat more yellow than is electricity. It has to do with the toning of whatever illuminant is used, even to the tempering, strengthening or coloring of the daylight and sunlight which comes in through windows and french doors.

Unadulterated sunlight is the light of all that is sought for radiance and for health. It can be tempered advantageously in some rare instances where a room is flooded with the stimulating rays, and both it and daylight can be toned to conform to the glow most wanted in a room. There are two ways of doing this. One is by the tone of light which filters through window draperies. The other is by the light passing through stained or colored glass.

Violet Light.

The latter was a style of some half century ago when houses frequently were fitted with violet colored window panes for the benefits, reputed to accrue to persons on whom the sunshine coming through such glass, would fall. Violet rays whether of the now famous ultra-violet ray variety, or the colored window glass type, have a health promoting reputation. However beneficial, the decorative effect of this light is far from pleasing as it nullifies the glowing tone of the sunlight. Sometimes stained glass in designs or in a single tone is hung in windows just for the splashes of color which percolate and fall ornamentally through it.

One of the easiest and most effective ways of toning light in the daytime is by using colored draperies at the windows. The material should be of the right texture to permit the light to come through it in glowing tones. One room comes to mind in which fine rose-colored percale is used with great effect. The windows of this bedroom have white ruffled pane curtains with the rose-colored outside hangings having a dotted rose-and-white border about four inches from the edges. The bedspread and shams match the draperies. Nothing could be more becoming than the light in this room, gay and beautiful.

Sunlight Simulated.

Another room with a northern exposure which I decorated has ruffled white pane curtains, with translucent yellow silk hangings matching the foundation of the bedspread, paneled in a richer deeper yellow corded to the lighter tone. It is amazing the sunny effect thus produced. One is scarcely aware that the sun never enters the room so yellow is the sunny atmosphere produced. Ordinary crepe or fine yellow percale would give nearly this same sunny simulation.

In the evening the color of the lamp shades must be relied upon to supply the mellow tinted light desired.

Traveling to the Moon

Assuming such a planetary journey possible, the time required would depend upon speed of course, says Pathfinder Magazine. Theoretically, a visitor from the earth traveling at an average of 100 miles per hour should arrive on the moon about the ninety-first day after leaving the earth—if the trip were timed so as to arrive when the surface of the moon would be closest to that of the earth (216,423 miles).

The little red house is pictured on the 1934 Christmas seals.

POULTRY

KEEP RECORDS OF FLOCK IS ADVISED

Best Way to Ascertain the Weak Points.

By Roy S. Dearstyne, Head of North Carolina State College Poultry Department WNU Service.

Poultrymen who keep records of their flocks will stand a better chance of making a profit in spite of high feed prices. With a well-kept record, the poultryman can find the weak points in his flock management when profits are low and thus determine what to do to remedy the situation.

It does not pay to save money by doling out small quantities of feed to the birds. Such practices will lower egg production, impair the vitality of the birds, and increase the mortality rate.

True, it is good policy to provide winter grazing in order to cut down on feed costs, but this is advisable because winter grazing is beneficial. Non-beneficial feeds should not be substituted for the higher priced feeds.

The extension service at State college is offering a complete system of record-keeping free to all poultrymen within the state. Record books will be sent to those who wish them. The books contain sheets in which monthly-month records can be kept.

If the poultrymen will send these sheets back to the college each month, poultry specialists will be glad to figure for them the following data: feed cost per dozen eggs, feed cost per bird, value of eggs produced, return above feed cost, mash and grain consumed, and other valuable pointers.

The record book also contains incubation and brooding record forms and an egg record sheet which should be of great advantage to the poultrymen.

Liberal Hopper Space

Favored by Poultrymen

To be successful with poultry the flock owner must pay close attention to details. Many farmers fail to obtain eggs during the winter either because their mash feeders are too small or because of failure to refill the feeders promptly when the supply has been exhausted. The mash feeders, says the Missouri Farmer, should be large enough to furnish one foot of feeding space for every five or six hens. Hens will eat mash more rapidly if the feeders are located in a well lighted portion of the house near enough to the floor to be easily accessible. However, it is not desirable to place the feeders less than 16 to 18 inches from the floor. Otherwise litter and dirt is likely to be kicked into the feed boxes by hens scratching on the floor.

Many poultrymen seem to doubt the advisability of feeding grain in troughs and continue to scatter grain in the litter to induce exercise. From the sanitary point of view it is obviously much better to feed grain in troughs.

If ample feeding space is provided so that all the hens can eat at one time they can get their fill of feed much more quickly at roosting time than when they are compelled to search for the grain by scratching in the litter.

Drafts Cause Discomfort

The average farm flock suffers from too much ventilation in cold weather, says a poultryman. Drafts cause the fowls serious discomfort. Sudden changes in temperature are harmful to laying hens and may reduce egg production considerably. Ventilation may be controlled by using a straw loft or installing a commercial or homemade ventilative system, or by careful regulation of window openings. Insulation and ventilation go hand in hand. A variety of good commercial insulating materials is sold by lumber dealers.

In the Poultry Yard

Green feed for poultry returns such big dividends that it should never be overlooked.

When eggs are packed for market they should be graded for size, color and inferior quality.

A pullet's heart beats 300 times a minute, whereas the heart of humans should beat around 72.

The United States bureau of agricultural economics says that poultry production this year is the smallest since 1925.

The storing room should be kept free from musty odors and highly flavored foods because eggs absorb odors readily.

Progressive poultrymen should count their laying hens each month in order to detect losses which might have been overlooked.

Use lights on early pullets only to prevent too great a drop in egg production, say Penn state poultry specialists.

Six pounds of good feed is needed to produce a dozen eggs. Three pounds of feed should produce a pound of broiler or fryer.

A hen owned by Charles T. Schue, city fireman at Elyria, Ohio, laid four eggs at once. The fowl weighed only 18 ounces, while the four eggs weighed six.

No Escape From Debt to "Piper"

Those Who Play Life's Game Unfairly Bound to Lose in End.

"Todor Todoroff, twenty-four years old, was impatient to get married and his pretty bride-to-be was impatient, too. But they had no money, so Todor resolved to steal some."

"The plan worked well. He carried out 12 thefts and collected a fair sum."

"Just one more theft, to get a new suit to be married in," he said to the girl, "and then I'll be an honest man again."

"But he was caught in the act of stealing the suit. It was his thirteenth theft. Now he is in jail and the wedding is off."

In the words of the Scotch poet, "The best made plans o' mice and men gang aft agley!"

Todor Todoroff is not the first burglar, embezzler, racketeer, to plan, with the highest motives, "just one job more!" It is common to the histories of many crooks who intend to go straight that the "last job" is the one at which they are caught. In other words, they don't get away with it.

And whatever strange justice it is that overtakes these people seems to extend also to lesser crimes and vices. The man who has been deceiving his wife but makes up his mind to reform—"after tonight's party"; it is usually at that party that he finds dispelled his delightful illusion of a fate kind to offenders who are willing to reform when convenient. The woman who in her relations with husband, mother or child is imposing, selfish—then graced with a feeling of guilt makes up her mind that "things will be different"—after "this last" trip which she must have alone, or extravagance which she cannot resist; very frequently fate revises circumstances so that her good intentions are impossible of fulfillment.

The world's greatest optimists, those people, who imagine that they can offend against universal laws of right, decency, fairness, reap the benefits, and then, when the time is ripe for them, righteously turn over a new leaf—without paying the piper. A very special set of rules they assume, to allow them to play the game crookedly and get away with it. But the rules are always the same.

SYNOPSIS

Prudence Schuyler comes to Prosperity Farm to make a new life for herself and her brother, David, his health broken by tragedy. The second day Prue falls from the barn loft into the arms of Rodney Gerard, rich young man, a neighbor. There is at once a mutual attraction, but Prudence suspects men since her sister's husband ran away with her brother's wife, Len Calloway tries to buy Prue's timber, but she contracts with Rod to dispose of the trees. David comes to the farm. Prue accompanies Rod and Jean, Rod's thirteen-year-old niece, to a circus. Chitot, an old clown, is accidentally killed. He was the grandfather of Milly Gooch, one of the circus riders. Rod became friendly with Milly when she lived on Prosperity Farm. Calloway intimidates laborers so that they cannot be hired to cut the timber for Rodney Gerard. After Chitot's death Rod calls on Milly to see if he can be of any help. Prue sees in a newspaper a flashlight picture of him with Milly. Rodney goes to New York for timber cutters, taking David with him to help select men from among the Rescue Mission hangers-on. Rod sends word of his coming, with a crew of laborers. To keep the knowledge of the workers' arrival from Calloway, Prudence enters her timber tract with him on the pretense of bargaining on the lumbering. He confines her in a cabin. An escaped convict appears and robs Prudence of her pearls. Then Rod arrives and holds a gun on Calloway and the convict, recovering the jewels.

If he spoke to her again in that unsteady voice, she would cry her heart out on his shoulder, then where would she be?

"Warmer—but—a roaring fire and a cup of hot tea will seem like heaven. Jim will—"

"Jim! Jim! You think of him every minute. Why don't you marry him?"

Prudence shut her eyes. She had been about to say that Jim would think him lost. He had handed her a weapon of defense. She rushed to her own destruction.

"I have had that idea myself—in fact it is quite settled."

The words seemed to twang in the air long after they were spoken, to vibrate like a violin string which had been roughly struck. What a lie! What an outrageous lie! She had stripped off honor and truth in a determination to protect herself from future heartache. What would Jim Armstrong say if he knew? He mustn't know. After what seemed hours of time and miles of road, she begged in what she recognized as absurd anticlimax.

"Please don't mention what I told you to anyone—even David. We—we don't want it known—at present. I—I—well, you made me angry—and I just flung it at you."

"Don't worry. I shan't broadcast the good news. You are hoarse. Still chilly?"

"I'm warmer, but thank heaven, we are almost home! There's the red brick house!"

"David and I had planned for you to dine at High Ledges tonight—he wanted to tell you of our experiences—but if you've taken cold—"

"I never take cold. As soon as I get off these wet clothes I'll be all right." How could she face Jim Armstrong, she wondered.

He lifted her out of the roadster and pulled off the robe. "You're shivering. There isn't a light in the house. Where is Jane Mack?"

"Having t-tea with Mrs. S-Si, probably."

"You're shivering again. Come on! I'm going in with you!"

"No! No! Go home! I don't need anyone."

"Sez you! Come on!" He laid a compelling arm about her shoulders and drew her along the path. The knob of the front door turned under his hand. He followed her into the living room which was faintly lighted by blinking coals on the hearth.

"Sit in that wing chair. Don't try to talk."

He flung pine cones from the big copper kettle beside the fireplace on the embers. They blazed. Carefully he laid birch kindling; when that caught he piled on large logs and lighted the lamp.

Prudence protested hoarsely: "Please don't do anything more. I can take care of myself."

"Got a heater in the house? Is your room warm?"

"My own room upstairs? Only when I have a fire in the stove."

"Then I'll get your dry clothes, you can't stay in those wet things, and you are not going up to that cold room to change. Stick out your foot."

He dropped to one knee and unlaced the boot she automatically held out. For an instant she was dumb from surprise, but only for an instant.

"Rodney Gerard, don't dare go to my room."

"Did you say 'dare'? I'm going under the Trading with the Enemy act. It's being used this year."

He carefully removed the other boot, placed the pair side by side on the hearth, and crossed the room.

Huddled in the wing chair, she regarded him as he returned. Green crepe pajamas hung over one arm, her flannel house coat striped in blue and green over the other. How had he known what to bring?

"Here you are! Get out of those wet things and into these."

He drew a chair in front of the fire and laid the garments over its back. Prudence regarded him with a superior smile, as superior as a smile could be with chattering teeth behind it.

"Just naturally helpful, aren't you? I haven't the slightest intention of changing. I'll stay here until Macky gets back."

"You have another guess coming to you. You'll change to dry clothes while I'm in the kitchen making a cup of hot tea. Now get this. If you haven't when I come back, I'll peel off those wet things myself." He paused on the threshold. "Make it snappy. It doesn't take long to boil water."

Prudence wrinkled her nose at his back. The act of defiance precipitated a body-wrenching sneeze. Let him try to make her change. Just let him try.

She glanced furtively at the pajamas and coat over the chair. They looked blissfully warm, and she was frozen. Why not put them on? Why freeze for the pleasure of defying Rodney Gerard?

What was that sound? Was he coming already? With shaking hands she pulled off the green cardigan. Of course, the lordly male would think he had frightened her into obedience. She knotted the cord of the green and blue house coat. He hadn't. It wasn't that she was too proud to fight—was her reaction to that thought a chuckle or a shiver—she was too cold to fight. Silly not to have put these toasty warm things on at once.

He was coming! She caught up the wet clothing and jammed it into the wood box. Back in the wing chair she thrust her bare toes, still white from cold, into sandals and sat on them.

When Gerard entered he glanced quickly at the chair in front of the fire. He drew forward a Chinese teapoy and set down the tray in his hand.

"There you are!"

He poured tea, strong enough to curl the straightest lashes up tight, and passed her the cup.

"Drink it while it's hot."

She took a hasty swallow. "It's boiling! You—haven't a c-copper-lined mouth up your sleeve, have you? You're such an efficient p-person."

"Did it burn?"

"Oh no, it froze and frosted all the way down."

"Don't try to be funny. Drink it. At least, you're not shivering now. What the dickens have you done to this room?"

"Paper and paint. I wanted it fresh for David when he returned." She started to her feet. "Dave! How could I have forgotten? He must be wild with anxiety about me."

"Sit down! Finish that tea! I phoned him from upstairs. Told him that you were okay and that you would be at High Ledges for dinner. I—"

A door banged. "Who's that? Sit still!"

Before he could reach the hall, Jane Mack appeared on the threshold. "Miss Prue! Miss Prue! They've caught the escaped prisoner! Now perhaps you'll get your jewels." She took a step into the room and pulled down her spectacles. "What's the matter, child? What happened to her, Mr. Rodney?"

Prue reassured quickly:

"Nothing happened, Macky, except that I went to look at my timber and got wet. Mr. Gerard made some tea and—here we are."

Jane Mack put her hand against Prue's cheek. "You look feverish. Sure you haven't taken cold?"

"Of course not. I never have a cold. What did you hear about the convict, Macky? Tell us, quick."

Gerard lifted the heavy coat from Jane's thin shoulders—Prue wondered if that attention ever had been shown her before—and drew forward a chair.

"Sit here, Miss Mack. How did you hear about the capture?"

"The news was broadcast about ten minutes ago. The convict was brought to the county jail by a leading citizen—didn't tell his name over the radio—who caught him in the woods, dared death from the desperado's revolver, and captured him single-handed."

Jane Mack's theatrical "dared death" unleashed Prue's shivers.

"Single-handed!" she echoed.

The leading citizen was Calloway, of course. Evidently he had forgotten to mention Rodney Gerard's timely entrance at the cabin, had forgotten her masterly stroke with the ax.

"Single-handed!" she repeated, and looked at Rodney Gerard. He shook his head as his eyes met hers. She turned to Jane Mack.

"So the leading citizen caught him single-handed. Ain't human nature grand?"

CHAPTER X

Perched on a stump among others which reminded her of Henry Hudson's goblin crew in the forest set of Rip Van Winkle, Prudence listened to the warning call "Timber!" before the crash of a tree; to the clasp of axes, the rasp of saws that shattered the brooding silence of the woods. Was it only two weeks since Rodney Gerard and David had personally conducted their crew from New York? Probably it seemed months to the men, who, unused to hard work, had been instructed gradually in the art of handling and grinding axes, twisting peaveys, and pulling on cross-saws.

If it didn't seem long to them, it seemed an aeon or two to her since that cabin adventure of recent and thrilling memory. The convict was safe behind bars, but hadn't a man quite as dangerous to the Schuyler and Gerard interests been left at large? Had Calloway given up the fight to stop them from cutting the timber? She couldn't believe it.

Two weeks since they had arrived, and this was the first time she had seen them at work. Absorption in work and sports was not the only reason that had kept her from the logging belt, Prue acknowledged to herself with heightened color, she didn't care to meet Rodney Gerard, and she couldn't face Jim Armstrong. Of course, he didn't know of her absurd statement that she was engaged to him, but until she felt less ashamed of herself she would keep out of his way. She must have been dazed with cold and excitement that day to have fabricated such a story.

She shook off the past, filled her lungs with the sparkling air and her eyes with the present. They glowed with laughter as she watched the men she could see. They were a motley lot, in shirts of a hectic plaid and baggy corduroy trousers. They were bare of arm and throat. They had lost the unemployed slouch, were clear-eyed and hard of muscle. They seemed happy and clean.

She blinked away sudden tears of gratitude as her brother appeared between the snowy trees. It seemed incredible that the erect, vigorous man in army breeches, high boots, and heavy sweater was the same person whom she and Gerard had tenderly assisted from the black roadster not so many weeks ago.

"Lengthening roads that wind through dust and heat to hilltops clear," she repeated softly.

The men from the mission were making good, Prudence approved, as she watched them. Gerard, Armstrong, and Si Puffer were each directing a crew. Twenty of the original importation of twenty-five had stuck. Three had sneaked away after their first day at hard labor; two had deserted to Calloway.

Calloway! The repetition of the name brought Prue's doubts of the man's acceptance of the present situation crowding back into her mind. Had he given up the fight? She couldn't believe it. He was too resourceful, too relentless. If only she could think of the devastating things to say when she faced him that were thronging on the tip of her tongue now.

"Warm enough, Prue?"

Her brother's voice startled her back from an imaginary verbal battle with Calloway.

"Warm! I'm fairly wadded. What Macky didn't suggest as a cold-protector, Mrs. Si did. How are the men getting on?"

"Great. I knew they would make good. They are not fools. Never in their lives have they had such food nor such consideration. As a financial proposition this experiment of Gerard's is likely to prove costly; as an experiment in human values I believe that it will pay a dividend."

"They look happy and fat in spite of their hard work."

"Fat! You said something then. They eat enormously, and they sleep like logs on the balsam boughs under their blankets. Even the hard work won't take care of the energy they are storing up. All their noise and geying is good-natured now; but let one of them get ugly or just one drink, and victors jubilating about goal posts would be a Sleepy Hollow compared to the inside of that cattle barn."

"Can they get a drink, Dave?"

"Not unless they walk miles for it, and by the time they have tramped back to the bunk-house at the end of their work day they've had all the walking they care for. They are happy enough, with a radio and one of those small moving picture machines—but, in spite of that, I can't explain it, I feel a pricking in my thumbs."

"Have you heard from the two whom Calloway subtracted?"

"Not since the night they appeared at the bunkhouse to make a neighborly call. On that occasion they were greeted with such a storm of abuse and such a fusillade of missiles that the place looked as if it had been the storm center of a five-and-ten store explosion. They won't try that again. Here comes Rod."

Rodney Gerard leaned against a small tree and regarded Prudence with smiling aloofness.

"We have with us today—Prue of Prosperity farm. What do you think of our logging enterprise, partner?"

She gripped the stump with both gloved hands. A small cold tremor of fear quivered through her. He hadn't moved, yet she felt as if irresistibly she were being drawn into his arms. Why, why did it have to be he who set her heart thumping, whose eyes seemed to stop her breath? How could he in a few weeks have so possessed her? Magic? Black art? Almost she began to believe in them. Why couldn't it have been Jim Armstrong, who had had neither time nor money to finance circus riders?

She kept her eyes on her brother as hands deep in the pockets of his heavy sweater he walked away. She said unevenly:

"David is unbelievably better, isn't he?"

"Better! He's pretty nearly okay. When we were in New York, I persuaded him to see a specialist I know. He said that if your brother would keep out of blankety-blank—I am giving you a carefully expurgated version of his opinion—places full of dead air and live in the country for a time, that nature, who is the greater repair specialist in creation, would have him on his feet in—"

"Timber!"

Gerard jumped to his feet at the warning call. Prue's eyes followed him. The men had taken to the cover of big trees. All except one. Why—why didn't the stupid creature—

"Hi! O'Shea! Look out!"

Gerard yelled the warning as he dashed toward the red-headed giant. Prudence clutched her hands over her heart. Would he be in time? Didn't Rodney realize his own danger when he hurled himself at the man? The tree was down! So were the two men. Crushed? The crew dropped their axes and rushed forward.

She shut her eyes for an instant. When she opened them, Gerard was on his feet with his hand on O'Shea's shoulder.

"Sorry to treat you rough, Shance. You had to take the chance of being knocked out by the tree or by me."

The dazed man blinked small red eyes at the prostrate forest monster—harmless now—which had cleared him by an inch.

Ants Outdo Man in Many Demonstrations of Skill

With well trained soldiers, skillful builders, successful farmers, and able rulers many of the ant nations challenge some of man's most outstanding accomplishments, says Pathfinder Magazine. These wonderfully organized tribes perform wonders which are hard to understand. They pursue methods remarkably similar to those of man. Their formations in war show a perfection which is not only similar to but rivals that of the world's best armies. Working tirelessly some of them, instead of hunting all of their food, actually produce part of it themselves. Certain varieties of mushroom rooms have been domesticated by them and are grown in underground beds receiving careful cultivation and watering.

Most striking of all is their building. Some of the tower-like structures ants erect would far outstrip those of man if they were considered in view of the comparative sizes of the builders. Some of the buildings reach a height of 20 feet and withstand severe storms remarkably well. Workers in the tribes are aided by slaves captured in wars.

Undersecretary of State

The undersecretary of state is the principal assistant of the secretary of state in the discharge of his various functions, aiding in the execution of the government, in the reception of representatives of foreign governments, etc. In matters which do not require the personal attention of the secretary of state he acts for the secretary of state, and in the absence of that official he becomes acting secretary of state. His duties also include general direction of the work of the Department of State and of the foreign service.

Inspecting Christmas Toys

Christmas Gifts

By Luella B. Lyons

WITH more than a foot and a half of snow on the highway, the telephone lines down and not a chance of the mailman reaching them, Mary March bemoaned her negligence in putting off her Christmas shopping. And that very afternoon, the eight women of them living within a mile and a half of each other were to brave the drifts and hold their annual party, despite the weather.

"One nice book in the house that is fit to give, and that had to have a tiny hole burned right smack in the center of the lid, too," she wailed to Bob March. He tried hard to think of some way out of the situation, for he knew how much she usually counted on the annual party.

"I've just had an idea and I'd better care for it, being it's lonely," he declared rather excitedly. "Where's that sheet of cellophane you peeled so carefully from off that box of mine the other day? Haul that out, get me that snapshot you had printed to send to my sister, and by that time—well, who knows?"

Bob was always thinking up ways and means to cover up for her lack of planning and foresight, and she blessed him as she ransacked happily for the desired items. But when she again joined Bob at the kitchen table, she gave a startled shriek.

"Bob, dear, that was the only gift in sight and now you've ruined it," but he smiled on, his pen knife cutting away that messy looking burn from the book lid. Then with an old wood burning set, he stippled the whittled edge of that hole in the leather binding. Then he backed that hole with a double piece of cellophane and bound the three edges to the inner side of the book lid with a tiny band of purple leather which matched the book.

In between the cellophane pieces Bob slipped the lovely tinted snapshot of Mary. With a squeal of delight, Mary accepted the new deal in Christmas gifts. "The newest thing in fads, Bob, darling," she assured him delightedly. Such a tiny bit of work had turned a perfectly impossible gift into something rare that might have come straight from the gift shop.

And after the women had raved over Mary's gift to the grab bag, Bob was given the surprise of his life. "What will you charge, Bob, to make over two or three books for me that very same way. One or two for the youngsters, too," they exclaimed. Bob made every moment of his spare time count, doing over book-lids for a long time after that. "Bless your bad memory, darling," he teases every time he makes another entry in the cash book of this spare time job of his.

An Up-to-Date Santa Claus

By Florence Harris Wells

"THERE'S snow stretching as far as we can see in all directions. We've had no possible chance to get out the old car and rattle into town as we planned, and Christmas tomorrow." Tom Lambert looked questioningly across their breakfast table at his wife, Lucy: "Do you think we can make the children understand that even Santa Claus couldn't urge his tiny reindeer through such an expanse of snow?"

"I've talked to them about it but their faith is boundless." Lucy's usually cheerful voice had a break in it. "Yet how could we tell that it would snow so long and steadily. But you are better, Tom. We have that to be thankful for."

"Yes, I'm better. Anything is better than being shut up in a stuffy office all day for a man that is used to God's great outdoors. But forget me. It's those three kids I'm worrying about."

"Don't worry, Tom. Let's have the faith of the children. I'll pop corn and we still have a few apples and nuts for their stockings."

It was nearing noon when they heard the whirr of the mail plane over their heads. Mary, Robert and little Tom rushed out to wave greetings.

"Look! Look!" little Tom shouted. "Something's fallen out."

Sure enough, a parachute had been released. Slowly but surely it descended towards the little group.

"It's going down the chimney!" Rob shouted. But it missed the chimney, hit the edge of the roof and came tumbling down in their midst, a gay umbrella of red and green, with a large white bag securely tied to it. Wired to the bunches of holly and evergreens, that bedecked the outside, was a card.

"An accurate guesser of distance, that pilot," Tom muttered as he unfasted the card.

The children stopped tugging at the fastenings and listened attentively while Tom read:

"My reindeer couldn't navigate in such deep snow; so I'm sending your things by air mail, because the air mail man tells me you are such friendly children you must not be disappointed. — Santa Claus."

"I knew Santa Claus wouldn't forget us!" Rob shouted. "So did I," Mary and little Tom said in one breath.

Lucy and Tom, Sr., looked at each other.

"Some thoughtful pilot," Tom said soberly.

Perhaps the air waves carried, to the fast disappearing plane, the "Merry Christmas" the little family shouted to their air man Santa Claus.

PERFORATED DESIGN FOR QUILT MAKERS

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

Quilt makers realize the beauty of a finished quilt depends upon the patches used, the beauty in the patchwork design, and, most important, the quilting. If the quilting design is not accurately reproduced on the material it is impossible to quilt neatly and clearly. Many quilts are never finished, because the worker has no pattern or means to transfer all the quilting lines accurately. There are several ways of transferring quilting patterns to cloth, but the most approved and successful method is stamping the design through a perforated pattern, with stamping powder. This is the simplest and most economical way, and produces results that make quilting interesting. Each stamping is the same, and perfect. These patterns are already perforated on bond paper, and good for many stampings. Each stitch is indicated on the lines of the design, and the stamping can be brushed off when quilting is finished, leaving the work neat and clean.

Grandmother Clark's package No. 33A contains perforated patterns of the designs shown, also stamping powder and full directions how to use them. Sizes of patterns are as follows: A1 Feather Circle, 12 inch; A2 Feather Border, 3 inch; A3 Motif, 3 1/2 inch; B4 Feather Circle, 9 1/2 inch; B5 Feather Corner, 7 inch; B6 Feather Square, 4 inch.

If you want your quilting to look right, send 15 cents to our quilt department and receive all of these. Lot 33A six perforated patterns by mail postpaid.

Practical Idea

While the British road authorities have been road paving with cast iron, their neighbors across the channel have also been giving the subject serious attention. French engineers have seriously considered a proposal to build a cast-iron highway from Paris to Marseilles—300 miles away. They figure that about 3,000,000 tons of iron would be used—the total cost being 256,000,000 francs. And herein lies one of the most unique yet sound arguments put up for this road, reports Mr. Davis. Those in favor say that in case of war, when the country is short of iron, these cast-iron block roads could be torn up and be converted into guns, trains, battleships and armament, while for a few years at least the concrete base alone would do for roads.—Milwaukee Journal.

The "right of eminent domain" means that a state has first right to land for purposes necessary to the common welfare, a right exercised in such instances as when land is taken for a public road right-of-way, under conditions putting the interest of all the people above the interest of one landowner. The state cannot take, however, without paying. The right may also be extended to utilities and other private interests deemed to serve the common good.

La Marseillaise Thrilling

The martial strains of "La Marseillaise" are always thrilling. It was composed by Capt. Rouget de Lisle, a young artillery officer, while quartered in Strasbourg in 1792. He wrote it one winter evening, and sang it the next morning to a group of friends at the home of Baron Dietrich, mayor of the city. It stirred the furor of patriotism whenever it was played or sung. The insurgents of the French revolution assembled at Marseilles marched on Paris to its strains, and chanted it during the attack on the Tuilleries.
