With the talk of Jack Frost and Old Man Winter arriving to take up residence for the next several months attention is called to a recent find, as it will possibly give some consolation to those who still believe that either summer is having its last fling or Old Mother Nature is trying to kid the people. Yesterday while inspecting a new site for location of a sewer, John A. Mark, Jr., found a fully ripened wild strawberry and several blossoms on the same plant. The berry was about the size of a marble and was not confused with the so-called ever-bearing type.

John N. Brugger of Bay City spent Sunday with his parents.

Mr. and Mrs. Mark-Bearslee and baby of Detroit spent the week end with the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Bearslee.

James Dillon and Hugo Keiser left Sunday for Ann Arbor and Ypsilanti, respectively, where they will attend college.

Mrs. Emil Kasischke and son, Walter, spent the week end with relatives at Yale.

Beginning Wednesday, September 30th, East Tawas stores will remain open until nine o'clock Wednesday of each week.

Turbulent Reign Of Mary Stuart Filmed

"Mary of Scotland," RKO Radio's adaptation of the famous Maxwell Anderson play, takes advantage of one of history's most vivid lives in presenting Katharine Hepburn as the reckless ruler who risked life and throne for brief romance with the Earl of Bothwell. Fredric March portrays the bold and arrogant Bothwell, wooer of the reckless Scottish beauty. Hers was a career as turbulent and colorful as any creation of fiction. She lived and loved as she chose in spite of her ruthless barons' determination to dictate not only her state policies and religion but her romantic life as well.

John Ford, winner of the 1935 Academy directorial Award for his work on "The Informer," directed. "Mary of Scotland" will be shown at the Rivoli Theatre, Tawas City, on Sunday and Monday, September 27 and 28.

LOCALS LOSE TO TWINING SUNDAY, 2-1

Bill Mallon and Gingerich Stage Fine Pitchers' Battle

Tawas, after briefly holding a 500 percentage in the league standings, was toppled below that mark again last Sunday when the Twining crew eked out a 2-1 victory over the local club. The contest took place at Twining.

Faced with a badly shattered lineup for the game, Tawas was forced to resort to various forms of strategy in order to hold down the Twining team. How well they succeeded is shown by the closeness of the score, as the Twining lads are recognized as a powerful bunch of sluggers.

Featuring the contest was the pitching duel between Bill Mallon of the locals and Gingerich of Twining. The former was nicked for seven safeties by his opposing batsmen while Tawas had to be content with only two off Gingerich. Mallon fanned 13 batters, walked five, and hit one batter. Gingerich struck out 16, passed four, and also hit one batter.

With the two hurlers battling along on about even terms, it was left up to the "breaks" of the game to decide the ultimate winner. These came in the form of errors, as neither team had an earned run. Tawas was the first to be smiled upon by Lady Luck, scoring its tally in the third. Becker singled and stole second, but was thrown out at third when Brown grounded to the box. Brown was forced at second by Zolweg. The latter swiped second, and when G. Burnside failed to cover that base Catcher Norris' throw went into center field and Zolweg came all the rest of the way home. Twining's turn didn't come until the eighth inning when a pair of errors allowed Gettle to score the tying run. Before Dame Fortune might change sides again the Arenac boys in the ninth pushed over the deciding tally. P. Burnside opened the inning with a triple. Norris, next up, attempted a squeeze play. Mallon quickly pounced upon his grounder and threw home to get Burnside, but Laidlaw was apparently not set for the crash which followed at the plate, the ball slipping out of his hands, and the game was over.

To Provide Duck Foods In Huron Forest Lakes

In order to make more duck foods available 900 pounds of wild celery and 20,000 duck potato bulbs are to be planted in the lakes and dam ponds in the Huron National Forest. The shipment just received from Minnesota will be planted within a week.

The planting of these foods is a simple process, according to D. V. Gray, wild-life manager for the Forest. The celery is planted in four to ten feet of water by wrapping the seed pods in small balls of clay or mud. These balls sink to the lake bottom and lie dormant until next spring when they will begin to grow. The duck potatoes are planted in shallow water about a foot deep near the edges of lakes or dam ponds. A sharp stick is used to make a hole and the tuber is dropped in and covered with mud.

The ducks that will be benefited by this planting are canvas backs, redheads, blacks, mallards, baldpates, coats, pintails and lesser scaups. It is hoped by these plantings that more ducks will be encouraged to use the various waters of the Huron National Forest on their fall and spring migrations.

How Eccentric Iosco Man Revolutionized Warfare

A paragraph in Milton Mackaye's "This Man Roosevelt" which appeared in a recent number of the Ladies' Home Journal serves to recall the story of an Iosco man who played an important part in the Allies' defense against German submarines in the Great War.

Mackaye says that one of President Roosevelt's most prepossessing qualities is his willingness to listen, even to bores, on the chance that they may have an important idea to contribute, and that this accessibility has more than once done the president a good turn. He illustrates the point with a story of the hectic days of early 1918 when Roosevelt was Assistant Secretary of the Navy. The principal figure in the story, although unnamed by Mackaye, was this Iosco county man.

"A tall gentleman with a beard and black bag dodged the help at the Navy Department one day and got into the Assistant Secretary's office," says Mackaye. "The visitor calmly announced that he could win the war. Roosevelt felt sure that the man was a crackpot, but he could not bring himself to refuse him audience. This was fortunate. The Navy at the time was looking for a way to make mine fields more effective in blockading submarines at German bases. The bearded visitor had just what was needed—a system of nets and mines and a device by which the explosives were detonated when a vessel touched any part of the elaborate mesh. The scheme was immediately added to the English Channel defenses and by late summer of 1918 the North Sea was full of nets. The Assistant Secretary's eccentric visitor had revolutionized submarine defense."

The eccentric visitor with the beard and black bag who crashed the Assistant Secretary's office and made it possible for several million American doughboys to enter French and English ports with some degree of security from watery graves was the late Rev. John R. Stilwell, at that time a resident of Plainfield township. Shortly after the war Rev. Stilwell received a citation from the British government, was thanked by King George V for his meritorious service and was acclaimed by the British press as one of the saviors of the allied cause. Rev. Stilwell died in 1930 at Lynn Haven, Florida. Following the war he had been an instructor at St. Andrews School for Boys, Sevanee, Tennessee, and the Du Bose Training School, Monteagle in the same state.

TWO COUNTY CONVENTIONS HELD HERE

Republicans Met Tuesday, Democrats Monday Afternoon

County conventions for the two major parties were held in the city this week. The Democrats met Monday afternoon and the Republicans Tuesday evening.

The Democratic convention did not have a large attendance. The principal business was to elect delegates to the state convention which will be held September 26 at Battle Creek. Following are the delegates: Eugene Bing, Tawas City; Robert Dahne, Whittemore; Harry Gaul, Tawas City; R. G. Killmaster, Oscoda, and Mrs. Ida Rahi, Hale.

The delegates are to be sent un-instructed.

About 60 people attended the Republican convention Tuesday evening. Delegates elected to attend the state convention which will be held September 29 at Grand Rapids were:

William DeGrow, East Tawas; Harry T. England, Oscoda; Edgar Louks, Whittemore; Edna M. Otis, East Tawas, and Lloyd S. Little, Melvor.

The following alternates were also elected: Russell H. McKenzie, East Tawas; Willis Kraus, AuSable; Wm. Hatton, Tawas City; Geo. A. Prescott, Jr., Tawas City, and Estelle Gardner, Oscoda.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Republicans:

Whereas, the need of a sane government, "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people," is recognized as vital, if this nation is to retain its place as a free nation; and whereas, the present trend of those who govern is a departure from the principles of Americanism, and the great need of today is a return to the principles upon which this nation was founded; therefore, be it resolved, that we voice our approval of the platform as adopted by the Republican national convention.

COST OF RELIEF TO THE TAXPAYER

How much does the cost of relief in Michigan cost the Michigan taxpayer? For the average property owner in the state during July it amounted to 11 cents for every $1,000 of assessed valuation for the share the counties and local municipalities contributed, according to a statement from George F. Granger, assistant relief administrator. "However," Mr. Granger said, "during the first seven months of 1936, approximately 61 percent of all relief costs were borne by the state government through diversion of sales tax collections. Total relief costs for these seven months amounted to $13,222,772. The state paid $8,065,891 of this bill which amounted to 28 percent of the total sales tax collections. Consequently, in addition to the 11 cents paid by property owners for every $1,000 of assessed valuation for the local contribution to relief, eight mills out of every dollar spent by any one in Michigan for commodity purchases went to pay for the state's share of the bill.

"Had local communities been forced to foot the entire bill, the cost to property tax payers would have been increased by 145 percent from 11 cents to 27 cents per $1,000 of assessed valuation. "In some counties, of course, the actual cost to taxpayers was much less than the state average. In Monroe county, for example, it amounted to only $0.02 per $1,000; in Eaton, $0.3, and in Calhoun, $0.8, in July."

"To Mary--With Love" A Great Love Story of Today

A love story, gallant and glorious, of two modern sweethearts, hiding their tears and holding back their hearts, romancing lightly yet loving deeply, "To Mary--With Love," Twentieth Century-Fox triumph, shows at the Family Theatre, East Tawas, on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, September 27-28-29.

Co-starring Warner Baxter and Myrna Loy for the third time, and providing them with a story and background which enables them to surpass the heights they reached together in "Penthouse" and "Broadway Bill," the picture is an important and appealing story of love today, a splendid love that takes its place with the screen's great romances.

Opening in the hectic days of the late 'twenties, with the marriage of Baxter and Myrna, the film reflects in its love story the spirit of today.

Ian Hunter, Claire Trevor and Jean Dixon are also featured in "To Mary--With Love," which was directed by John Cromwell.

To the Citizens of Iosco County

Senator Couzens Defeated in Michigan Primaries—Maine Recaptured by Republicans—Notable Gathering of Savants at Harvard Tercentenary.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
© Western Newspaper Union.

REPUBLICANS were highly gratified by the results of the Michigan primary election for two reasons: First, because three out of five persons who went to the polls asked for Republican ballots; second, because a U. S. Senator James Couzens, a Republican who has openly declared that he is supporting President Roosevelt for re-election, lost his fight for re-nomination. Couzens, one of the wealthiest members of the senate, was badly defeated by former Gov. Wilbur M. Brucker, and there is more than a suspicion that he knew his fate beforehand. Brucker, who is only forty-two years old, has been in public life for almost twenty years. The Republicans re-nominated Frank D. Fitzgerald for the governorship.

Sen. Couzens

On the Democratic side Representative Prentiss M. Brown won the senatorial nomination against Louis B. Ward who was supported by Father Coughlin. For governor they chose Frank Murphy, high commissioner to the Philippines and former mayor of Detroit. Both Murphy and his defeated opponent, George Welsh, campaigned as Roosevelt supporters.

In the New Hampshire primaries Gov. H. Styles Bridges won the Republican senatorial nomination, ending the effort of former Senator George H. Moses to stage a comeback. The Democrats put up Representative William N. Rogers. Nominees for governor are Maj. Francis P. Murphy, Republican, and Amos N. Blandin, Democrat.

Massachusetts will have for senator either Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., Republican, or James M. Curley, now governor, Democrat. John W. Haigis, Republican, and Charles F. Hurley, Democrat, were nominated for the governorship.

The gubernatorial nominees in Wisconsin are: Gov. Philip La Follette, Progressive; Alexander Wiley, Republican, and Arthur W. Lueck, Democrat.

MAINE, the "barometer" state, is back in the Republican column at least so far as its state ticket is concerned. The G. O. P. captured the United States senatorship, the governorship and three congressional seats. Senator Wallace H. White, Republican, defeated Gov. Louis J. Brann, who sought to unseat him. Lewis O. Barrows, Republican, won the governorship by a substantial majority over F. Harold Dubord, Democrat.

The vote cast broke all records for size and interest in the election was intense. The state had been visited by both President Roosevelt, as he returned from his vacation cruise, and Gov. Alf M. Landon, the Republican Presidential nominee, who made speeches there only a few days ago. Colonel Knox, vice presidential candidate on the Republican ticket, also had canvassed the state. Brann, who was elected governor in 1932 and re-elected two years later, was the first Democrat to hold that office in Maine and was personally popular. White was elected senator in 1930 after ten years in the house.

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE WALLACE has approved the new $10,000,000 seed corn loan program of the AAA. The government will advance farmers two types of loans on seed corn stored on the farm. Advances of $1.75 a bushel will be made to farmers; on 1,000,000 bushels of selected corn. The government will have the option of buying this corn at $3.50 a bushel up to April 1, 1937.

The second type of loan permits advances of 55 cents a bushel on "good quality and properly stored cribbed corn which can be sorted for seed at a later date." On the latter type of loan the government retains the right to purchase the collateral at $1.50 a bushel until April 1 next.

It is understood the Reconstruction Finance corporation has agreed to advance up to $10,000,000 under the loan program. The loans will be made to farmers through the Commodity Credit corporation.

The interest rate on the new loans will be 4 per cent, the same as was in effect under the old corn loan program.

FEDERAL government help in controlling their business has been asked by two large sections of the tobacco industry.

The Retail Tobacco Dealers of America, Inc., representing about 300,000 retailers of tobacco products, requested the federal trade commission to authorize a trade practice conference with a view for formulating rules for the elimination of unfair methods of competition and trade abuses.

Representatives from nine tobacco producing states wound up a two-day conference in Washington with a request addressed to the agricultural adjustment administration to draft a model production control bill.

TO THE sixty-sixth annual congress of the American Prison association, held in Chicago, was presented a report from the committee on crime prevention in which it was stated that the tactics of a certain class of lawyers in defending persons charged with crime have the effect of encouraging criminals to repeat their offenses. The committee declared that 75 per cent of the prisoners now in penal institutions in this country had been "literally faced about into a career of crime" by their experiences with defense attorneys.

The coaching of the attorney tended to help the defendant find an alibi for his misdeeds and a sedative for his conscience, according to the report, when public welfare should have guided the lawyer to conduct "which would quicken the sensibilities of the prisoner and awaken him to his own misdeeds."

The committee recommended more scientific methods in preventing and combating crime and it estimated that the country's annual crime cost is $15,000,000,000—"one-fourth of the national income; half of the war debt."

FOR the first time in seven years the United States is to have a squadron in European Atlantic waters. It is known as "Squadron 40-temporary" and Rear Admiral Arthur P. Fairfield was named as its commander. Admiral Fairfield hoisted his flag aboard the light cruiser Raleigh at the Norfolk navy yard and sailed for Gibraltar. At first the squadron will consist of the flagship Raleigh, the destroyers Kane and Hatfield and the coast guard cutter Cayuga, but navy officials expected its strength would be increased soon.

The Hatfield, Kane and Cayuga had been on emergency duty in Spanish waters since the outbreak of the Spanish revolt until they were withdrawn to nearby neutral ports following the attempted bombing of the Kane by an unknown plane off Cadiz last August 30.

IT IS pleasant to turn from war and politics and read of the doings at Cambridge, Mass., where Harvard university is celebrating the tercentenary of its founding. In Sanders theater was held the academic reception for 554 scholars representing 502 universities, colleges and learned societies in every state of the Union and in forty foreign countries, and all of them wearing the caps, gowns and hoods signifying various degrees of scholarship.

President James B. Conant greeted the guests, accepted their credentials and delivered a simple address of welcome. He noted that the assembly was an impressive demonstration of the solidarity of the academic world, and saw in the greetings of the delegates "the continued aspiration of mankind toward a universal fellowship based on human reason."

Responding on behalf of the delegates, Prof. Elie Cartan of the University of Paris paid tribute to Harvard's contributions to education and declared that "no barrier, political, religious or social, should be erected to stop the search for truth."

When the delegates were called up in the order of the age of the institutions they represented, first to respond was Prof. Saleh Hashem Attia of Al-Azhar university of Cairo, founded in 970. Then came the next oldest, the Regia university, Neglie Stuni Bologna, founded in the Tenth century, and represented by Prof. Carrado Gini. Third was the University of Paris, founded in the Eleventh century, whose representative was Dr. Cartan. Oxford, Cambridge and all the others followed, down to the youngest represented, the Academia Sinica of Nanking, China.

World famous educators, scientists and men of letters including ten Nobel prize winners, were among those who attended the reception.

OUR navy's intelligence department has discovered that a recent small fire on the cruiser Indianapolis while she was being overhauled in the New York navy yard was caused by the driving of phonograph needles and nails into an electric cable; and other suspected sabotage on war vessels is being investigated. The work on the cruiser was being done by civilian employees and Capt. Charles A. Dunn, industrial manager of the yard, said the placing of the nails in the cables was "undoubtedly" a deliberate attempt to damage the cruiser.

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE WALLACE is arranging a series of community meetings of farmers for the purpose of laying out the "agricultural conservation program" for next year. He said the AAA planned the meetings in the farm areas in order to discuss crop insurance and possible maximum limits of benefit payments to each farm. He explained the program aimed at providing "greater abundance for the average American home," and should "help to check soil erosion, improve fertility, encourage better land use and maintain farm income."

POPE PIUS XI may be physically weak, as recent reports say, but age and illness have not lessened the vigor of his opinions and his way of expressing them. In greeting and blessing some five hundred Spanish refugees who were received at Castel Gandolfo, the holy father took occasion to denounce strongly the "mad" forces of Communism which, he declared, menaced, in Spain and elsewhere, "the very foundations of all order, all culture and all civilization." He urged the constituted authorities of all nations to oppose "these great evils with every remedy and barrier that is possible" and prophesied that there will be utter chaos if "those who have a duty in the matter do not hasten to repair the breach—if, indeed, it is not already too late."

Pope Pius XI

The pope spoke especially of the situation in Spain, but said the crisis there is "a school in which the most serious lesson is being taught to Europe and to the whole world—to a world now at last wholly steeped, ensnared and threatened by subversive propaganda, and more especially to a Europe battered and shaken to its very foundation."

For forty minutes the pontiff spoke passionately, his voice at times broken with emotion, and his address was transmitted by radio to all the civilized world. Reichsfuehrer Hitler, too, took another hard whack at the Communists at a ceremonial tribute to the World War dead in Nuremberg. Before 120,000 uniformed Nazis and 50,000 others he boasted of Germany's armed strength and shouted: "Our old enemy, bolshevism, is vanquished within Germany, but still active around her borders. But let no one be deceived. We are ready at any hour. We all have one wish—to maintain peace—but with it goes one firm decision: Never to surrender Germany to that enemy we have come to know so well."

If Hitler, as some think, tries to lead the coming five-power Locarno conference into forming an anti-Soviet alliance, he will be firmly opposed by France. Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos says so, and declares France will under no circumstances abandon her military pact with Soviet Russia.

According to Pravda, authoritative newspaper of Moscow, Hitler plans to attack and partition Czechoslovakia before he embarks on a war against the Soviet Union. Benito Mussolini and his cabinet appropriated large sums to build up Italy's army, navy and air forces to greater strength and planned to carry on vigorously the campaign for self-sufficiency in raw materials.

It looked as if the dove of peace was preparing to leave Europe, and as relations between Japan and China grew more strained every day, she probably will have to take refuge on the western continent.

THE Spanish rebels scored their greatest victory to date when they captured San Sebastian, capital of Guipuzcoa province and famous Bay of Biscay resort. Santa Barbara fort, dominating the city, was first taken and the city's war council then decided to abandon the place, despite the opposition of the anarchists. The more conservative Basque nationals prevented the reeds from burning the city, only a paper factory and two residences being destroyed, and the defending forces retreated toward Bilbao, accompanied by thousands of civilians and foreigners. Insurgent troops, commanded by Col. Jose Beorlegui, marched in and were ceremoniously reviewed, and the bishop of Pamplona officiated at a thanksgiving service.

The municipal governor, Antonio Ortega, and his staff boarded a yacht to go to new headquarters at Zumaya, about 15 miles west of San Sebastian. The new line of defense was established at Orrio. Government spokesmen claimed considerable victories in the Talavera sector southwest of Madrid and not far from the Portuguese border.

St. Ignace—The Commerce Department of the Federal bureau indicates that tourist expenditures in the resort sections of the state during the summer amounted to $270,000,000. State reports indicate that 10,000,000 persons visited the resort sections, which furnished employment to 25,000 persons. Labor Day week-end motor traffic across the Straits of Mackinac amounted to 7,900 vehicles, almost 1,000 more than all previous traffic records there.

Clare—The mystery of the county's sea monster has been solved. Fishermen had everyone agog with stories of a monster in Snott lake, reporting it "at least 22 feet in length." The sportsmen were plainly afraid to go fishing. Conservation officer Gilson of Harrison volunteered to investigate and after patiently waiting at the lake, saw a large otter coming toward him. In playful mood, it develops that an otter swims at lightning speed and jumps almost out of the water, somewhat like large fish.

Ann Arbor—Plans still in the dream stage for the development of the Huron River valley into an extensive and intensive recreational area, are gaining momentum. It is thought that a pleasure drive along the stream from the Oakland lakes to Lake Erie is possible. Establishment of public parks and camping grounds, hiking trails, swimming pools, the propagation of fish, reforestation projects, protection of wilderness areas, and cleansing the waters of pollution are a few of the things under consideration.

FROM AROUND MICHIGAN

Grand Rapids—While digging a well near here, Chester Sprague fell and broke his arm in seven places between the elbow and wrist.

Monroe—The Highway Department will undertake the construction of a tourists' lodge at the intersection of US-24 and US-25, near here. The building is to cost $40,000 and will be surrounded by picnic and recreational grounds.

Detroit—The official list of livestock prize winners at the State Fair, showed that Michigan entries took the lion's share of the $58,260 paid in premiums. The competition was open to other states this year, the first time in four years.

Saginaw—Timely rains brought Saginaw County its best crop of cucumbers in five years. Growers reported they grossed from $150 to $400 an acre for their crops and some of the produce has been shipped as far west as Iowa, where the crop was a failure.

Ypsilanti—Prospects for an addition to the state hospital here are brighter and present plans are to award contracts for the work sometime in October if $500,000 in Federal funds are made available by that time. The proposed changes provide for about 1,250 beds and an occupational therapy building.

Kalamazoo—Paul Davidson, a local resident, is a martyr and an unsung hero. Seeing a driverless truck rolling backward downhill one day, he parked his car in a hurry, hopped into the truck and applied the brakes. The truck stopped after crashing into only one car. The car that got bumped was—Davidson's.

Lansing—Allotment of federal funds totaling $330,000 will be made by the social security board to aid the state in caring for its needy blind and dependent children. It was estimated that the allocation would make it possible to pay about $12.50 per month for the care of needy children and $25 per month for the blind.

Bad Axe—Billy goats with the most capable stomachs must look with respect upon 5-year-old Lee Truax of this village. Lee swallowed a finishing nail more than an inch long sometime last May. Frequent X-ray photos revealed that it was gradually being digested and recently it was found that the nail had been completely assimilated.

Zeeland—Parties on more than 15 telephone lines on the west side of the city were without service recently until a line inspector found that rats or rodents of some sort had eaten through a lead cable guard on a telephone pole. In making the hole through the metal, the rodents struck the wires causing a short circuit and disrupting service.

Marion—Improvement in pasture lands during September has increased milk production in this dairy farming area, to a point where thin cows have begun to fatten and farmers report that their herds will go into the winter in good condition. The rains greened up alfalfa fields to an extent where they afford fine pasture for the fall months.

Kalamazoo—When Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Panse of this city found their silver wedding anniversary drawing near, they decided a celebration was in order. Half in jest, they sent invitations to widely scattered members of their families and the result was a gathering of 30 persons who, it was estimated, traveled an aggregate of 50,000 miles to be present. The longest trip was made by a sister who lives in Amsterdam, Holland.

St. Ignace—The Commerce Department of the Federal bureau indicates that tourist expenditures in the resort sections of the state during the summer amounted to $270,000,000. State reports indicate that 10,000,000 persons visited the resort sections, which furnished employment to 25,000 persons. Labor Day week-end motor traffic across the Straits of Mackinac amounted to 7,900 vehicles, almost 1,000 more than all previous traffic records there.

Ann Arbor—Plans still in the dream stage for the development of the Huron River valley into an extensive and intensive recreational area, are gaining momentum. It is thought that a pleasure drive along the stream from the Oakland lakes to Lake Erie is possible. Establishment of public parks and camping grounds, hiking trails, swimming pools, the propagation of fish, reforestation projects, protection of wilderness areas, and cleansing the waters of pollution are a few of the things under consideration.

Manistee—A permanent Forest Festival museum is planned here, to be located near the new highway which will become US-31 when completed.

Muskegon—Dorothy Smith, 13 years old, received her thirteenth bone fracture when her right arm was broken recently. It was the only limb which had not been previously broken at least once.

West Branch—The population of this village has doubled in the last four years, due to an oil boom that has brought in 90 wells, all of which are now in operation. It has been stated that there are 1000 new residents in the village.

Big Rapids—The Paris fish hatchery has attained national and international recognition through a special fish diet developed here. Composed of meats and dog food, it affords a 50 per cent saving over the cost of liver, formerly used.

West Branch—A. J. Drake of Klacking Township began raising sheep a few years ago but the bears killed so many, he had to give it up. So he started raising crops and now the deer are eating his crops to the ground. He believes he is entitled to damages but doesn't know where to file a claim.

Ann Arbor—Work on the giant Baird carillon was recently reported only three days behind schedule. Pouring of concrete for the 196-foot shell for the carillon has been completed and work started on the covering with cut stone. The 53 bells, cast in England, have arrived and await their new home.

Lansing—The governor has indicated that his recommendation to the next legislature will be that delinquent taxes for 1933 and 1934 be included in the 10-year amortization plan. Also that the mortgage and land contract moratorium act be extended at least another two years, probably until 1939.

Lansing—Michigan industrial payrolls averaged 20.4 per cent higher in August of this year over 1935, according to the report by the Department of Labor and Industry. Payrolls and employment in the automobile industry fell off 15 per cent while the furniture industry showed an increase of 11 per cent over 1935.

Lansing—The State has displayed courteous concern for hay fever sufferers. With the official closing of the state parks scheduled for September 15th, the superintendent in charge indicated that a score or more of the parks in the northern part of the state would remain open for the afflicted ones, some of them as long as October 16.

Marshall—That this community is the center of a new and rapidly growing onion territory was revealed as the harvest progressed. Railroad officials expected the produce would total more than 1,200 carloads. Michigan's largest onion producing territory has been Gun Marsh, near Kalamazoo which averages 2,500 cars a season.

Lansing—The state administrative board has approved a new way of advertising Michigan. An appropriation was approved to send a file and drum corps to Denver to "advertise Michigan" at the national convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. It was expected that a similar plan would be followed for the American Legion convention in Cleveland.

Lansing—Teachers in the state have been supplied with copies of a booklet called "Education for Safety" which will be a guide in training children against accidents. The booklet was published jointly by the Safety Council and the Department of Public Instruction. As well as traffic accidents, mishaps in the home, shop and on the bathing beach are given careful attention.

Lansing—The state scored heavily against the "poaching" of sand and gravel from public-controlled waters, when an Ecorse dredging company was recently fined and compelled to pay the cost of court action because it had removed sand and gravel from the bottom of Lake Michigan near St. Joseph, without the required lease-rights from the conservation department. A legislative act of 1935 protects the lake-bottom resources of Michigan waters.

Lansing—Mr. and Mrs. John Citizen and their children over voting age went to the polls on September 15th in what promised to be the largest primary voting on record. Former Gov. Wilbur M. Brucker gained a victory over Senator James Couzens for United States Senator on the GOP ticket while Rep. Prentiss Brown outdistanced three opponents for the Democratic nomination. Frank Murphy won over George Welsh as Democratic governor candidate running against Gov. Frank D. Fitzgerald, Republican.

L'Anse—A model farm-industrial village will rise in a nearby forest as a part of Henry Ford's back-to-the-land movement, when relocation of highway US-41 is completed. Tentative plans call for the expenditure of $2,000,000 on a sawmill already in operation, homes and farms for 30 families and a lake to be fed by Plumbago Creek. Residents will be chosen from company employees in upper peninsula towns, each to be given an opportunity to purchase 350 partly cleared acres on a rental basis.

National Topics Interpreted by William Bruckart
National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington. — As the campaign gets more heated it becomes increasingly evident that the political battle this year will result more times in a spade being called a spade—men being named names—than has happened in a good many previous years. When this stage is reached it invariably means that party workers as well as party leaders are thoroughly imbued with the sense of battle and it means further that no phase of either party policy or personal affairs of the candidates themselves escapes the attention of the opposition.

That probably is the reason why Mr. Roosevelt lately has found himself being "kidded" to a greater extent than usually occurs about his "non-political" visits to various sections of the country. The opportunity has not yet come for Governor Landon, the Republican nominee, to be made the butt of such jokes or the subject of such personal attacks, but undoubtedly it will arrive long before November 3.

To refer again to the President's "non-political" trips, the correspondents here have been having a great deal of fun about the President's determination to learn firsthand about the flood areas of Pennsylvania and New England and the drought areas of the middle western plains. This is significant. It shows an important change of attitude on the part of the Washington observers who seldom find themselves in a position where they can tell everything they know. It is significant also from this standpoint that it shows Mr. Roosevelt to have lost the loyalty of a great number of those writers. Time was when 95 per cent of the Washington correspondents were with Mr. Roosevelt on everything he said or did and when they found vulnerable spots or weaknesses in his statements or actions they were inclined to overlook them. Such is not the case now, however, and I think it may be added with candor that the President's programs and policies, his speeches and statements in press conferences are examined with utmost scrutiny.

From the Democratic standpoint, this is distressing. From the Republican standpoint, it is a highly valuable change in circumstance. The reason is that as long as the President had a completely "friendly press" he did not need to be so careful nor did he ever need to fear that interpretations would be placed upon his statements or his actions, other than the interpretation which he desired. It takes no stretch of the imagination to realize forthwith that any time he says or does anything to which exception can be taken, some of those correspondents will point out the other possibilities.

I find generally speaking that the writing corps doubted that the President's Pennsylvania and New England visits were based solely on his desire to know what the federal government should do to prevent floods. One correspondent was so extremely frank as to write in his metropolitan newspaper that Mr. Roosevelt foresaw not a flood of water but a flood of Republican votes. Of course, this is an exaggerated position for any unbiased writer to take, but there were any number of those correspondents who laughingly inquired why it was so urgently necessary for the President to visit the flood areas at this time—considering that there was no Congress in session and no definite provision for the framing of flood relief plans.

Now as to the President's visit to the drouth stricken area: The drouth was present in the "dust bowl" as the brilliant young strategists of the New Deal organization have named the middle western plains. There can be no doubt likewise that relief was needed and that a thorough-going understanding of the situation by those responsible in Washington should be obtained. Yet, I believe it was the consensus of the writers accompanying the President on that whirlwind tour of the dust storms that Mr. Roosevelt personally gained no knowledge of conditions that was not already available to him in reports from his subordinates. Indeed, I am told on very good authority that relief representatives who had gone into the drouth area already had written their reports to the President and made their recommendations concerning policies to deal with that relief situation before he left Washington on that trip.

It must be quite obvious, however, that Mr. Roosevelt desired to see conditions about which so much was being written in the newspapers. I think he cannot be blamed for desiring the opportunity to witness things as they actually were before the rains came; but some of his special train evidenced something more than a hint that he desired to see not only the drouth stricken area but the voters who live there.

More recently the President has made a non-political trip into certain areas of the southland where it is suspected by Chairman Farley's representatives that a goodly number of Republican votes exist. In fairness to the President it must be said with respect to his southern trip, however, that he did little actual speech-making. It is true that he gave the pump-handle handshake wherever people desired to greet him but his campaigning was much less evident in the minds of the reporters than obtained in his visit to the north and to the central west.

And referring to his trip to the central west, I am reminded of the hysteria that has arisen over soil erosion. Undoubtedly, soil erosion is a problem worthy of general attention but the thing that disturbs me as a Washington observer is that soil erosion, like a lot of other problems, suddenly has become mixed up in politics when it is not a political question.

The conservation of soil, of natural resources, has been a matter to which farmers of the nation have addressed themselves for more than a hundred years. Who is it among the farming community that has not attempted at one time or another to stop "washes" or who has not planted some willow trees or some kinds of bush to prevent ditches being cut through the middle of fertile and arable land? And may I ask further, what farmer is there who has not given consideration to crop rotation, to the planting of types of clover or hay or grasses that would of themselves enrich the soil?

All of these things are commonplace. All of them have been done from the time to which the memory runneth not to the contrary. But now we find a perfect hullabaloo—a hysteria—as I said at the beginning about a thing with which farmers long have been familiar.

It comes almost into the category of nonsense. One needs only to visit the oldest communities in the nation to find soils that have been producing for two centuries and that have continued to show increased production through all of that time. The reason is that those farmers knew about soil erosion and they sought to prevent it. Those farmers and nearly all farmers recognize that soil must be fertilized; that it cannot be planted to the same crop eternally without destroying its fertility and they know the necessity and the method for solving the problem. They have acted on that necessity.

Notwithstanding all of these facts we are due to see in the next session of congress and probably for a considerable number of sessions thereafter a bunch of politicians who will be prating about soil conservation long after the farmers have become thoroughly sick at the stomach about the idea. It is just another one of those things upon which hungry political demagogues will leap and continue to use as a vehicle on which to ride into office.

I was born on a farm and grew up there. I know the problem inside out because the farm upon which I was born was susceptible to erosion—"washing" as my father called it—to a greater extent than is usual in farm lands. It is no particular credit to any one to boast about preventing soil erosion because it is a thing that any farmer will want to do if he wants to continue to make his farm pay him a return. It is just as much a part of farm management as it is to see that the work stock does not develop sore shoulders.

But the point of all of this as far as I am concerned is that political capital is being made out of a condition with which politicians ought not to be concerned at all. Some may accuse me of ignoring the drouth condition. I do not do so. We have had several years of bad drouth conditions. I find it difficult to associate political control over the weather, however, because the claims of politicians have yet to reach very far above their heads.

Announcement is made at last that former President Herbert Hoover is going to take the stump in behalf of Governor Landon and the Republican ticket. Though it was long delayed, it probably has come before the country became convinced that an irreparable breach existed between Governor Landon and Mr. Hoover. Rumors were just beginning to fly and gossip tongues were just beginning to wag that Mr. Hoover would remain out of the Republican picture this year so it is extremely fortunate that he and Governor Landon at last have been brought together, as far as Republicans are concerned.

I am not informed as to the reasons for this delay. It is evident that somebody slipped because it is unnatural for politicians to deliberately decline to take advantage of strength when it is proffered them.

NOT IN THE BOX SCORE:

It is just as well that Bill Terry is a very sane gent as well as the most talked about manager of the year. Being that way he'll probably pay just a little attention to the newspaper gush being heaped upon him recently as he did when new-found admirers were leveling on him with brass knuckles . . . Umpire Bill McGowan hasn't missed a day's work during his twelve years in the American League and his averages on strikes is almost as high . . . Manager Hymie Caplin now has fourteen fighters in training . . . Colonel E. R. Bradley, the celebrated Derby winner, is a south-paw.

Yale's long-memorial athletic alumni still are feverish about what happened to Albie Booth in 1930. So one New Haven faction is determined that Army, off the Yale schedule this fall for the first time in years, will never get back. Another set keeps pointing out that the contest always has been one of the big money affairs of the season and even the Elms can use such handsome coconuts . . . Is it true that the Hearst A. C. now is to do the main promoting for a former Hearst publisher's October auto races and for the new pro football loop?

Rival managers are putting the zing on Charley Dresen because they say Reds pitchers spend entirely too much time throwing at opposing batters . . . The Cubs proudly announce that if the pop bottles sold at Wrigley Field this season were stacked end to end in a one-foot square, they would form a tower more than twice as high as the Empire State building . . . Leslie Aaron, who caddied for Vardon and Ray when they came to this country in 1910 and who has been teaching the game ever since, gets properly peeved when his name is not placed high up in the very small list of Jewish golf pros.

Young Hackenschmidt, once middleweight wrestling champion, now is assistant brewmaster for a thriving brewery . . . Forty-nine of the sixty-nine victories scored by Temple during its 11 football years were shutouts. The Owls have been blanked in 12 contests, Villanova doing it three times.

Ambers Rates Title Won From Canzoneri

A chubby boy—who became a professional prize fighter because he reeded the dough after being fired for licking all the other kids in the home town furniture factory—now is lightweight champion of the world. He deserves the honor. Even a scorer, who was sitting there rooting for another great little guy, had to give him nine of the fifteen rounds while the title was slipping from Tony Canzoneri's wild fists at the Garden.

Lou Ambers—who hopes some day to be a band leader and whose only objection to his manager is that Al Weill can never be depended on for a proper tenor when a bit of harmonizing would break the monotony of the long automobile ride down from Herkimer—did not fight a great fight. He fought a sound, strong one.

Well beaten and baffled by Tony a year ago he seemed to have little recollection of that disaster. When necessary, he waded in and mixed with the hairy-chested man, who still can punch with the best of lightweights. But most of the time he was sliding along with Canzoneri's right, keeping Tony from getting a clear opening for it, moving the veteran off balance. Then when he would jab with left, hook with right, lead or counter he would be piling up the points.

Canzoneri also was far from being the man who won the crown a year ago. What happened to this great little guy, who in the short space of four months whipped Jimmy McLarnin, became a bridegroom and was beautifully tossed around by the state athletic commission and the Hearst A. C., probably will be a matter of discussion for some days to come.

One of the more interesting features of the coming football season will be the new brother act at Princeton. Young Dick White, lighter but faster edition of his more famous frere Jack, is being touted as a sure Tiger backfield star even though a mere Soph . . . Irresponsible parties who keep shouting about the quick and easy profits to be made from night baseball should take to heart Horace Stoneham's reply. The young Giants' president says, "You are trying to substitute night baseball for winning baseball in the minds of the fans. That can't be done. Or, at least, we're not going to fall for it here at the Polo Grounds. We've never palmed off any phonies on the baseball public and we're not going to start doing it now. We like to win." Which attitude is hereby indorsed as a very good reason why the Giants are winning and obtaining nationwide support. The far richer owner of the faltering, second-division Reds might give it a thought . . .

If the Cards are willing to gamble for a much-needed pitcher, they can have Van Mungo for Joe Medwick this winter . . . Unless the owners are all wrong Willie Manley, for years the very efficient secretary of the loop, will be elected president of the International League.

Probably the old guess has got to be laid on the line eventually, but, until the proper moment arrives, I'll be darned if I'm going to give those Giants a chance to treat me like they have been treating the National league recently. Maybe both me and the Yankees know something.

How ARE YOU TODAY

Dr. James W. Barton TALKS ABOUT

Three Stages of Obesity.

THERE are many of us who can remember when a little "plumpness" in girls or women was considered attractive; anyone who was thin or "skinny" was considered less attractive than one of normal weight.

We have been passing through an era when the reverse has been the case, and when girls and women have been trying to attain a slim, slender or boyish figure. It is gratifying to know that this desire for extreme thinness is passing away and that our overweight, while properly anxious to get rid of their excess weight, are now satisfied to be of "average" weight.

It was Dr. L. F. Barker, Johns Hopkins university, who spoke some years ago about the three stages of obesity or overweight, that is: (1) the enviable, (2) the comical, and (3) the pitiable stage. We have all seen these three stages and as mentioned above the first or enviable stage—the one that formerly aroused envy in others—is now coming back into fashion as it "rounds out" the female figure by filling in hollows.

Physicians, as a rule, have not much faith in exercise in reducing weight. In most cases this is because, knowing their patients, they know that they will not take the exercise anyway. In other cases the physicians have not studied the effects of exercise in reducing weight and when asked what special exercise or what game should be played, cannot give the necessary advice. Further there are so many cases of overweight in which exercise would be dangerous that it is safer not to recommend any.

Take Doctor's Advice

Generally speaking, physicians are very wise in advising that the first and foremost step in reducing weight is to cut down on the amount of food eaten.

The first thought with most physicians is to advise cutting down on the starch foods—bread, potatoes, sugar and pastry—because starch foods are stored away as fat in the body. If less of the starch foods are eaten there will thus be a stop in the formation of fat in and on the body.

Other physicians advise cutting down on the fat foods—cream, butter, fat meats—first because they feel that as the body has a lot of fat in it and on it, this fat can be used for the needs of the body thus reducing the fat and therefore the weight.

The ideal way to get rid of the weight would appear to be cutting down equally on fats and starches. However as the starch foods are the ones that give energy, or "pep" as it is so often called, and fat foods are more useful as "protection" to the body and to ward off illnesses, cutting down more on fats than on starches would perhaps be better.

Another point about fats is that proteid foods—meats, eggs, fish—all contain considerable fat anyway, and it is the proteid foods that are never cut down in a weight reducing diet. The proteid foods are the body builders, building up worn out tissues and creating so much heat or "dynamic" action that all foods are more completely burned in a short time.

Ideal Reducing Diet.

The ordinary or regular diet for one of average weight is one part proteid—meat, eggs, fish—to two parts fats—butter, cream, fat meats, egg yolks—to four parts starch foods and vegetables. In a reducing diet however the proportion is much different, the proteid foods are so necessary that they are not reduced; in fact proteid foods are actually increased.

The ideal reducing diet then takes into consideration the number of calories—heat units—necessary to sustain the "ideal" weight of the individual. This means that food is not eaten to sustain or keep going the excess weight of 20, 50, or 100 pounds.

Thus if the individual is eating 3,000 calories a day and it is decided that 2,000 calories is all that should be eaten these 2,000 calories will be divided about as follows: 600 calories of proteid foods, 1,000 calories of starch and vegetable foods and 400 calories of fat foods. The result of a weight reducing diet shows three steps: (1) considerable loss of weight for a few days owing to great loss of water from the tissues before the water balance is reached; (2) a steady loss of weight but the rate of loss is much slower, and (3) when no further loss is being made, the weight remaining at the same level.

Carp Numerous

Carp in the United States has multiplied enormously, particularly in some of the lakes and rivers of the central states, where it frequently attains a weight of 15 to 30 pounds. It is so abundant in many places as to be regarded a nuisance, but it furnishes a supply of cheap food. Its yearly consumption is more than 20,000,000 pounds.

Ripples From Guiley Creek

By the Trout Specialist

Years ago, when I first saw the sportsmen from the city using flies instead of good, old-fashioned angleworms or grasshoppers, I thought they were wasting their time on the stream. It gave me quite a surprise to see C. C. McDonald, of Detroit, get 15 nice trout in a stretch of water that rarely yielded over two or three to bait fishermen. Mr. McDonald started just below the forks of the Guiley and AuGres about 2 p. m. of a hot, bright day. It was mid-summer, and conditions were anything but good for bait fishing, with the water very low. In my own mind I labeled C. C. for not more than one or two trout on his "new-fangled" flies. He took over two hours to fish that stretch of only a little over a quarter mile and when he came in sight I waited on the bridge to greet him. While watching him I was surprised to see him land an eleven inch rainbow, but was more than surprised to find that he had 13 more nice trout.

I had not learned that dry flies have been used for a few hundred years, and, if used properly, will catch more fish, with ten times the sport, than is possible with bait. Even then I couldn't believe that I could learn to use flies, as I didn't know how to make them and had no money to buy a rod, line, and equipment necessary to manipulate them. Even after I had the tackle it was two years before I could use flies with consistent results.

Few purists would go near the Guiley, above our place, because of the brush, but one man would. He was Guy Garber, one of the best fly fishermen I ever saw. I walked behind him three times, on the upper Guiley and Vaughn, and saw him snake out that line, under brush and snags, hauling out 15 speckled beauties on each occasion. Right then I determined to master the art, and now, after seven years of practice, other would-be fly fishermen walk behind me, on the stream.

Use for Earth's Hot Water

The earth's hot water has its uses. In New Zealand housewives utilize hot springs for cooking. And in Japan, near the summit of a snow-crowned peak, rises a hot spring in which Japanese bathers are to be found all seasons of the year.

Man-Eaters

The leopard, like the lion and tiger, sometimes turns man-eater. It is thought that much of the killing of human beings, charged to the lion in Africa and the tiger in India, is really the work of sly leopards which seize and carry off their victims with astonishing boldness, strength and skill.

Sun Hatches Snake Eggs

Not all snakes lay eggs. A large number of species bring forth their young alive. Some snakes, such as rock pythons, hatch their eggs with the heat of their own bodies, but the majority of reptiles leave that tedious task to the sun. Others bury their eggs in rotting vegetation where the heat produced by decomposition does the trick.

Embalming

One couldn't be buried alive today. In life the arteries are full, while after death they are empty. When embalming a body it is necessary to open an artery to inject the embalming fluid, and if death had not occurred, blood circulation would start on the opening of the artery and life would be restored.

Terminal of Gota Canal
Gothenburg is one of the terminals of the Gota canal, which winds over 240 miles through the heart of Sweden, sometimes following lakes, sometimes rivers, sometimes a canal so narrow that trees at the sides of the banks brush the small steamers on the water. All in all 56 miles of canal supplement the natural waterway. These various links were completed more than 300 years after the project was first conceived and undertaken.

The peace and quiet of an afternoon was broken last Sunday when one of our prominent citizens, Octave St. James, discovered one of his prize heifers being led away from his farm. After much fist throwing and tongue lashing Octave found the thieves to be only Archie, Tom and Pete playing their usual pranks. The last we heard was that they had sold the cow to Russell Williams and received top market price.

Indians Point to Ark Site
Noah was the discoverer of North America, if the legends of Quebec's Indians are to be believed. Tribes in the country surrounding the Saguenay river believed the remains of the Ark, or "big canoe", rest on the top of Cape Trinity, 2,000 feet above the level of the river, and, to them, the last bit of land left dry during the big flood. Capes Trinity and Eternity are the high points along the Saguenay river. The largest Madonna in the world graces the side of Cape Trinity. Generally called "Our Lady of the Saguenay," it stands out majestically among the fir trees. It is carved of wood and covered with lead, and is illuminated at night.

Mullens took the corn knife and Shellenberger followed him, climbing around the cliff to the back of the ridge and then plunging again into the woods. Mullens was a different man among the trees. He picked the way through the giant poplars, pine, white oak, chestnut, ash, hickory, easily with the complete surety of long experience. Shellenberger followed. Wild game started up from their approach and slipped deeper into the timber.

Slowly they went on through the forest, examining the stand of the timber, the distribution of the species, the adaptability of the hollows for skidding or driving the logs into Gannon creek, and noting the best method of attack. When, toward late afternoon, they finally came out on the ridge in sight of the Pinnacle, Mullens said to Shellenberger:

"About ten thousand feet of long-leaf pine to the acre, and maybe two thousand to three thousand short-leaf in that second hollow."

"How much poplar?"

"Maybe average two thousand feet."

"And the other stuff?"

"About the same for white oak, chestnut and ash. Maybe five hundred feet of pignut and shellbark hickory."

"What do you think of it?" Shellenberger asked.

"Never saw a finer lot of stumpage for a loggin' gang in my life. Just made right for cuttin'."

Shellenberger sat down and began to sketch in a drawing on the back of an envelope.

"You'll have to build a camp in the hollow down there below that rock. They call it Dry creek. This man has a steam-mill and he is getting a circular saw, so that will be easy. You can clear out that flat there at the mouth of the creek for a collecting point. You can look at it again tomorrow. I don't think we'll need a dam in Gannon. Maybe one in the smaller creek."

"Have you been all along Gannon creek?"

"Yes. Clear down to the Big Sandy. It's just about right. You can take forty-foot logs down it in the spring."

"What about men?"

"We'll try the natives. They'll be cheap, and a lot of them can board at home. We'll get Pattern to draw up a list of good men, and I've ordered in tools. We just as well get to work. He says go right ahead, and I'll fix up money matters later on."

They took the path that led down the hill from the Pinnacle to the house as they day began to withdraw from the western slopes.

CHAPTER X

The days were easier at the house when the men carried their lunch with them to the hills. The rush of the breakfast hour passed, and the middle of the day was left in some peace and without hurry to Julia and Cynthia. They could have a simple dinner alone with Jesse. Cynthia brought in the milk cold from the spring-house. Julia made the corn bread and gathered a dishpan of lettuce from her garden to wilt in hot bacon grease and flavor with new onions because Jesse liked it that way.

"How is the corn up in Barn Branch?" Julia asked.

"I believe it's about the best on the place this year."

"Will you get it finished up today?"

"I'll be done with it about three o'clock."

"The sweet-potato patch is ruining for the plow," Julia said.

"I plan on getting to them yet today."

Cynthia saw him slip the Cooley's Blackstone into his shirt as he went out. "I guess Jesse likes to be by himself to think about the law that he's so wrapped up in. It seems such a long time ago that we set out the sweet-potato plants and he spoke about it. Maybe I can get time to go up to the patch and lay some of the vines up on the ridges for him."

She took time and in the mid-afternoon, when the work that was never done was almost done, she started up to the House Field. Jesse had not come. She waited, looking down upon the matted vines. When he did not come, she went on up to Barn Hollow by the cowpath over the ridge against the line of trees. The corn was plowed, but Jesse was not in sight. She wondered where he could be, thinking she had missed him by going up over the ridge.

Then she heard his voice pitched to the oratorical tones of the Pikeville lawyers and reciting:

"All children born before matrimony are bastards by our law; and so it is of all children born so long after the death of the husband, that, by the usual course of gestation, they could not be begotten by him. But this being a matter of some uncertainty, the law is not exact as to a few days, forty weeks begin the time allowed. . . ."

"Now why in the world is Jesse saying all that for up here in the hollow with nobody around to hear him but the mule and it drowsing like a sleepy old judge on a bench. It must be Jesse's law book."

Jesse went on, stumbling over the unusual words:

"But, if a man dies, and his widow soon after marries again, and a child is born within such a time, as that by the course of nature it might have been the child of either husband; in this case he is said to be more than ordinarily legitimate; for he may, when he arrives to years of discretion, choose which of the fathers he pleases."

She could not see Jesse from where she sat. What would he look like in the role of orator? The impulse to lay eyes upon him overcame her. She went a little farther up the ridge overlooking the hollow and climbed down the rock behind a clump of redbud.

Jesse was standing under a pine tree before a moss-covered rock which had broken away from the cliff. He held the yellow bound Blackstone in his left hand, pointing with his right forefinger at the page, tapping it for emphasis, and making his voice vibrate with his imitation of a mountain lawyer citing a point of law:

"... restraints upon marriage, especially among the lower classes, are evidently detrimental to the public by hindering the increase of the people; and to religion and morality, by encouraging licentiousness and debauchery among the single of both sexes; and thereby destroying one end of society and government, which is concubitus prohibere vago."

She was fascinated by his zeal and the reality of the performance, but after he had halted in the passage, stumbling seriously over the Latin words, the illusion was broken and she felt ashamed at the thought of spying on Jesse from behind a bush and listening to something not meant for her ears. She would go down to him at once.

"But then he will see by my face and the direction I come from that I have been listening. I will go back and come across the field."

She climbed back up the rock, and went down the gully through the cleared space to the plowed field, and came down the young corn rows approaching Jesse directly face to face. He saw her coming, not displeased, and he sat on the rock with the book open face down over his knee. When she came up, he was composed.

"I looked for you at the sweet-potato patch," she said as a greeting.

"I was just giving the mule a rest and I got to looking at the picture of Blackstone here. . . ."

He showed her the yellow-tinted engraving of the enormous-appearing man, solid and legal behind the ample contours of his ermine robe; under the careful twistings of the curled fleece wig stood out the bushy black eyebrows, the big eyes that had faced with the confidence of knowledge and experience, judges and juries.

"They wear funny clothes in England," Cynthia said.

He still kept his finger in the page where he was reading.

"Have you read clear over there?"

"Well, not exactly. Only I got tired of the chapters on the King's Titles, and the King's Prerogative, and his Revenue, and of the Clergy. It didn't seem like it meant anything in this country. So I kind of skipped to this part, 'Of Husband and Wife' and it's right interesting. It says a man has to stand good for his wife's debts as long as she buys necessary common supplies, but not for anything besides necessities."

"Is that what law is?" Cynthia asked.

"Well, that's just one little part. There are so many things here. It makes a body wonder if people really do all the things this book says they mustn't do, and how many people had to do an evil before a law was made about it. It takes a lot of study, and a man needs help on some of it."

"You're going to read with Tandy Morgan, Jesse?"

"That's what I aim to do this fall."

"We'll have ready money, too, and I can go to Pikeville, Mother says."

"The book lays down law on that. It says here, 'The last duty of parents to their children is that of giving them an education suitable to their station in life; a duty pointed out by reason, and of far the greatest importance of any. For . . . it is not easy to imagine or allow that a parent has conferred any considerable benefit upon his child by bringing him into the world; if he afterwards entirely neglects his culture and education, and suffers him to grow up like a mere beast, to lead a life useless to others and shameful to himself.' This fellow talks straight words like a lawyer ought."

"You'll be a great lawyer yourself some day" Cynthia said.

"I aim to if I can."

They sat, each with his own thoughts, for a minute in silence.

"Is Reuben a great surveyor?" she asked, interrupting the silence.

"Why, yes. He seems to know a right smart."

"Is he as nice out in the woods as he is about the house?"

"I don't see any change in him."

"I like his way of talking about the Ohio river and things," she said.

Then, rousing from the dream in which he was still partly submerged, he said, "I guess you like him a right smart, don't you?"

The directness of it made her self-conscious and she blushed. She re-

reated into herself a little way in defense, "I think he's right nice."

"You're in love with him. You've been different since that night he came and you put flowers and a white cloth on the table."

"Why, Jesse, I . . . Why do you say that?"

"Oh, Reuben is a nice fellow. I don't blame you any."

Cynthia had not meant to speak to Jesse about Reuben. She had merely sat there with her own thoughts but they had moved so quietly and rapidly that the pressure of the undersurge had suddenly escaped into words.

"What do you do or say about it to another person, anyway? Would even Jesse understand? A body doesn't do or say anything but lets it have its own way. It sparkles in your heart where no one sees, and it lights up the soul and changes the look of the whole world. You hold it there like it was star vapor from another world or the first green mist of leaves sifting between the willow limbs on Wolfpen and it trembles inside of you with wonder. Maybe if you let it alone and believe in it. . . ."

Cynthia changed the subject skillfully back to Jesse.

"You've sure read a right smart in such a hard book."

"I guess I've been getting along right well."

"I came out to lay some of the potato vines up on the ridges for you."

"You don't need to do that; you got plenty to do. It don't look like we'd have much time for House Field this evening, anyway."

"There's never enough time in the day any more. Can I carry your book back with me if you're not going to use it?"

She took the book, and Jesse roused the mule. It was too late for Cynthia to help in the sweet-potato vines. She went on to the house and got the water bucket and went to the well as the sun slipped off of Saul's headstone, drawing after it a veil of dark. She saw Shellenberger and Mullens coming down the path from the Pinnacle.

It was almost dark when the other men came in. Cynthia could see them from the kitchen, a bustle of men around the wash rock rolling up their sleeves, opening their shirts, soaping and splashing and spluttering; thinking how funny menfolk were when they washed. Reuben had come into the kitchen.

"I hope we haven't put you out, Cynthia, being so late. I had this instrument set up and I wanted to finish off a line before I pulled it up."

"It isn't any trouble at all," she said.

"It was slow going and made us late." The men were unusually talkative at the table and on the porch after supper. Cynthia sometimes listened.

"Yes, we got around all right," Shellenberger was saying. "We'll cut in through Dry creek and work back. We may have to put in a splash dam to give them a start down Gannon."

"Are you actually going to float logs down Gannon?" Abral asked.

"We certainly are."

"In rafts?"

"Yes. Small ones."

"Can I take one down?" Abral demanded.

"You certainly can," Shellenberger said. "But we have to cut the logs first. Do you think we can get good men along the creeks here?"

"There'll be plenty out of these hollows," Sparrel said. "The country is filling up fast and plenty of them have not land enough to keep them busy."

"We'll have to put up a camp there. If you'd rig up a saw on your mill we could rip out boards pretty quick."

"The saw ought to be in now any time," Sparrel said.

So the talk went on while Shellenberger explained about the superiority of oxen over mules in lumbering because they draw heavier loads, require no expensive harness, stand rougher treatment, eat less and cheaper foods and graze at night; and of the number of wedges and wooden mauls and cross-cut saws and axes and spike poles and adzes and peaveys required; and of blacksmithing and the hazards of logging and the carelessness of men even where their necks are in danger.

Cynthia had finished the dishes and was moving the lamp from the table. It flashed against the polished brass of Reuben's compass. "That was the first time he ever called me anything. Cynthia. He says it so nice. 'I hope we haven't put you out, Cynthia. . . . I don't reckon many a man would say it about keeping a supper waiting for them. 'It was slow going and made us late.' You're in love with him. You've been different since that night he came and you put on flowers and a white cloth. . . . I guess things just happen to a body. They happen deep in you when you don't know it, and then one day, like this, suddenly they come out and there they are."

The coming of Shellenberger had not yet destroyed the singular distinction of mood the Sabbath brought to Wolfpen. Since the days of Saul Pattern it had been set apart by the ceremonial of peace and rest from daily toil and elevated above the other days by a touch of solemnity. Church services were rare. Possibly for that reason the Patterns had been at pains to keep alive in their isolation the sense of its difference. This weekly pause between periods of labor, when the mill was silent and the churn and the loom were still, gave to their life some of the ancient dignity which the religions of quiet self-discipline have always conferred upon pastoral peoples.

Sparrel would read in his books and ponder a passage from the Bible. He would go to the barn to look over his stock, or walk into his fields and lean over the topmost bar looking off into the hills which seemed to be affected by the day. Sometimes he would ride in the afternoon to another bottom to see a neighbor or visit the sick. Or he would go to his mill and sit by the pond above the wheel.

But today the thought of his new saw, which he had just brought over from the river on a mule's back, filled the place of a more quiet contemplation. He took Reuben and the boys down to the mill to look over the plan for the circular saw.

"You have seen them work?" he asked Reuben.

"Yes. Many of them," Reuben said. Sparrel's pride in his improvement was stimulated by the days of absence from it in the woods. He told Reuben of the earlier Pattern mills and of their gradual transformation into this modern power unit. Reuben listened with the attention of one who found in the recreation of earlier modes of life an entrancing realization of the continuity of the generations and the growth of a culture.

The sight of the old water-wheel and of the two small rough stones which Saul had hewn affected him, for his own people had moved about too often to accumulate these intimate reminders of a family tradition.

"There is something about a mill wheel that I like," he said. "But steam is coming in fast."

"Steam is quicker and works in dry weather," Sparrel said.

They examined the new saw and the shaft which turned the millstones.

"Why don't you put in a separate one for the saw?" Reuben said. "It would be simpler. Then you could just shift the belt over to its wheel and be ready to saw. And it ought to be smaller than the one for the mill because the saw should turn faster." He sketched his idea for the mill, complete from the smaller pulley to the location of the saw and the shuttle for the logs.

"That's it," Sparrel said. "That's it to a T. And I've got just the block of wood in the shop here." Although it was the Sabbath, they went to the shop and Sparrel marked with his pencil the dimensions for the new pulley.

They talked it over and over for a long time, adding nothing to it, but savoring it to the full by making and exchanging words about it.

Then the boys proposed that they go on into Dry Creek Hollow where Shellenberger and Mullens had gone, and see where the lumbering operations were to begin. Reuben excused himself with the plea that he wanted to go over his notes on the last lines of the survey and check them against the deeds to see where he was going before the party proceeded on Monday. He went back toward the house, leisurely, thinking of this place into which he had come, of the native refinement of the people who lived here, and of the fair-skinned girl who had weeks ago made him welcome under conditions so embarrassing to herself. He had said little to her, and she had said perhaps even less to him. But her few words were adequate symbols for revealing to him a dream-touched soul who clothed the commonplace with the radiance of poetry. He had seen this in her face, in the bend of her arm, in the play of her eyes and mouth when she looked at him. He had sensed it in the natural ease of manner which she carried in the presence of these men, and in the slight deference with which she greeted him. He thought of Julia, with her grace and quiet competence, as the beautiful portent of the future years of Cynthia. And so thinking, he came through the barnyard gate. His eyes were on the house, trying to see through it the kind of men whose foresight and energy had built it in this removed place.

Julia had just come to the porch on her way to her flower-beds.

"You are back early, Reuben."

"Yes, I wanted to have a look at the last lines we ran yesterday. The others all went to Dry Creek."

He sat at the table plotting the lines and sketching in the creeks they had crossed and the trees at the corners. Then he journeyed in his mind over the course he had run, contracting it again to the scale of the map and thinking how oddly the mind can get turned around, and be unhappy until its map and the one on paper coincide. He examined the yellowing deeds and drew lightly the course for the next day.

It was part of the fun to try to determine the lines first from the old deeds, and then plot them in as they actually were on the ground. Sometimes they would coincide.

Cynthia came into the kitchen. She was surprised to find herself looking immediately into his eyes.

"Oh! Excuse me," she said.

"Not at all."

"Surveying? And on Sunday?"

"There are so many things to be surveyed here, you have to use every day and Sunday too."

"It's a good day for surveying."

"It's too good to be long indoors. I have finished, anyway. I was trying to get yesterday straight in my mind, and projecting tomorrow."

Cynthia stood by the table looking at him and at his map, with an artless and unconfused silence, more becoming than speech. She had a way of lifting her head and offering a simple smile that flashed delicately over her face and into her eyes, and became radiant under the coil of rich dark hair.

In this isolated privacy he felt that he was seeing her for the first time. He thought quickly over the weeks he had been here. Always there had been other people, putting strains on relationships simply because they were physically present. When he had seen her and been affected by her, the consciousness of Sparrel, or Julia, or the brothers, or the other men, had been there, too, and there was no telling what part of the completed effect was provoked by the graceful and sensitive young girl. Now, Julia was in the garden, beyond this new aura, and all the men were far away on Dry Creek, leaving this moment to Cynthia.

"Do you like it up here?" she asked. But even before she spoke, she felt how irrelevant to the rich and powerful underflow of feeling between them was the convention that nothing really exists until it has been dragged forth from its privacy and trimmed, distorted and then sewn up into words.

And there began two movements through time: the significant but unvoiced understandings and the commonplace of talk.

"I never liked a place better," he said. "Do you like it?"

"It's my home. A body just naturally likes home."

"Well, not always. People do a lot of moving about. Do you ever wish to go out in the world?"

"I've been to Pikeville. And I'm going over there this fall to the Institute for the winter. Some day I'm to go down the river to the Ohio."

"My people live right on the Ohio river. You can see the mouth of Sandy and the big bend in the Ohio from our porch. And see the big steamboats come around it. In the night-time, when there is a moon, they look like a great swan with a black neck and a string of red and green beads around it. I guess that sounds kind of funny."

"Oh, no. I like to think that way about things."

Counterfeiting General Among the Old Colonies

Hepburn's "History of Currency in the United States" says that counterfeiting was very general among the colonies; the currency was counterfeited by the British and sent here as one means of destroying the American credit; a shipload of counterfeit Continental money coming from Britain was captured by an American privateer, and persons accompanying flags of truce made use of the occasion to disseminate counterfeit money.

Dewey's "Financial History of the United States" also refers to the fact that notes were counterfeited both by the English and Americans. We find no record as to which mills supplied this paper, states the Detroit News.

Long before the Revolution, some of the colonies, such as Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, had issued paper money which depreciated. The Continental currency began to depreciate during 1777, owing largely to lack of confidence in the government and to early American reverses in the war. The congress had no power of taxation, but could only ask the states to contribute fixed sums, "asking them to raise the amount by taxation, which the states neglected to do."

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Lesson for September 27

REVIEW: THE SPREAD OF CHRISTIANITY IN WESTERN ASIA

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 13:24-33. GOLDEN TEXT—They rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles.—Acts 14:27.

PRIMARY TOPIC—How the Good News Spread.

JUNIOR TOPIC—How the Good News Spread.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Christianity Reaching Out.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Spread of Christianity in Western Asia.

Review Sunday provides a needed opportunity to determine not only whether the class members have learned and retained the truth taught, but, what is of equal importance, whether the teacher has accomplished the purpose in mind at the beginning of the series.

What was the aim set before us for the three months? "To lead the student to an understanding of New Testament Christianity, and to beget in him the desire and purpose to live the Christian life and to win others to faith in the Lord Jesus."

The test which we apply as the twelve lessons of the past quarter pass in review is:

As a student, have I seen in the spread of Christianity the operation of a gospel of salvation which is the power of God for my salvation? Or, if I am saved, have I been stirred to a more earnest Christian life and a real passion for the salvation of others?

As a teacher, have I really used my opportunity to win the members of my class to faith in the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ? Have I brought to bear on the lives of those in my class who are Christians the Word of God, stirring them to holiness of life and zeal for God's cause on earth?

If we cannot reply in the affirmative, should we not ask whether our efforts to teach have been largely fruitless? But let us not be discouraged, for even as we now review the lessons we have studied together the Holy Spirit is ready to do His work and apply the truth to hearts and lives.

To many teachers the preparation and presentation of the review lesson is the most difficult of any during the quarter. To the student who has given little or nothing to the preparation of weekly lessons it is often a rather disconnected and uninteresting recapitulation of twelve lessons.

A suggested method of gathering up the essential teachings of these lessons is to group them around the following seven points:

The spread of Christianity after our Lord's departure into the glory was distinguished by the fact that:

1. It was by the preaching of a faith that began and continued in the power and demonstration of the Holy Spirit. God honors such preaching and teaching in our day.

2. It was a spiritual movement that demonstrated its God-given power by thriving on persecution. One wonders whether much of the activity of the church in our day has not fallen into the doldrums of pious respectability. Perhaps we need a little persecution.

3. It was not the propagation of theological theory or of a religious sect or party. It was a movement of the Spirit of God which saved men, and saved them to win and serve their fellow-men. True Christian service is nobler and more sacrificial than any non-Christian social service.

4. It was a movement in which laymen as well as religious workers had a place. Philip the layman served with Paul the apostle. Lay men and women let us be awake to our responsibilities and privileges.

5. Difference of opinion was not permitted to hinder God's work. Do we know enough to let God work among us, even if he does not work just as we think he should?

6. The missionary spirit of the preacher was carried over to the convert. This is a succession which God has continued to our day. Are we co-operating and helping it forward?

7. The gospel is for all men, Gentile as well as Jew, whether yellow, red, black, or white. The great commission is still our command and our authority to pray, give, and go, that all men may hear the gospel of the Grace of God.

"No Dice"

By FLOYD GIBBONS, Famous Headline Hunter

NOW the moral of this story, boys and girls, is that gambling doesn't pay. Not that I need any story to convince me of it. I once bet two bucks on a horse I thought would come in first at Saratoga, and the next time I saw him was two years later, pulling the steam calliope in a circus parade in Denver.

Yep, it's risky business letting a horse invest your money for you, but not half as risky as the chances Lieutenant Tommy Griffin, of the Eighteenth infantry, Fort Wadsworth, N. Y., took when he started wooing Lady Luck that fateful July night back in 1922.

Lieutenant Tommy has gone a long way in the army since 1922. Then he was just plain Private Tommy, of the One-Hundred and Seventeenth field artillery, a national guard outfit of Goldsboro, N. C. The One-Hundred and Seventeenth was doing its regular two weeks' field work at Fort Bragg.

It was a hot night, and some of the boys were holding cavalry maneuvers on a blanket in one of the tents. For horses they were using little white, spotted cubes, and those "horses" were galloping back and forth across the blanket in a way that would have scared an enemy army out of at least six weeks' pay.

Tommy and Pal Are Attracted by Galloping Ivories.

Of course, an unsympathetic officer of the day might have suspected that those fellows were shooting craps, but I'm going to take Tommy's word for it that those shouts of "Come on, seven!" that came from the tent, were just the cries of excited rooters who wanted to see the Seventh regiment win.

Tommy and a friend were coming back from an evening in a nearby town when they heard the boys cheering the Seventh regiment on. There was also a lot of encouragement being given to Big Dick, who, I presume, was the captain of the Seventh regiment, and Little Joe, who must have been the first lieutenant. The rooting attracted Tommy and his pal, and they dropped into the tent to see what was going on.

There were three men in the tent—a sergeant named Joe and two privates, Bill and John. The sergeant had been drinking, and he rolled out the ivories with a sort of grim determination. He had lost several dollars, and Tommy could see that he wasn't taking it any too well.

Losing Sergeant Returns to Make Trouble.

The other two lads were in a jovial mood, though neither one of them had imbibed any alcohol. John had the dice and Tommy watched him while he set a point, made it, and picked up his winnings. And it was right there that the friendly game began to take on a serious aspect.

Joe, the sergeant, claimed that John hadn't won the money and told him to put it down. There was an argument that got pretty hot for a minute, but in the end John put the dough back just to humor him, and the play was resumed. A couple more throws and Joe left, weaving his way unsteadily out of the door. But a few minutes later he was back again, a .45 revolver in his hand and an ugly scowl on his face.

Joe was looking for trouble. That much was plain to everybody. He began to accuse John of talking about him behind his back. His finger was tight against the trigger, and looking over, Tommy could see the yellow of cartridge rims in the chamber of the gun. There was no joke about it. That gat was loaded.

Drunken Maniac's Bullet Wakes John Up.

Tommy didn't wait for any more. He made a leap for Joe and grabbed the gun. But Joe kept his grip on the revolver, too, and the pair of them rolled over on the tent floor, fighting desperately for possession of the weapon.

Says Tommy: "I wasn't sure I could hold him long, and I yelled to John to go away. He just sat there looking at me. Then suddenly Joe pulled the trigger. There was a sharp crack that deafened me for a minute, and a bullet whizzed by my head and ripped on out through the top of the tent. I should have been scared then, but I wasn't. At that moment I was too excited to feel the effects of fear."

And still John sat calmly on his cot, watching Tommy wrestle with the drunken maniac. Whether he was dazed or scared stiff or just thought it was all a joke, Tommy never learned. But he sat there until another shot rang out, and this time the Bullet hit John in the hip. That broke the spell. John leaped to his feet and streaked out of the tent. Tommy says he's never seen a man run so fast in his life.

Tommy Stares Into the Muzzle of a .45.

Tommy was tired by that time—dead tired. Joe was strong as a bull, and he knew he'd never be able to get that gun away from him. "John was gone," he says, "and I didn't think Joe would shoot me. I took a chance and let him go. He got up, drunk and furious, and for a full minute I lay on the ground staring into the muzzle of the .45. That's when I did get scared. I have never seen a gun muzzle grow to look so large. I expected every second to be my last, and I began wishing he would shoot and get it over with. But no! He just stood there, fingers convulsing on the trigger, face purple with rage. Then all of a sudden he seemed to realize that John had gone, and he ran out of the tent after him."

That was the beginning of the end. In another ten seconds the whole camp was in an uproar. They caught Joe and took him to the guardhouse, and later they found Johnny and sent him to a hospital, where he spent several weeks getting over that wound in the hip.

And Tommy says that just about the time John got out of the hospital was when his nerves quieted down and his hair stopped standing on end.

Pygmy Hippopotamus

The pygmy hippopotamus is found only in a few lakes and rivers of Liberia, the Negro republic of Western Africa, although his ancestors in prehistoric times inhabited southern Europe, northern Africa, and the islands of the Mediterranean. The pygmy is not so well equipped for swimming as the giant hippo. His eyes are set in the side of his head, instead of on top, and his legs and tail are longer. He has a larger brain and spends more of his time on shore in dense jungle than in the water.

Colonial Dutch Ovens

The early Colonial American Dutch ovens were round, square, or oblong, with an open front. The round variety was often fitted with a spit turned by a handle on the outside, to roast meat. Otherwise the ovens were used for baking. The open side was set close to the fire, to receive the full heat. Usually they were constructed of tin which gave them the name of "tin kitchen" or "Dutch kitchen." The bake kettle, a covered receptacle on high legs to set over the fire, was sometimes called a Dutch oven.

Furred Suits "Must" for College

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

START your autumn wardrobe, Miss Collegian, with a fur-trimmed suit if you would underwrite for yourself a guarantee of being smartly and handsomely appareled throughout the coming round of campus and social activities. In fact the verdict handed down from the supreme court of high fashion declares a suit dramatized with lavish fur embellishment becomes an absolute "must have" this season for every woman and most especially for the college girl who would do the correct thing in matter of practical stylish daytime dress.

Since fur-laden costume suits are so outstanding on the current style program we are picturing a trio of last-minute models that simply radiate with style-significant details. These stunning ensembles were recently shown at a fashion revue presented by the style creators of Chicago in the wholesale district—a brilliant affair that intrigued a vast and appreciative audience to a point of high enthusiasm.

In these striking fashions three distinct trends are indicated—peplum, tuxedo (with reefer suggestion) and tunic. Generally speaking, the costume suit program for autumn and winter classifies into these silhouette influences.

The daring, flaring youthful peplum effect that distinguishes the colorful trotteur suit to the left carries appeal to the slender figure. This snappy walking suit of imported wool in the new moss green is lavishly bordered with red fox, a color combination that tunes in superbly with a glowing autumn landscape. The blouse is of rich lame. The elegance of the material of which the blouse is made carries an important message in regard to the new fabric collections which foretell the use of most opulent and grandiose weaves for fall and winter fashions. Per example the latest move is to wear a waistcoat of costly brocade with the new suit as a happy diversion from the regulation blouse. As to evening velvets and satins and such they are superbly beautiful and "classy."

A tuscan wine costume of nubby wool is centered in the group. Here we have a jacket with fitted back and a spectacular lynx tuxedo front that dramatizes the picture. The very new and popular fur reefer fronts such as stylize both jackets and long coats are quite similar to the tuxedo treatment. The dress with the "tuxedo" jacket is of matching material. It interprets a new neckline and has a double pearl ornament fastening down the front. Speaking of leading colors the wine shades repeat their triumph with dark rich greens (spruce green's the new theme) contesting for first honor.

The costume to the right is of spruce green wool trimmed in mink-dyed kolinsky. Here we have the more-than-ever popular tunic lines. The tunic suit is a leader among leaders this season. The deep fur bordering is typical of the smartest fur treatments for fall. The matching muff and self-fur collar add a final touch of chic.

SHORT, FULL SKIRT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Skirts shorter and fuller is the exciting headline flashed from fashion's realm for fall and winter. Another significant style message is that the new modes reflect a strong British trend influenced by the forthcoming coronation of King Edward VIII. All this as a prologue to the story of the dress here shown made of black spotproof transparent velvet with full circular Victorian skirt and a basque blouse trimmed in royal blue chiffon with metal coin dots—inspired by fashions popular in the days of Queen Victoria. We learn furthermore from the series of fashion revues presented recently by the Style Creators of Chicago in the wholesale outlet that the coronation theme reflects in street outfits as well as in the richly colorful and jeweled evening costumes, also that the red being used is strictly a British wine color and that a typical British tunic and cap influence is evidenced in new stylings.

DECORATIONS FOR HATS FOR AUTUMN

Judging by the forecasts of autumn millinery we are getting back to the days when a hat which wasn't trimmed wasn't considered as worthy of attention.

Autumn hats have all sorts of novel decoration, usually in a shade which contrasts so that there is no chance of overlooking the elaboration of detail. Bonnet-like shapes that look suspiciously like those great-grandmothers once wore are trimmed with pompons and perky ostrich tips. Tassels, silk cords and even spangle arrangements in several different shades trim more sophisticated models.

The alliance of different tones is as significant as the trend toward trimming. Novel fancies of ribbon in two shades of green appear on black felt models and those of very dark red shades. A soft raspberry tone is effective as a contrast for grayish blue.

Tunics Are Now Designed for All Types of Women

The vogue of tunics has reached the state where there are tunics designed for fat women, tunics for thin women, tunics for young and tunics for old. Woe unto the follower of fashion who happens to choose the wrong one.

Those flaring, knee length tunics which start from slender waistlines and shoot out in all directions are intended for the young and willowy creatures. The more they flare and the puffer the sleeves of the accompanying blouse the younger they are. Stylish stouts are permitted to adopt the tunic theme providing they select the straight line version.

Furs on Fall Suits

Rich furs are shown on fall suits of black, rose-rust, green, brown, and gay mottled woolen. Black is the leading color. Next come the rusts, greens and browns, quite a bit of Oxford gray and blues that lean toward gray or green.

CURIOUS DEVICES USED FOR SEEING AFTER DARKNESS

It is presumed that man originally toiled or played only during hours of sunlight. That when darkness came and the eyes could no longer see—he lay himself down to rest. Yet all the while, Nature, through volcanic and meteoric disturbances, through flashes of lightning, was trying to demonstrate to man its power to create light in the midst of darkness.

Fire was discovered, and man found he could prolong the day with the aid of firebrands, camp fires, torches.

The earliest lamps of which we have record were saucer shaped objects with a shallow projecting spout which held the wick. A hole in the center of this disc-like lamp held a small quantity of oil.

So far as is known, there was no radical development toward better lighting until 1783 A. D., when Leger of Paris devised a flat ribbon wick and burner. Not long after, Ami Argand of Paris, perfected a glass chimney which, together with his new improved type of circular wick and burner, produced illumination far superior to anything ever before seen.

Then in 1880, Auer von Welsbach, a German, developed a burner, in which the combination of a mixture of air and gas or vapor, heated to incandescence a mantle, composed of thoria and ceria.

Welsbach's mantle was, of course, crude and inefficient; compared to present-day mantles. But to Welsbach should go much of the credit for making available to us today, the pure white light which is so easily and economically provided in modern pressure mantle lamps using gasoline and kerosene for fuel.

Cow Tunnel

One of the worst hazards of the highway is a loose cow. Because her actions are unpredictable, not a few motorists—not to mention cows—have lost their lives. Yet thousands of farmers are forced to drive their cattle across busy thoroughfares every day.

To overcome this, one Pennsylvania farmer recently built a tunnel under the highway near his house. It is of concrete pipe five feet in diameter. The farmer now drives his cattle under the road instead of over it. — Washington Post.

Royal Gorge Highest Bridge

The Royal Gorge, the grand canyon of the Arkansas river, 166 miles from Denver, is one of the most magnificent natural wonders in the West. The suspension bridge across the top is the highest in the world, 1,353 feet above the river, and is 1,250 long. Its thoroughfare for vehicles is eighteen feet wide.

Observing St. John's Eve

In Poland, St. John's eve is marked by the lighting of bonfires and the throwing of wreaths into rivers and streams. For the occasion girls weave flowers and herbs into crowns and, placing a light in the center of the leaves, toss them into brooks or rivers. Youthful swains either stand on the bank or boat out into the water and attempt to catch the wreaths on poles. If a girl's lover succeeds in rescuing her wreath, the Poles believe that the love affair will have a happy ending; if he fails to, an unfortunate one. In Warsaw this festival takes the form of a gay water fete.

Shelley's Ghost

A monument at Viareggio, near Lucca in Italy, records the fact that the body of the poet Shelley was washed up there in 1822, after his drowning at sea. His ghost has often been reported walking on the beach.

School Notes

High School

The following people will have charge of the library this year: Robert Mark, Norma Musolf, Marguerite McLean, Isabelle Dease, Frieda Ross, Phyllis Bigelow, Lucille DePotty, and Lyda Moore.

The high school music theory class has a membership of twelve. This past week we have been studying rhythms, and setting poetry to various kinds of rhythm.

A check-up on musical instruments shows that the school now owns twelve. Much enthusiasm is being shown in both band and orchestra, and many students are buying their own instruments.

Our baseball team expects to play the team from Whittemore high school at the local diamond Friday afternoon. Attend the game.

The regional meeting of the Michigan Education Association will be held at Saginaw on October 19 and 20. These dates fall on Monday and Tuesday. School will undoubtedly be closed at this time as our teachers are 100% enrolled.

The twelfth grade economics class had a test over the introductory material to the subject Monday of this week.

The Senior class will hold a bake sale at the Moeller Brothers' store Saturday afternoon.

Kenneth Smith of Detroit was a high school visitor Tuesday.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

The eighth grade had perfect attendance all last week.

The seventh grade kept weather charts for a week.

Junior Musolf is on a tour in Michigan with his parents.

Florence McDonald started school Monday. She spent the first two weeks of September in Detroit.

We copied Sousa's well known patriotic song, "Stars and Stripes Forever," in music class last week.

Mrs. Bigelow started reading Blennerhasset, which gives us a more complete knowledge of the life of Aaron Burr.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

Lou Libka, Willard Musolf and Junior Ogden had the highest scores in a fifth grade arithmetic addition test on Wednesday.

The fifth grade made physical maps of the United States for geography.

Marie Ulman and Betty Nelson have been appointed librarians.

Third and Fourth Grades

The third graders dramatized "The Larks in the Wheat" for their reading lesson last Friday.

We are enjoying the story of "Bumper the White Rabbit" for our story period.

A number of us have our penmanship papers on the bulletin boards.

Primary Room

Margaret Leitch entered the first grade Tuesday and Orville McDonald, Jr., entered on Wednesday, making the first grade enrollment 24. There are nine second graders, making a total enrollment of 33 in the primary room.

Donald Lansky visited in our room Tuesday afternoon.

The second graders are learning about the early homes of man for language. The first graders are studying about farm life.

First American Flag

The first American flag had a Union Jack—the English ensign—in the upper left hand corner with the present 13 stripes of red and white.

Pharmacologist's Abilities

The pharmacologist can increase or reduce blood pressure at will; he can prepare acetanilide, which will bring down the temperature, out of coal, and with other substances he can send the temperature up.

Made Walls Blue

Many of the old blue walls found in early Colonial houses—now reproduced with paint—were made by mixing blue clay with skim milk. This combination formed a tenacious plaster which proved very durable.
