Tawas registered a decisive 11 to 3 victory over Twining last Sunday to wind up the title play-off series between these teams in two games. The locals had won the first game the previous week by a score of 6 to 5. However, another obstacle has been thrown into the path of the local boys in their quest for the championship. AuGres refused to replay a protested game with Bentley as ordered by the league directors and forfeited the contest to Bentley. This action placed Bentley in a tie with Tawas and Twining for the season's campaign. The local boys have already disposed of the Twining angle and it now remains for them to contend with this new menace to their title hopes. Arrangements have been made for a three-game play-off series between Tawas and Bentley, the first contest to take place at the Tawas City athletic field next Sunday, September 22. In case Tawas wins the series the local team will have undisputed possession of the title. On the other hand, if Bentley carries off honors in its clash with the home boys it will be necessary for that team to play a series with the Twining aggregation.

Last Sunday's game at Twining was filled with sparkling plays in the field. A detailed account of the many fine catches and pick-ups made would include a majority of players of both teams. Outstanding by far among all the splendid performances of the day, however, were the records of two Tawas players, Mervyn Lixey and Albert Quick. Lixey, local hurler, had one of his best days of the year in this game. He held the Twining crew to only six hits, two of these being of the scratchy type, issued but one base on balls, and fanned seven batters while coasting through to an easy victory behind the large margin provided him by his mates. He also had two put-outs and four assists in the field, contributed a pair of singles to the locals' batting attack, and scored one of his team's runs. Quick, the locals' speedy left fielder, enjoyed a perfect day at bat with five safeties and a base on balls in his six appearances at the plate. Of the five hits he rapped out two went for extra bases, a double down the left field line and a triple in deep right field. He scored three times, stole two bases, made a couple fine running catches in his position in left, and in general proved a big thorn in the side of the Twining club.

Tawas tallied one run in the opening frame to start off scoring for the game. Quick, lead-off man, laid down a perfect bunt on the first pitch and no play could be made to retire him at first base. Mark sent him to second with a sharp single to left. A fielder's choice on H. Lixey's slow roller loaded the bases. Quick scored when Cunningham hit into a double play, Munroe to Healy to White, out house, and M. Lixey grounded out to retire the side. Twining knotted the count in its half of the same inning when Healy was given a base on balls, advanced to second on Norris' infield hit and scored on Reid's single.

DATA TO BE SOUGHT ON DRIVERS' CARDS

Owners of automobiles, who apply for 1936 license plates, will be asked one question on the application blank which has never been asked in previous years. The question will be: "When does your operator's license expire?"

The decision to embody this question on the application blanks for 1936 license plates has been made by Louis R. Morony, director of the Motor Vehicle Division of the Department of State. The decision was endorsed by the executive committee of the Michigan Safety and Traffic Directors' Association, meeting recently in the East Lansing headquarters of the Michigan State Police.

The original proposal included recommendations that the giving of this information be made a condition of the issuance of the plate; Morony, however, chose to include the question merely as a device for reminding owners and operators that their operators' licenses have expiration dates on them, under the uniform operators' license act of 1931. Applicants for licenses will be asked to give this information merely as a matter of cooperation with the department.

With some 200,000 operators of cars being unlicensed today, the expectation is that the majority of them, being forgetful rather than intentionally unlicensed, will thus be reminded of their delinquency. It is the belief that virtually no one will have the temerity to ask for a license plate while actually signing his name to a statement that his operator's license has expired.

Legion Bridge Tournament Opens Oct. 7

WILL VOTE ON WATER WORKS BONDS OCT. 8

$26,590 Government Grant Is Approved For Project

Tuesday, October 8th, has been designated as the day on which the people of Tawas City will decide whether or not they desire a water works system for the city. At a meeting of the common council held Monday a resolution was adopted determining the necessity of such a system and arranging for an election for the approval of a bond issue necessary to finance a portion of its construction.

The total cost of the system as set up in the resolution would be $59,090.00. The project has been approved by the Federal government and it has made an outright grant of $26,590.00. The balance would be financed by two bond issues. The first would be a $15,000.00 issue of general obligation bonds to be repaid over a period of 20 years through taxes spread on the tax rolls of the city. The second would be a $17,500.00 issue of revenue bonds, payments to be made from water rentals.

The books are open to the qualified electors for pre-election registration at the city clerk's office until Saturday, September 28.

Full information relative to the bond issues and election will be found in a notice appearing in this week's issue of the Tawas Herald.

32 COUNTIES REPRESENTED AT ROAD MEET

Has Largest Attendance, Declares Association Secretary

"This is the largest convention that has ever been held by the Northeastern Michigan Road Commissioners Association," stated George Stout of Lake City, secretary of the association, during the two-day meet at East Tawas last Friday and Saturday. "Everyone enjoyed the various programs and the pleasing hospitality of the people of the two cities."

Last week's convention was one of the first ever held by the association on the eastern shore of Michigan. Every one of the 32 counties in the association was represented. A number of counties not in the district, including Wayne, had representatives present. Over 300 people were served at the banquet. Owing to the unexpectedly large crowd at least 100 more were unable to secure seats at the tables. During the convention the three hotels of East Tawas and Tawas City were filled to capacity.

Following the excellent chicken and fish dinner served by Peter Stasinos of the Hotel Holland at the Community house Friday evening, Sam Yockey of Harrisville, president of the association, introduced Mayor John D. Bingham of Alpena as toastmaster. The guests were then welcomed by Mayor W. A. Evans.

The principal speaker of the evening was Murray D. Van Wagoner, state highway commissioner. He reviewed the work accomplished by the state highway department, especially that made possible by Federal aid, and spoke about the future WPA program. He called attention to the resort opportunities in northeastern Michigan and emphasized the value of paved roads in the development of that industry.

Louis Nimms, director of the project division of the WPA, used as his subject, "WPA Assistance in Building Good Roads," and stressed the value of the tourist industry to the state of Michigan. He spoke of the winter work program for the unemployed and the state's co-operation with President Roosevelt's work progress program.

E. E. Van Blankenstein of the Michigan State Police talked about "Safety on the Highways."

LeRoy Smith, engineer of the Wayne county road commission, gave a short address. During the course of his talk he made application to President Yockey for the admission of Wayne county as an honorary member of the association.

A number of other prominent people were introduced to the audience by the toastmaster. An exceptionally fine and well balanced program of entertainment was furnished the guests. A saxophone solo was given by Datus Moore of the music department, East Tawas high school. Miss Mary Gardner was accompanist. Alfredo and Silvio, better known as "Mike and Ike," and the "Mountaineers" presented by the Ford Motor company and Orville Leslie of Tawas City were especially well received. Several numbers were given by Ruth's School of Dancing. An excellent orchestra was furnished by C. C. Camp Hale.

At the business meeting Ross Jackson of Gaylord was elected president and it was decided that the next convention would be held at Gaylord.

Assassination of Senator Long Stirs the Nation—Great Britain Ready to Take Sanctions Against Italy— Ickes Versus Hopkins.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
© Western Newspaper Union.

HUEY P. LONG, United States senator and political dictator of Louisiana, is dead, the victim of an assassin's bullet. As he passed through a corridor of the state-house in Baton Rouge, where the legislature was passing more laws to solidify his control over the state, he was shot once through the body by Dr. Carl A. Weiss, Jr., of Baton Rouge, one of the "Kingfish's" political opponents. The assassin was immediately shot to death by the senator's ever present bodyguards.

The surgeons and physicians worked unceasingly to save Long, but his strength steadily waned and shortly after 4 o'clock Tuesday morning, about thirty hours after the shooting, he passed away.

Long's body lay in state in the rotunda of the Capitol building while many thousands passed by the bier. The impressive funeral services were held on the front terrace and the dead senator was interred in a sunken garden of the Capitol grounds. Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith, the young minister who deserted a rich parish in Shreveport to follow Long, was the only speaker at the funeral. The only music was the song, "Every Man a King," played in minor key and dirge time by the State University band.

Though the man who killed Long was known as one of his political foes, the real story of the assassination was shrouded in uncertainty. Earl Christenberry, secretary of the late senator, declared that Long was murdered as a result of a conspiracy; that a number of his enemies formed a "jury of death," and that Doctor Weiss was selected by lot to fire the fatal bullet. To those who are familiar with the conditions in Louisiana this story does not sound especially fantastic.

What will become of Long's "empire" is a question that agitates all his followers, and all the people of the state as well. For the present, it seemed likely, the members of the Long machine will sink their personal ambitions and try to hold the organization intact. It will be difficult for them to decide on a successor to the "Kingfish" as their leader. Gov. O. K. Allen is considered too mild and peace-loving. Seymour Weiss—no relative of the assassin—treasurer of the Long organization, is the strongest man in the lot, but he always has drawn back from holding a public position. Allen A. Ellender, speaker of the house, may be the man finally selected, though Lieut. Gov. James A. Noe is to the fore.

Political leaders of all parties expressed their deep regret for the assassination of Senator Long.

MUSSOLINI tacitly consented to the appointment of a committee of five nations by the League of Nations council to handle the Italo-Ethiopian embroglio, and after protest agreed that Great Britain and France should be among the members of that body. The other members are Spain, Turkey and Poland. Senor Salvador de Madariaga of Spain is the chairman, and he and his associates at once began the task assigned them. Each country is represented by its chief delegate, being besides Madariaga, Eden of England, Laval of France, Rustu Arras of Turkey and Josef Beck of Poland.

Soon after the assembly of the League opened its session, Sir Samuel Hoare, British foreign secretary, electrified the gathering by an outspoken warning to Italy and France. He declared Great Britain recognized Italy's need for expansion and raw materials but would not admit these could not be obtained peaceably. Pounding the tribune, he said:

"Britain stands for steady collective resistance to all acts of unprovoked aggression." He paused, struck the tribune again, and repeated quietly: "Steady collective resistance to all acts of unprovoked aggression."

Sir Samuel more than intimated that Great Britain was prepared to take sanctions against Italy in case of aggression provided all the other members of the league shared the risk; and if not, then England was prepared to isolate herself from the continent. This seemed to put it up to Premier Laval of France, to choose between the friendship of Britain and that of Italy. Laval, meanwhile, was trying to persuade Mussolini to accept another plan he had devised and postponed his speech to the assembly.

Representatives of the Netherlands and Sweden were the first to support Hoare's position, announcing their countries would fulfill all obligations, including collective penalties, if any member became a victim of aggression.

In two speeches in Rome Mussolini gave indication that he would not be diverted from his purpose to conquer Ethiopia. Though in one he said "the Italian people want peace provided it is accompanied by justice," in the other he declared "we shall march straight on." The Ethiopian government announced that "telegrams from the northern frontier show that the Italians are making important troop movements on the Ethiopian and Eritrean frontier, indicating an early offensive against Ethiopia."

Accepting the advice of his "brain trust," which includes Everett A. Colson of the United States, Emperor Haile Selassie instructed his representatives in Geneva to reject all solutions thus far offered by the powers for settling the quarrel with Italy. These are a tripartite mandate over Ethiopia, as suggested by France, with the League of Nations guaranteeing Ethiopia's independence and territorial integrity; France's proposal for an Italian protectorate similar to that of the British in Iraq, and an international police force similar to the one that occupied the Saar.

PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATOR ICKES and Work Progress Administrator Hopkins got into such a quarrel over the spending of the $4,000,000 fund that the President had to call them to Hyde Park, together with the third and neutral member of the works relief triumvirate—Frank G. Walker, the director of the national emergency council and administrator of applications.

Others called to the important works relief parley included Daniel Bell, director of the budget; Charles West, under-secretary of interior; Corrington Gill, assistant of Hopkins; Fred Ironsides, administrative assistant of Walker, and Col. Horatio Hackett, chief of housing in the PWA.

Mr. Roosevelt was determined to have peace, and told those present that the prime necessity at this time is to make jobs quickly, always keeping in mind the idea of turning workers back to private industry as business warrants. This looked like a victory for Hopkins, who favors quick jobs, over Ickes, champion of permanent public works. The President has declared that he hopes 3,500,000 persons can be removed from the relief rolls and put to work by the first of November.

LEGAL attack on the Guffey soft coal act has been opened by 16 coal companies operating in Harlan county, Kentucky, in Federal court at Louisville. They brought suit for injunction against its enforcement, charging that it violates the federal Constitution in these ways:

1. It violated the fifth amendment, which forbids taking property without due process of law.
2. It violated the tenth amendment, which reserves to the states, or to the people, all rights not granted the federal government or forbidden the states.
3. It attempts to delegate legislative power.
4. The section levying a 15 per cent tax on all coal production, with a 90 per cent refund to producers submitting to the code provided by the act, is "an unconstitutional attempt on the part of congress, under the guise of taxation, to punish those producers of bituminous coal who are unwilling to surrender their constitutional rights."
5. Congress has no jurisdiction over and no power to legislate upon certain matters covered by the act or the code.

The companies declared they would refuse to submit to the act and the code it authorizes.

Former Federal Judge Charles I. Dawson filed the action as counsel for the plaintiffs. Judge Dawson recently left the bench to re-enter private law practice after declaring unconstitutional the NRA and other New Deal measures.

UNIVERSITY of Michigan is rejoicing over a gift of $5,000,000 for enlargement of its graduate school. The money is donated by the Horace H. and Mary A. Rackham fund, based on the bulk of the estate of the late Horace H. Rackham, Detroit philanthropist.

One million dollars will be spent to purchase a square block of land adjoining the present campus and for a new building. The remainder will be employed as an endowment. The income will be used to promote research. By the terms of the agreement the school will be known as the Horace H. Rackham School of Graduate Studies.

"The purpose of the gift is twofold," Dr. Mark S. Knapp, director of the fund, said. "First, to create a memorial, and, secondly, to place the university on a firmer foundation as one of the greater universities in this country. It will provide means for original research, funds for which have been lacking."

REACTION of American business and financial men to President Roosevelt's latest public statement that his basic program has reached substantial completion and industry will have a breathing spell ran the gamut between mild hope and downright unbelief. Those who permitted themselves to be quoted were generally extremely cautious in their expressions, but there was usually a vein of skepticism in their remarks. Wall Street brokers were gladdened by a spurt of trading at higher prices, but bankers were more than doubtful, and economists insisted that a balanced budget, which wasn't mentioned in the President's letter to Roy Howard, publisher, was a prime requisite.

Silas Strawn, former president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, said: "Business men generally will say that the improvement in some lines of business has been in spite of, rather than because of, the activities of the administration."

Politicians regarded the letter as Mr. Roosevelt's opening of his campaign for re-election, and praised or decried it according to their party affiliations. Frank Knox of the Chicago Daily News, a potential candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination, called it "just another promise" and set forth the many campaign promises which Mr. Roosevelt has failed to keep. Senator Black of Alabama said the statement was "a wonderfully clear explanation of his program, its original aims and its execution. It should be a call to those engaged in business to co-operate in further national progress."

Howard had written the President that many business men had become convinced that there could be no real recovery "until the fears of business have been allayed through the granting of a breathing spell to industry and a recess from further experimentation until the country can recover its losses."

In a long letter the President replied that the legislative program of his administration had reached substantial completion and "the breathing spell of which you speak is here—decidedly so."

THREE men who made Independent investigation of the deaths of 256 war veterans in the Florida hurricane reported they found no evidence indicating culpable negligence on the part of any persons. They were States Attorney G. A. Worley of Miami, Aubrey Williams, representing Federal Relief Administrator Hopkins, and Col. George E. Hams of the veterans' bureau, representing President Roosevelt.

This finding was denounced as "whitewash" by James E. Van Zandt, commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars; John J. Skillman, commander of the Miami chapter of the same organization, and other representatives of veterans' societies. Van Zandt's statement called on President Roosevelt to ignore the official report and take action against "officials guilty of negligence."

RESTORATION of the Greek monarchy is coming nearer and presumably former King George will be the man to occupy the throne. Premier Tsaldaris has put himself on record as favoring the restoration, and President Zaimis has indicated he will be willing to resign to make room for a king.

Tsaldaris said in his statement: "I attribute the nervous tension at present existing in public ranks and the army to general anxiety concerning the question of a constitution. I consider democratic royalty as the natural regime for Greece and ask the people to vote for it in the impending plebiscite."

"WE WENT to war on foot, and we're joining the parade the same way," declared about 150 of the grizzled veterans who attended the annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic in Grand Rapids, Mich. So these sturdy old men marched in the big parade while the rest, numbering some 250, rode in automobiles. Here were all that remained of the hundreds of thousands who answered the call to the colors in Civil war days, save for a few who were kept at home by extreme age and illness. Some of the states had no representatives in the line, but their flags were carried nevertheless. From other states there were but one or two. It was a pathetic but inspiring procession, watched by thousands whose eyes were dimmed by tears and escorted by Sons of Veterans, American Legionnaires and Veterans of the Spanish war.

Oley Nelson, 91, of Slater, Iowa, was elected commander-in-chief, to succeed Albert E. Stacey of Elbridge, N. Y. In a session of the organization the proposed reunion at Gettysburg next year with the Confederate veterans was discussed, and Commander Stacey made it plain that the affair would not be held under the official auspices of the Grand Army. The plan originated in Pennsylvania.

EDWARD L. DOHENY, one of the wealthiest of America's oil magnates, died in Los Angeles at the age of seventy-nine years, after a long illness. His oil interests were mainly in California and Mexico. In 1924 Doheny and his old friend, Albert B. Fall, secretary of the interior under Harding, were involved in the investigation of the government's leasing of the Elk Hills naval oil reserve in California to Doheny for exploitation.

Doheny was twice tried and twice acquitted, on charges of conspiracy to defraud the government and of giving a bribe of $100,000 to Fall. The latter, however, was found guilty of taking a bribe and went to prison.

THE MERRY LITTLE BREEZES HELP LIGHTFOOT

COULD you have seen the hunter with the terrible gun and Lightfoot the Deer that morning on which the hunting season opened you might have thought that Lightfoot was hunting the hunter instead of the hunter hunting Lightfoot. You see, Lightfoot was behind the hunter so as to keep track of him. As long as he knew just where the hunter was he felt reasonably safe.

The Merry Little Breezes are the best friends that Lightfoot has. They always bring to him all the different scents they find as they wander through the Green Forest. And Lightfoot's delicate nose is so wonderful that he can take these scents, even though they be very faint, and tell just who or what has made them. So, though he makes the best possible use of his big ears and his beautiful eyes, he trusts more to his nose to warn him of danger. For this reason during the hunting season when he moves about he moves in the direction from which the Merry Little Breezes may be blowing. He knows that they will bring to him warning of any danger which may lie in that direction.

Now the hunter with the terrible gun who was looking for Lightfoot knew all this, for he was wise in the ways of Lightfoot and of the other little people of the Green Forest. When he had entered the Green Forest that morning he had first of all made sure of the direction from which the Merry Little Breezes were coming. Then he had begun to hunt in that direction, knowing that his scent would be carried behind him. It is more than likely that he would have reached the hiding place of Lightfoot the Deer before the latter would have known that he was in the Green Forest had it not been for Sammy Jay's warning.

When he reached the tangle of fallen trees behind which Lightfoot had been hiding he worked around it slowly and with the greatest care, holding his terrible gun ready for use instantly should Lightfoot leap out. Presently he found Lightfoot's footprints in the soft ground and studying them he knew that Lightfoot had known of his coming.

"It was that confounded Jay," muttered the hunter. "Lightfoot heard him and knew what it meant. I know what he has done. He has circled round so as to get behind me and get my scent. It is a clever trick, a very clever trick, but two can play at that game. I'll just try that little trick myself."

So the hunter in his turn made a wide circle back and presently there was none of the dreaded man-smell among the scents which the Merry Little Breezes brought to Lightfoot. Lightfoot had lost track of the hunter.

Answer: Well, I have to.

Dear Mr. Wynn: Can you tell me how it is that so many men are bald headed?

ANN VILL.
Answer: Find the man you traded with and ask him if he'd be kind enough to lend you the horse to eat the hay.

Dear Mr. Wynn: There is a man living next door to me who is very lazy. In fact he lets his wife support him by taking in washing. Shouldn't he be ashamed to let his wife support him in that way?

ON LABOR DAY.

By ANNE CAMPBELL

ONE never knows the satisfying taste Of bread until he earns it... Better still To plow the stubborn earth, to plant the waste And carry the threshed wheat down to the mill. Bread that one gains by sweat is better than The proffered loaf... The gift of luxury Will never sing into the heart of man As will his triumph over poverty.

Once the soiled hands of Labor were not held In high repute, but now our daily prayer Is not for gifts of bread... Our pleas have welled From weary hearts that have too much to bear. But with new courage for the bitter mill, We pray to earn our bread by honest toil.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

SECRET OF CUSTARDS

CUSTARDS are such good desserts for children and the aged as well as for those who have weakened digestion. The secret of a good custard is in the cooking.

Steamed Cup Custard.

Beat two eggs lightly until the whites and yolks are well mixed, add three tablespoons of sugar, a bit of salt and a generous grating of nutmeg. When the sugar is well dissolved add a pint of good milk, stir and mix well and pour into three custard cups if large or four if small. Set in a pan of hot water and put on to steam. Do not let the water stand too deep in the pan so that in boiling it will roll into the cups. Watch carefully after the boiling begins; test with a clean knife thrust down the center of the custard. When the knife comes out clean remove the cups at once from the hot water and chill before serving. For variety in flavor—melt a few tablespoons of sugar in a smooth frying pan and pour this caramel into the bottom of the cups before adding the custard. When cooked they may be turned out and the caramel will form a brown sauce over the custard.

Meringue of Rice.

Put a cup of rice to cook in a pint of boiling water. When the water has evaporated add a pint of milk, a tablespoon of butter, the grated rind of a lemon and four well-beaten egg yolks. Butter a pudding dish and pour in the mixture, adding a little salt. Beat the whites of the eggs until stiff, add a tablespoon of lemon juice and half a cup of sugar. Spread over the pudding and bake until brown.

Puffed Rice Pralines.

Heat until crisp three cups of puffed rice, stirring often to keep from scorching. Boil two cups of brown sugar with one-half cup of water, one tablespoon of vinegar, one tablespoon of butter, until the mixture makes a soft ball in cold water. Add a pinch of soda and salt and add the rice. Pour into pans well buttered and allow to harden.

Water Plants as Food

The pond lily has tuberous underground stems several feet in length which are rich in starch. In fact, the moose, largest of all North American mammals, is known to feed on these stems of the pond lily and other aquatic plants. The cattail and swamp grasses also have stems and roots of sufficient size to serve as food for an elephant. Here then was the food for this extinct race of curious beasts, which ranged across the deserts of Asia and North America.

Prohibit Civil Flying Over Aleutian Islands

Government Closes Isles to Private Airplanes.

Washington.—The Aleutian Islands, a festoon of land fragments strung from the Alaska peninsula for 1,500 miles across the north Pacific ocean, constitute the latest area of the United States over which flying by civil airplanes is prohibited. The islets are the subject of a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

"The Aleutians served as a base for naval seaplanes in recent naval maneuvers in the Pacific ocean, and in 1924 the island chain was followed by United States army flyers on their way around the world," says the bulletin.

"Alighting on the Aleutian Islands with planes fitted with wheels would be difficult, but nearly all the islands are deeply indented and provide every few miles little sheltered coves, land-locked harbors, or lakes on which pontoon-fitted planes can come to rest in an emergency.

"Kodiak village on Kodiak island furnishes the last possible base for airplanes near the Alaskan mainland before the beginning of the long crescent sweep of the Aleutians, which extend for 1,500 miles almost to the peninsula of Kamchatka, eastern outpost of the Soviet union.

Not Severely Cold.

"Although the Aleutians are as far north as central Canada their climate is not severely cold. Rather they may be said to be always chilly, damp, and foggy. Fog is anything but an asset to the flyer; but the Aleutian fog has the good point, at least, of being less dense than the fog of more southern lands.

"Dutch harbor, Unalaska, is the first harbor of importance in the islands. This deep, land-locked harbor is one of the finest in the North and played an important part as a way station for ships during the gold rushes to the Yukon and Nome. It is connected with the rest of the world by a radio station.

"Atka, several hundred miles farther west, is approximately the half way house of the Aleutian chain, and on it is one of the last settlements west of the mainland. Nazan bay, which gives an excellent harbor to Atka, is often clear of fog when it hangs heavily outside.

"After Atka is passed the islands for 500 miles westward are practically uninhabited. Then comes Attu, the last of the Aleutians, the westernmost bit of land at all connected with the American continent over which the Stars and Stripes wave.

"This little outpost of America is beyond the 180th degree of longitude and so is technically in the eastern hemisphere. However, the International Date Line has been bulged out around it, so that all the Aleutians are included in the same time system. When it is Monday on the eastern side of the Date Line, it is Tuesday on the western side.

Built by Volcanic Action.

"Volcanic in origin, the Aleutian islands today are studded with conical peaks hiding active and inactive volcanoes. Most interesting, geologically, is Bogoslof, famous for its jack-in-the-box antics.

"The Aleutians are neither very warm nor very cold. Dutch harbor's mean temperature is 39 degrees, with a low of 30 above zero in January and a high of 52 in July. The annual rain fall of 63 inches is high. There are some 250 rainy days in a year, making the Aleutians one of the rainiest regions in the territory of the United States. Nevertheless water supplies are limited because there are no great watersheds or rivers. Vegetables can be grown only under glass. There is no wood on the islands; natives use driftwood and animal oils for heat. Fogs hang over the islands the year round. Gales lash the coasts, making anchorage most treacherous.

Finds Fingerprints of Ape Like Man's

"Discovered by Russian explorers in the middle of the Eighteenth century, the Aleutian Islands were inhabited by some 25,000 natives—Aleuts, who lived like Eskimos but looked like Asiatics. Fur-bearing animals ran wild on the islands. Hordes of hunters from the mainland of Asia followed the explorers, swooping down on the Aleuts, exploiting, enslaving, killing—in a mad grab for skins. When, in 1867, Russia transferred all its American possessions to the United States, only a thousand-odd Aleuts had survived.

"Today some of the natives engage in breeding the blue fox, a valuable fur-bearing animal."

"Ears of the Army" at Work

The United States army's huge "ears," sound locators tuned to pick up noises which might come from "enemy" aircraft or infantry, as seen in the war maneuvers at Camp Pine, N. Y. These locators are synchronized with the huge searchlights and once a sound is picked up, the lights reveal the cause of the disturbance.

Ancient Skull Is Unearthed in Nebraska

Said to Prove Antiquity of Man in America.

Washington.—The "second cousins" of the famous Neanderthal men—those half-ape, half-human beings that preceded mankind in Europe—once may have roamed the Nebraska plains.

After an exhaustive study of an Indian skull fragment found in the midwest state, Dr. Alex Hrdlicka, curator of physical anthropology of the Smithsonian institution, said it had decidedly Neanderthal characteristics, although obviously of fairly recent origin.

The fragment was discovered by Earl H. Bell of the University of Nebraska while excavating in a large mound of undetermined age near the site of a prehistoric Indian village.

The skull fragment coupled with the recently found Folsom arrowhead points proves conclusively that the America before Columbus extended back for thousands if not tens of thousands of years. The Folsom points are distinctly American in character and date from the early glacier periods approximately the same time as that of the skull fragment.

Doctor Hrdlicka found that the skull fragment had belonged to a middle-aged male Indian and was normal except in one abnormality. It had large bony ridges over the eyes, one of the prominent characteristics of the true Neanderthal skull and those of great apes. These ridges have virtually disappeared in modern mankind.

In the Nebraska Indian skull the ridges were pronounced and about half as prominent as those of the Neanderthal as compared with modern man, the anthropologist said.

Doctor Hrdlicka stressed that the skull did not indicate that Neanderthal men actually lived in America, but rather that there was some sort of ancestral connection between prehistoric Americans and Neanderthals somewhere outside America.

"We are justified in regarding such occurrences as reminiscences, more or less, of early stages in the evolution of the human skull, but not as uninterrupted connections and especially not as a safe index of the antiquity of the specimens that show such characters," Doctor Hrdlicka wrote in a report on the skull for the American Journal of Physical Anthropology.

Great Britain Prevents Sale of Spies' Secrets

London.—Secrets of Great Britain's espionage network in the days of the Napoleonic wars are believed to have narrowly escaped being revealed for the first time in Sotheby's sale rooms in London.

Their probable publication was prevented when the foreign office unexpectedly gave warning that the document in which the secrets are believed to be contained would be liable to confiscation under the official secrets act. As a result, there is considerable likelihood that they may be taken to the United States for sale.

The documents are a part of the papers of Lord Stuart de Rothesay, British ambassador in Paris early in the Nineteenth century, and belong to the earl of Abingdon, who was offering the entire lot for auction.

They include a series of 52 letters from the duke of Wellington to Stuart de Rothesay between 1814 and 1830, chiefly dealing with France after the fall of Napoleon; correspondence of great importance between Stuart and Admiral Lord Berkeley, chief commander on the Portuguese coast from 1810 to 1812; "official letters and dispatches from Portugal, 1810-'13," and dispatches from Lord Nelson and the duke of Wellington.

SYNOPSIS

Following his father's criticism of his idle life, and withdrawal of financial assistance, Hal Ireland, son of a wealthy banker, practically without funds but with the promise of a situation in San Francisco, which he must reach at once, from New York, takes passage with a cross-country auto party on a "share expense" basis. Other members include an attractive girl, Barry Trafford; middle-aged Giles Kerrigan; Sister Anastasia, a nun; and an individual whom he instinctively dislikes, Martin Crack. Barry's reticence annoys him. To Kerrigan he takes at once, but he distrusts Crack. He finds his intimacy with Kerrigan ripening, and makes a little progress with Barry. Through a misunderstanding, Hal is directed to Barry's bedroom, instead of his own, and they exchange kisses. Next day he tells her he loves her. She only answers that she mustn't love him. Crack brutally insults Kerrigan. Hal forces him to apologize abjectly. On his insistence, Barry tells Hal that, at her father's urging, she had married a man many years older than she, and had promised her father, on his deathbed, to stick to her husband, "no matter what happened." And despite her knowledge of her husband's unworthiness, she is determined to keep her promise, though admitting her love for Hal. No argument he can make will move Barry. That night she begs him, in a note, not to insist on seeing her, as he has declared he will. He disregards her missive, and goes to her, in her room.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued

As if he had expected it, he pushed the paper into his pocket, said good night to the clerk, and went upstairs. There was light around Barry's door and he knocked softly. He heard the bed creak, her deliberate footfalls come, her low, resigned voice admit she knew who was there even as she asked.

"Barry, you've got to come out," he said.

"Hal, no," she said, gently pleading. "Then I'll come in." He pushed the door, and as if she had expected that too, he felt her weight against it.

"Don't, Hal," she said, less surely; "for the love of heaven, please don't. I'll come out to you—for five minutes." "No," said Hal. "If you come out, there'll be no conditions. And if you don't come out, I come in."

"Hal, I'm tired; I've got a headache—please, oh, please, my darling."

"You haven't a headache, and you'll forget you're tired, Barry. I'm serious as death, as sin, as happiness; if you won't come to me, I'll come to you. Do you understand that?"

He waited a few seconds for her to speak again; then he pushed the door against her strength until she dropped back from it and he stood inside, closing it behind him. There was no key, nor any eye for the bolt to engage, so he left it and faced her.

She turned from him as if the room had grown too small, murmuring, "Dear G—d, if you haven't given me a way to keep him out, you must want him here."

Hal took her arm above the elbow and turned her to him, then held her other arm too and shook her once, gently, to stir the heavy-lidded study that held her eyes. "You believe there is God?" he said.

"If I do," she said, meeting his look steadily, "you don't know better than I what he wants of me."

Her chin was up bravely over where the parting of the little stiffened collar showed her white, firm throat; between the turbulent bushes where her golden hair ended, her cheeks drew a little inward to compose her full lips in their faintly pursed pride.

As he held her before him by the arms and looked into the living blue of her eyes—deeply strengthened against him, yet never blind to the wonder of what had occurred—there fell suddenly across his heart a bad shadow, as if somewhere a silent signal for hurry had been made. His voice sounded too slow, too undisciplined for his quickened purposes as he said to her: "Angel of heaven, it's nothing to tell you I'd die for you—is it. Love is as much as you said it was, so that all its old meanings have fallen away and I can speak it only to tell you I love you; and to say I love you so much I'd die for you is nothing more—is it?"

His voice made no inquiry, but his eyes waited upon hers for the known answer. Her quiet golden head moved a little aside and back again, and her deep look gravely understood him.

"Barry, do you love me?" She looked down at the mouth that had asked her that, then back at his eyes as her bare whisper said, "You know it: God forgive me for letting you."

"You'd never need to tell me you loved me so much you'd die for me—would you?"

"No," she said.

"You'd mean me to know you would, just by saying you loved me—wouldn't you?"

"Yes."

Without changing the composure of his tone he said: "But you won't shake off the wrong slavery of a spurious bargain with your father and with a man who has no claim upon you; you won't risk a little time of trouble in your conscience, of unrest in your disillusioned duty to a figure of love that had his best life in your own fancy as a child; you'd die for me, but you won't do this other, won't even willingly listen to me tell you why you must, how you can."

She looked at him, the dark awe of alarm taking her eyes more deeply; she said nothing. But under the very heart of her look, he saw a shining, liquid fullness that had come so slowly she herself might not have felt it. And before the tears could form, he had her—warm and mortal—in his arms.

"That's it," he whispered, feeling her soft cheek wet against his. "You cry, and when you're cool and calm again, I'll show you the simple, honorable, little things that are all we need to do to have the world—to ourselves, for always."

She shook her head against his shoulder, but not, Hal triumphantly felt, with the same stubborn conviction.

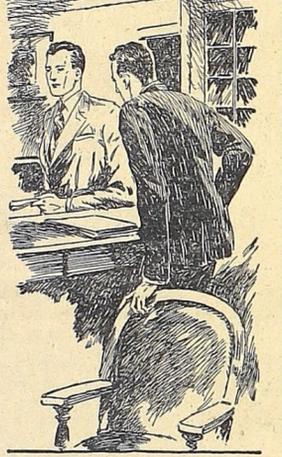

Clear footfalls ringing on the sidewalk opposite reminded Hal that the lighted room must be in plain view of anyone who cared to look at the windows. But one of the shades wouldn't stay down; so, back at the door, he cursed the impossibility of locking it, and turned out the light.

The glow of the street against the ceiling showed the meager furniture, and Barry waiting for him. He went to her.

"It can't happen—ever," she said, as if to herself. "And you must go away, in a minute—soon, before—oh, God help me, my darling."

Her good lips turned quickly to his. He held her close—her whole, surrendered loveliness living against him; it was as if she gave the best treasure ures of her life to the keeping of his exultant body, as if their nearness found its way of growth to inseparable communion, miraculous and destined both. She would forget he must go; and he knew he must not.

A quick, single creak was all the warning that came from the hall, bringing Hal to a sense of time elapsed, to sharp, premonitory alertness. Doc's ugly growl was begun as the door-latch clicked; it broke into a sharp bark at the sound of a step in the room; and the door crisply closed again. A key scraped metal, found the keyhole, and turned the lock over, plucked smartly out again. Then the snap of the switch put light in the frugal room, and Hal was looking into Martin Crack's light-blue eyes, their lazy, private smiling harassed by a ratty intensity, as of hate and fear and triumph all together. Only his voice was still drowsy as he said, "I kinda thought it'd be tonight."

For a moment Hal was afraid that the bursting of hot poisons in him must blind him, gag him, nauseate him beyond any power to act.

"You little snooping son of a—cat!" he said, the heavy savagery of his voice somehow saved from trembling. "What're you doing here?"

Indolently Crack's hand slipped into his side pocket: Hal knew the sight of that evil little golf ball would snap the last shackle on his control; but Crack drew out a stubby double-deringer to point at him, and a small, preposterous agent of reason remaining in Hal noted how that old-fashioned weapon suited Crack's old-fashioned tidiness.

"You guess what I'm doin'," said Crack in a sly, almost sensual mischief. The bed creaked. Hal became aware of his arms, hanging down beside him, drained of certainty, ready to tremble, as after great effort. Then the physical revulsion under his fury abruptly choked itself, left him to a numb, miserable disgust, a tainted exhaustion of blood that would pass for calm. And in it there throbbled only one sure emotion to command such faculties as were undrugged—hatred of Crack, steady and uncomplicated, seeming to live independent of Crack's hate of him, Crack's private gloating in his degradation. Hal heard his own voice quiet and careless in contempt as he nodded at the deringer: "You don't need that d—n silly thing."

Crack put it away, brief embarrassment bringing some of the drowsiness back to his eyes. "Thought you'd probably be sensible," he said.

"You did," said Hal drily. "And what's there to be sensible about?" The small check in Crack's return to basking satisfaction did Hal good.

Hal looked at Barry. She sat on the edge of the bed, knees drawn up, legs tightly encircled by her arms, golden head a little bowed over her dark, sullen stare at the washstand in the corner.

"Well," said Crack, with a sort of sly modesty in achievement: "we can use dough an' we can use publicity. You got the say which."

"You'll have a h—l of a time getting money," Hal said out of his listless calm, "so shoot on the other, if you think it'll get you anywhere."

"I guess it'll get us somewhere all right," said Crack. "But I figured Mr. Frederick Ireland'd sooner make it dough, if you wouldn't."

By G—d, what a dirty trick on the Old Man, getting him into a mess like this! . . . Shame like an instant of fright, held Hal's veins and made his lungs seem to shrink. Providence, you Ireland; Providence!—Let a narrow, white bug leer at you in the rotten trap you walked into, and leave Providence to take care of the Old Man. Christmas! Leave Providence to take care of your hate, too. Look at Martin Crack, named for a saint, no doubt—look at him sitting there, a venomous lackey of evil: don't fight him, don't match your pristine wits against his basking viciousness, don't disturb your fine, wounded spirit now that the first fury is out of you.

Hal thanked God his revolted calm had stayed steady upon him till he saw what he must do. He could stall, somehow, for another day, until patient Sister Anastasia was delivered at her sorry destination; and in Los Angeles, a free agent, he would be his father's—his own Providence in this. In the room of a city hotel, alone with Crack, he might remember those immense, riven compositions in defiance through which they had minutely traveled, scenes in which it did not matter what happened to a man.

And while these flashing things tumbled past Hal's bitter attention, he said quietly, "If it interests you what Frederick Ireland would think, I'd ask him."

"You know him better'n I do," said Crack. "What do you figger he'll think?"

"How well do you know him?"

"Don't know him," said Crack; "but you'd ought to. You're his son, aren't you?"

"Is that a statement?" Hal asked. "Or a request for information."

"Don't seem like you were exactly denyin' it."

"No," said Hal, "I don't remember having denied it, since I've known you."

He glanced at Barry as he reached for a cigarette. She hadn't stirred.

"You're Ireland's son," Crack said. "Frederick—the big wackey."

"Sure," said Hal confidently. "And you got no idea what he'll think when he hears you been caught in a married woman's room by her husband?"

"If I told you what you didn't like, you wouldn't believe it," said Hal, as if Crack were being a little dull-witted about it.

The shy smile slipped over Crack's fair-skinned face again, and he said, "Look, Ireland, we don't want to get you in a lotta trouble." A hot swirling under Hal's composure made him hold himself hard; in Los Angeles, in the room alone with Crack, he would remember that "we."

"Well?" said Hal, "S'pose you don't."

"Here's the thing," Crack said: "if you'll talk dough, the whole works stops right here in this room—between the three of us. If you won't, we gotta go to Uncle Frederick. An' after that, it's court an' the newspapers."

"That's a program anyway," said Hal. "Push item number one off, and go to Mr. Ireland. Is that all you want to know?"

"Don't you want save yourself trouble?"

"Yes, you bet," said Hal, and the casual readiness of his own voice fortified him. "But I don't see any trouble."

"You don't," said Crack. "You don't wanna stop this right here?"

Hal welcomed with vicious pleasure the undertone of impatience. He said, "By paying you money?"

"Yes."

Hal puffed the fragment of a laugh through his nose and said, "Wouldn't pay you a nickel even if it meant anything to me."

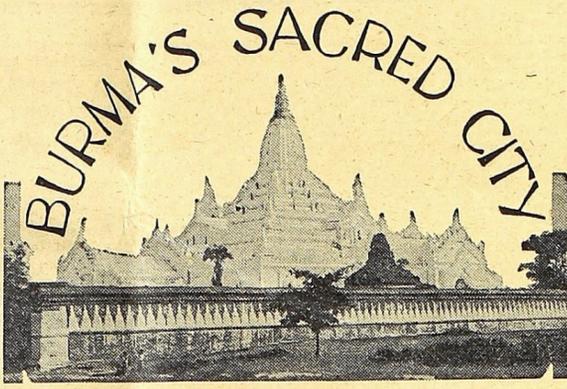

"Maybe you don't think I know you're Ireland's son," said Crack, his voice breaking peevishly as he raised it. "I haven't denied it yet," said Hal. "Anyone'd think you didn't want to go ahead with this."

Crack watched him again and liked it less. The cunning in his eyes tried for a space of minutes to challenge Hal's unworried look, then suddenly the peevishness blew to a hot ember of malice, hissing in his words like a coal settling through snow: "By G—d! If all this is wasted, I'll—" With one unguarded look of sweating hatred of Hal, he jerked a pencil and a telegraph form from his pocket and went to the bureau, elbows out, to write quickly at a message.

Muscle Bound

Several conditions are described by the term muscle bound, but perhaps the commonest is that by which muscles, through constant practice, are trained to oppose one another rather than to act together in efficient work. Thus, when a muscle is called into play involuntarily its opponent also contracts and the result is less efficient action. The condition can obviously be altered first by rest and then more efficient training of the muscles.

The Ananda, a Temple of Pagan.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

PAGAN, Burma's Sacred City, is solemnity and mystery; about it is enchantment. Here, 90 miles southwest of Mandalay, the traveler finds himself in the midst of a veritable forest of temples and pagodas, large and small, nearly perfect or almost unrecognizable because of decay. Before their vast bulks the traveler becomes painfully conscious of his littleness and insignificance. His mere presence seems an impertinence. The crumbling walls, the fallen pinnacles and the desolation are eloquent of the vanity of fame, the hollowness of glory, and the futility of human effort.

Of the 5,000 or more temples that are still to be seen, the Ananda, the Thathyinyu, and Gawdawpalin, standing all three within a circle of a quarter of a mile radius, are surpassingly beautiful and majestic.

The Ananda rises like a structure of foam. On its summit, like the flame upon some altar, a slender, golden spire gathers the radiance of the sun and flings it forth again to every quarter. It is the first of all the temples to command the traveler's attention; it is the last upon which he gazes as the swift steamer bears him away.

The Thathyinyu has suffered more from time and neglect than has the Ananda. Its walls are blackened and much of the detail of its ornamentation has fallen away. It is hardly beautiful; it is majestic.

The third temple has neither the exquisite beauty of the Ananda nor the sublimity of the Thathyinyu; yet in the perfect harmony of its proportions, the refinement of every detail, it has a charm of its own. It contributes with the others to the spell which Pagan casts over even the most careless visitor.

Lovely View From Circuit House.

Past the Gawdawpalin the path leads on to the circuit house. At every step is revealed some new grouping of effects, some new harmonies of proportion or felicities of detail, and from the spacious veranda of the resthouse the view is one never to be forgotten. Westward the river and the hills, silver and gold and blue in the sunset; near at hand the Gawdawpalin, with orange light and soft purple shadows mingling and shifting over its huge battlements; farther away the Ananda and the Thathyinyu, now indistinct in the twilight; and all around, the half-seen outlines of pagodas.

Heroic achievements, the basest villainy, successful subtlety—all these are mingled in the history of this ruined city.

The greatness of Pagan, and with it reliable Burmese history, dates from the accession of Anawrata, about A. D. 1017. This truly remarkable monarch won by the sword a splendid empire and established a dynasty that continued in power for more than 200 years. At the beginning of his reign he devoted himself to the moral and religious uplift of his people. A corrupt and degrading "Naga-worship," or obedience to devils, in the form of serpents, had come through Assam from northern India.

Anawrata's Great Reform.

Soon after Anawrata ascended the throne Buddhist missionaries arrived at Pagan from the country of the Talains, a people dwelling to the south and, as a result of the frequent and easy communication with India by sea, highly civilized. These Talain missionaries found the king a zealous convert. He expelled the priests of the abominable cult that for so many years had debauched his people, strictly proscribed the Naga worship, and did everything in his power to further the efforts of the preachers.

His fervor had, however, one lamentable result. Hearing that there were in Thaton, the Talain capital, copies of the Buddhist Sacred Books and several precious relics, he sent a noble envoy to beg for such portions as might be spared. His reasonable request was refused in a singularly insolent and shortsighted manner.

With characteristic energy Anawrata assembled an army and a fleet and moved against Thaton. He was completely successful, and as the spoils of victory he carried back to Pagan not only the books and the priceless relics but the king and queen of the fallen city, together with principal nobles, 32 white elephants, and a host of 30,000 artificers and scholars.

This signal success only fanned the flame of Anawrata's zeal. A fresh field for enterprise was found in Ceylon. There was in that island a most sacred relic, nothing less than a tooth of Gautama. Such a trophy was beyond price and its possession by Pagan would sanctify and enoble the king's name. Accordingly, with four trusty captains, mounted on matchless steeds, Anawrata hastened to the seashore and embarked for Ceylon at nightfall. But unseem hands were fighting on the side of the sovereign of Ceylon and sacred tooth. The ship sped swiftly on through the night. Yet when the travelers awoke it was to find themselves anchored a little below Pagan!

Baffled but not defeated, Anawrata sent an envoy to Sangabodhi, the king, an envoy who bore many costly presents and who was instructed to demand the tooth of Gautama in return.

Gautama Supplied Teeth.

Sangabodhi, unwilling to surrender his most precious possession, yet fearful of arousing the ire of so dreadful a monarch as the king of Pagan, was in sore straits. In his distress he expressed the wish that he might have two such teeth. No sooner had he given utterance to this desire than the tooth produced a fellow exactly resembling itself! In fact, the two were indistinguishable until the original declared itself by rising into the air and performing miracles.

The duplicate was placed in a casket of gold and delivered to the envoy, who carried it back with great pomp to Pagan.

To solve the difficulty of choosing a site for the enshrinement of the prize, the casket was placed on the back of a white elephant, and it was announced that wherever the animal halted there should be the resting place of the tooth.

Much to the disappointment of all, the elephant bearing his precious burden crossed the river and knelt down near the Tangyi hills. This was very far from the palace, and the king expressed his regret that he also had not two sacred teeth. Here again the wish was father to the miracle. Immediately there were two teeth instead of one! The duplicate was placed on the elephant's back and the beast was bidden to move on.

Five times the elephant halted before reaching the neighborhood of the palace, and at each place the tooth was miraculously multiplied, until at last the site of the Lokananda was reached and the king professed himself satisfied. At each stop a shrine was built, and at the last was reared the pile which still remains as one of the monuments to Anawrata's greatness.

Anawrata's end was tragic. One day, as he was riding through the forest on an elephant, he struck his head against the branch of a tree in which dwelt two nats—Teinbin and his wife, Leinbin. In a fit of rage the monarch dragged Leinbin down from the tree and beat her mercilessly.

Teinbin, in his turn, enraged at the king's cruelty, lay in wait for Anawrata in the depths of the jungle. Taking the form of a huge white buffalo, he furiously charged the unhappy monarch and succeeded in impaling him upon one of his horns. The body was never found.

Conquered by the Chinese.

For more than two centuries the successors of Anawrata more or less worthily maintained the dignity and prestige of Pagan. But in the north was developing a power that was soon to engulf not Pagan only, but almost the entire continent of Asia. Kublai Khan in 1254 conquered what is now Yunnan, and the Chinese were thus brought into contact with Burma. To the resulting conflict there could be but one issue. In 1286 Pagan fell before invaders from the north, never again to attain historical significance. Of the great battle between the two armies on the plain of Vociana, Marco Polo gives a graphic and spirited account.

Though, under the circumstances, the fall of Pagan was inevitable, the last king of that unfortunate capital stands in pitiful contrast to the great Anawrata. Known to history as Tayokpyemin, the King Who Ran Away From the Chinese, he was utterly unworthy of his noble office. In the Mingalazedi is an inscription which commemorates his achievements at the table. Here it is recorded that he never dined off fewer than three hundred dishes!

While the Chinese host was yet a long way from the city, the cowardly king fled down the river to Basseln. When the cooks whom he had taken with him were able to produce only 150 dishes, the full horror of his position dawned upon the unhappy monarch. He burst into childish tears and exclaimed, "Now I am poor indeed!"

When the invaders had taken their toll of Pagan and retired, he thought of returning. At Prome, however, he was met by one of his sons, who offered him poisoned food. For a time the weeping hesitated. At last, convinced that it was better to die so than by the sword, he yielded and met a fate that, as few writers have avoided the temptation to remark, was singularly appropriate to his character.

FASCINATING TALES OF LOST MINES
By Editha L. Watson

THE HUNTER'S TREASURE

A HUNTER'S trick of shaving out small wooden spades resulted in the finding of a lost gold mine in the Breckenridge district in Colorado. But a prospector's ill luck in losing himself resulted in the losing of the mine again.

Breckenridge, as everyone knows who knows about gold, is a mining town not far from Fairplay and Alma—those rich camps where men still find abundant gold.

In the early '60s a certain hunter used to come into Denver to spend the winters. He brought skins in with him, and also rough gold in pleasant quantities. The skins, he said, were produced by his autumn hunting near Breckenridge, but he was silent about the gold.

He had a peculiar habit of shaving out small wooden spades, with which he shoveled the snow away from the doorstep of his cabin.

It was in the '90s, a good thirty years later, that a prospector rambling about in the Breckenridge district came across an old cabin, a tunnel, and a dump. On the dump were several small wooden spades, worn down almost to their handles. In the tunnel lay another spade of the same sort, which showed very few signs of use. The ore which could be seen was a black, talcy stuff.

The prospector had no receptacle except a tobacco sack. This he filled, and as he left the place he took one of the spades along. He was anxious to get into Breckenridge to see what sort of ore this might prove to be.

But on the way in he became confused. It is not hard to lose oneself in the mountains at any time. Even prospectors, whose sense of direction is remarkably keen, may get turned around. This one certainly did, but at last he got into Breckenridge all right, and there he told his story with all the proper gusto and detail. Here was the spade to prove it. And here was the ore, too—where was that blamed sack? Must be in the other pocket—no—well, he had it when he left the mine. Must have lost it on the way. Oh well, he could go back to the place easy. But somehow he never could find it again.

If you ever go prospecting around Breckenridge, and come upon a cabin, a tunnel, and a dump, worn-down spades and black, talcy ore, try not to get confused before you get back to town. Because it may possibly turn out to be that you have discovered the hunter's treasure.

THE MINER'S PARADISE

AT TRUCHAS, north of Santa Fe, New Mexico, two Frenchmen came along some fifty years ago and found rich ore. They were great friends, and they worked gaily and energetically together, singing and joking, making light of the heavy labor.

Some time passed, and at last the partners had a sizable stake. One day they were discussing the future, which had never seemed more fair, and one of the Frenchmen said to the other, "I know what I shall do, mon ami. In St. Louis is a beautiful girl who loves me and waits for me. Why should I not go and bring her here? You would be charmed with her."

"Marvelous! We would never more be lonely," responded his friend. "Hasten, I beg of you, to go and to return."

So the happy Frenchman hurried—as much as was possible in the '80s—to fetch his sweetheart from St. Louis. She was indeed a beautiful girl, and the other man, who had a Frenchman's eye for pulchritude and a Frenchman's heart for romance, began to express his admiration in pointed terms.

Things went on peacefully until the first Frenchman began to suspect that he was being betrayed. Quarrels followed, and at last, after he had trailed the two one evening and found them embracing, he challenged his erstwhile friend to a duel with knives—a duel to the death.

Both men were young and strong—both wished to live, and both wanted the girl's affections. She, knowing that she was forgotten for the moment in the heat of the combat, quickly packed a burro with as much sacked gold as it would carry, prepared food and water for a journey, and noiselessly slipped away. After all, gold was far more important to her than their tiresome gallantries.

The duel lasted for some time, but at last both men fell to the ground, mortally wounded, and before the sun set both had expired.

About the year 1908 a man named Anderson happened to be roaming about near Truchas, and stumbled upon the evidence of the tragedy. Apparently no one had been near the mine since the girl left, for there were the two skeletons, knives in their bony hands, and there was all the paraphernalia of the mine, just as it had been left twenty-five years before.

DOGIES, DEACONS STILL HEARD IN SPEECH OF WEST

Cowboys may not be churchgoers, but they know their "deacons"; they may not be familiar with interior decorations, but they're well acquainted with "hatracks."

Although much of the picturesque language commonly associated with the "Wild West" of a few decades ago has been swallowed up in changing times and customs, a few of the terms applied to live stock in another generation still linger on in the modern live stock and meat industry, according to the Institute of American Meat Packers.

"Notwithstanding the fact that tremendous improvements have been made in live stock breeding in recent decades and many new terms have been coined to identify the better grades of cattle, hogs, and sheep, the same names applied to certain grades fifty years ago are still accepted today," the institute explained.

"For instance, a 'deacon' is still a very young calf, and a 'hatrack' is still merely an animal that is too thin to be sold for fresh beef."

Other terms which have survived in the face of vast changes and improvements in the live stock and meat industry include "dogies," which are small cattle native to the southern states and made famous in a cowboy song-lit of recent memory; "singers," which are hogs with narrow backs and straight sides well adapted for lean bacon; "mules,"—sometimes called "moolies,"—which are hornless breeds of cattle; "jack pots," for mixed lots of cattle; and "pewees," which are exceptionally small pigs or lambs.

THE FIRST GAME LAW

Two hundred years ago the Indians in Kentucky set aside game refuges for bears and created what may have been the first game law in America, says Vernon Bailey, retired naturalist of the Biological Survey. Bear fat, bear meat, and bear skins were the most prized returns of the hunt. Large areas were set aside as "beloved bear grounds" where only a limited number of animals could be killed each year, so that a permanent supply of these animals would be maintained. Mr. Bailey believes it might be well today to follow the example of the Kentucky Indians, and establish "beloved bear grounds."

Plan for Adequate National Defense

Rebuilding of the Army and Navy Is Under Way.

Washington.—New steps, fostered by the administration, for more adequate national defense are being made on three fronts—land, sea and air. Plans for new battleships are under way, a mechanized army of swift mobility is being speeded, and new air bases along the coasts are to be established. These are the foremost protective measures.

Congress has given the government sufficient funds to develop a mechanized army and a scientific navy of smashing gun power. More than $800,000,000 was supplied in the 1936 army and navy appropriation bills.

High-Speed Tanks.

The army plans to equip more Infantry units with the high-powered semi-automatic rifle, which has three times the firing power of the standard Springfield rifle. Acquisition of high-speed armored tanks capable of traveling 70 miles an hour and combat cars, equipped with sponge-rubber tires and with turrets containing 50 caliber machine guns, and one pounder rifles, is to follow.

New armor protection has been developed for seven and 15-ton trucks, to be obtained. Armored scout cars equipped with radio and carrying 50 caliber machine guns are on the schedule.

With the Wilcox air base bill enacted the administration is looking forward to the gradual adoption of a new policy of national defense.

The Wilcox bill, recently enacted, authorizes the establishment of a series of air bases along the Atlantic and Pacific coastlines, on the Gulf of Mexico and in Alaska. It is hoped that as much as $125,000,000 will be expended on the creation of these bases during the next five years.

Wall of Defense.

Proponents of military aviation claim these air bases will establish a veritable "Chinese wall" around this country and that it will be adequate in defending it from attack.

The new air bases will be linked up with naval stations wherever possible to provide the maximum of efficiency.

The United States is also drafting plans for new naval vessels that can be thrown into production at once—in the event of a world naval race.

Naval leaders here hope the British-Japanese program of announcing in advance, what the naval program of each country will be for some years to come, will achieve results of mutual confidence that are predicted for it.

But they are skeptical, and frankly believe there is little hope of any effective results from a "gentleman's agreement" that isn't even over a signature.

In any event, this country will be forced to build seven new battleships, weighing about 35,000 tons and costing about $50,000,000 each, before 1942. That program will not increase the American naval strength. The ships will be replacements of vessels already in service.

Approximately half a dozen cruisers also must be replaced on the same basis, and by the end of the period the aircraft carriers Lexington and Saratoga will be nearing the obsolete stage.

ANOTHER NEW EXPERIMENT

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

Wonders never cease! In their laboratories today scientists are discovering new cures for disease, more efficient treatment for physical and psychic disorders and new applications of nature's laws to the development of the race. Now comes another strange and rather gruesome experiment which, if successful, may contribute great benefit to victims of infectious diseases.

Enthusiasm lends aid, and, what at other times looks like a tiresome and taxing piece of work, is accomplished with surprisingly little effort. It actually is easy. The energy expended does not drain the strength, nor wear the nerves.

This state of affairs exists whatever the age of the person. But it is increasingly true as one grows older, or when one is not very strong, or has passed the convalescent stage of an illness—the time when vitality is just enough to carry one through imperative jobs plus the adaptable ones, provided they are done when the desire seizes the workers.

Work With Willing Mind.

These times strike an onlooker as ridiculous or amusing if they seem inopportune. Sometimes they are. Nevertheless when the spirit is strong for accomplishment, the body rises to meet its demands. The strain is eased, and as it is this strain, in large measure that saps energy, the proper adjustment releases it, and work slips away on light wings.

To combat the worker, to reason with her, to prove it is not time to do the task she sets out to perform, is often as draining to mind and physique as the actual labor of performance—and nothing is accomplished. Should she insist on doing what she started out to do, the joy of getting the thing done has oozed away, and with it has gone the atmosphere of ease. The reaction is apt to be what the critic prophesied, because the task is done under fire of rebuke. This may not be verbal, after the first protest, but the spirit of reproof is felt. This does not lose its grip.

Pleasant Help.

It behooves the members of a family, to refrain from raising objections when one of them has the energy to do a needed bit of work although it would be a difficult time for them, to prod themselves to do it. Instead, if they feel the task is too much for her, let them take from the worker's shoulders some of the routine jobs, unobtrusively. This will prove a delight to her, and continue to keep the spirits high, and relieve the person from undesirable reactions.

When strength is sufficient, and the worker is in good health, bothersome reactions would scarcely occur, yet none the less, the performance of the adaptable jobs remain for her to do at such times as the work seems easiest. It is not that these pieces of work are unimportant to good housekeeping, but that they are apart from the routine, and hence can be done at the convenience of the worker.

The Thankful Attitude.

When once we start to give thanks, in place of making complaints, the reversal, if we have been of a complaining nature, will prove a revelation of happiness. We shall be surprised at the good we have, even though we may have it interspersed with misfortunes. Today we are looking too much on the disturbing affairs in our lives and not enough on the fortunate ones. The reason for this is that most persons have had reverses of some kind in financial matters. Our eyes are blinded to the truth that money is not everything. Good health is more, yet we worry and complain over our adversities when in good health, until we wear ourselves out and become physically ill. So we add misery to misfortune.

It is true that some things for which to give thanks are what are termed negative rather than positive blessings. We are not in pain. That may be negative, but it certainly is something to be thankful for. We do not go hungry. That is negative, yet it is surely cause for thanks. We have pure air to breathe. Imagine what it must have been on the battlefields, with fumes of gas and fetid odors surrounding us. Sweet pure air is a blessing.

question arises—what possible benefit can accrue from such experiments? The answer is, there are two very definite results possible. The first, and perhaps most interesting, is the question which arose in the mind of a young man, the son of a member of the faculty of one of our large universities, who volunteered his own body to be frozen to death "in order to find out if there is life after death." Would it not seem passing strange, if, after all these years, the fact of immortality could be substantiated by a strictly scientific test? The second benefit claimed for this freezing process is that it can destroy germs. It is reported that a monkey suffering from tuberculosis, when thawed out retained no evidences of the disease. It has been suspected for some time that at certain degrees below zero, some germs can be killed. Heat can produce that effect, why not cold—so the argument runs.

We were skeptical of the anti-toxins for diphtheria and other diseases, but time has proven their value. The "freezing process," however, to say the least, is an exceedingly dangerous experiment. Men have "dared" much in the interest of scientific investigation. Risks were taken which resulted in many deaths. But, will there be sufficient number of volunteers to "be frozen to death"? If so, will they be able to tell us if there is a heaven, and what it is like? Will they be able to demonstrate that deadly germs can be frozen out of the human system? Maybe so—several questions still remain:

Do we need such evidence of another life to come? Would it strengthen our faith in immortality? There still remains the matter of germs. Who will volunteer to be "frozen to death" in the interest of science?

Death to Poisonous Black Widow Spider

One of the most poisonous insects which troubles mankind is the Black Widow spider. While this insect is fairly easily identified by the hour-glass marking on the under side, oftentimes people have been bitten by it before they have had time to discover its dangerous character. The best plan is to regard all spiders with suspicion, and to destroy them as soon as they are discovered.

A reliable insect spray, containing an ample quantity of Pyrethrin, a product derived from Pyrethrum flowers, is not only sure death to spiders, including the dread Black Widow, but kills flies, mosquitoes and other insect pests.

In making up a product of this kind, it is important that ample Pyrethrin be included to give a complete killing effect. Unless sufficient Pyrethrin are contained in the mixture insects may be stunned and rendered groggy for a time, but recover from the effects of the spray.

question arises—what possible benefit can accrue from such experiments? The answer is, there are two very definite results possible. The first, and perhaps most interesting, is the question which arose in the mind of a young man, the son of a member of the faculty of one of our large universities, who volunteered his own body to be frozen to death "in order to find out if there is life after death." Would it not seem passing strange, if, after all these years, the fact of immortality could be substantiated by a strictly scientific test? The second benefit claimed for this freezing process is that it can destroy germs. It is reported that a monkey suffering from tuberculosis, when thawed out retained no evidences of the disease. It has been suspected for some time that at certain degrees below zero, some germs can be killed. Heat can produce that effect, why not cold—so the argument runs.

We were skeptical of the anti-toxins for diphtheria and other diseases, but time has proven their value. The "freezing process," however, to say the least, is an exceedingly dangerous experiment. Men have "dared" much in the interest of scientific investigation. Risks were taken which resulted in many deaths. But, will there be sufficient number of volunteers to "be frozen to death"? If so, will they be able to tell us if there is a heaven, and what it is like? Will they be able to demonstrate that deadly germs can be frozen out of the human system? Maybe so—several questions still remain:

Do we need such evidence of another life to come? Would it strengthen our faith in immortality? There still remains the matter of germs. Who will volunteer to be "frozen to death" in the interest of science?

Urushi-No-Ki

The original "Lacquer" was an Oriental product of Chinese and Japanese artists from the sap of the rhus vernicifera, known to the Japanese as Urushi-No-Ki and to the Chinese as Tsichon (varnish tree). The term is at present usually restricted in America and Europe to coatings of which the predominant ingredient is a solution of nitrocellulose.

In the third inning the local team took the lead and never relinquished it during the remainder of the contest. Quick doubled to start off that frame and went to third on Mark's infield out. H. Lixey fled to center and Quick came home after the catch. Cunningham singled, went to third when M. Lixey also singled, and scored on a passed ball to give the home boys a 3-1 advantage. In the fifth the Tawas team turned the game into a one-sided affair by scoring five runs. After Cunningham had grounded out in that inning, M. Lixey beat out a slow roller to third and scored a moment later when Mallon drove a long triple to the race track in center field. O. Lixey singled to score Maion, but was thrown out attempting to steal second. A base on balls to Manager Laidlaw started things moving again and J. Lixey followed with a sharp double to right-center, sending Laidlaw to third. Both runners scored when Quick poked this spot to triple into deep right. Mark singled Quick home for the fifth run of the inning before H. Lixey fled to center for the final out.

The score was made 9-1 in favor of Tawas in the eighth inning when Cunningham hoisted the ball onto the race track in right-center for a triple and scored on M. Lixey's infield out. In the ninth the locals added two more runs to their already sizeable total on a base on balls to Laidlaw, singles by J. Lixey and Quick and an infield out.

The single counter the Tawasing boys chalked up in the first frame was the only one they could score off M. Lixey until they mustered enough strength in their half of the ninth to push over two more. After Quick had made a nice catch of Norris' line drive in that inning, Reid singled and scored when Whitehouse tripled to right. Munroe fled to center and Whitehouse scampered home after the catch. Lixey then struck out Newton to end the game.

Rolak, mainstay of the Twining hurling staff, was hit hard by the slugging Tawas squad. A total of 17 hits, including three triples and two doubles, was made of his delivery during the game. He issued five bases on balls and struck out three men.

Our baseball team won its first game by defeating East Tawas, 7-3. Several new faces were seen in our line-up as only three regulars from last year's team are back this year. Bill Mallon was on the mound for our team while Henize and G. Staudacher performed a similar duty for East Tawas. Bill struck out 15 of our opponents and allowed only three hits, while walking five. Walter Zollweg and Leslie Frisch were the batting stars of the day, Walter getting a double, single, and a walk in three trips to the plate, while Leslie got a double and single in three tries.

Ohio's First Settlement
Ohio was settled soon after the Revolutionary war, which made "the West" a part of the new republic. The first permanent settlement was established at Marietta by a land company. This was called the Ohio company, and was formed in 1787 in New England by Revolutionary officers, with a view to opening up the West. The government sold the company 1,500,000 acres, and the company recruited settlers and resold to them. In the winter of 1787-88 the first party set out from the east and arrived April 7, 1788, at the spot chosen for a town, at the junction of the Muskingum and Ohio rivers.
