Free 4-H Talking Picture Shown at Whittemore

Two hours of talking pictures, featuring the film dramatization of the famous 4-H novel, "Under the 4-H Flag," were shown free to the people of Isosco county on Monday evening, October 19.

This show was given at the Whittemore high school. There was no admission charge and no collection was made of any kind. The program was produced primarily in the interest of the 4-H movement, but families and friends of 4-H members and all others interested in agriculture were invited to attend.

In addition to the feature picture, a 4-H newsreel showing important events in the 4-H and agricultural calendar, an educational short called "Hidden Values," and a cartoon comedy were shown.

The feature picture was an all talking film version of the celebrated 4-H novel "Under the 4-H Flag," by John F. Case, editor of the Missouri Ruralist and former president of the Missouri State Board of Agriculture. It was the projection of old fashioned ideals and principles through a colorful and fast moving drama. It had a lot of good sound constructive thinking about agriculture in general and 4-H in particular, and it also had its share of dramatic thrills.

About 150 from various parts of Isosco county attended the show, according to County Agricultural Agent W. L. Finley.

Junior Girls Celebrate Third Anniversary

The Junior Girls' Club held a very lovely dinner Monday evening at the Hotel Holland in celebration of their third anniversary. The tables were beautifully decorated with large center-pieces of fruit and vegetables of the season. The color scheme was further carried out with large orange candles set in black candle holders and this gave a very pleasant effect and reminded all of the present harvest season.

Singing was enjoyed by all those present, including a group of 38 from the Alpena Girls' League. The total attendance was 70. After the banquet speeches were presented by Mrs. W. A. Evans and Mrs. Elmer Kunze, Miss Frances Garvey of Alpena, guest speaker, gave a very interesting talk on club work and activities. Miss Regina Barkman, president of the local club, welcomed the members and guests, and Miss Loma May, president of the Alpena group, gave a report on the visiting club and on the convention at Manistique. Two piano selections rendered by Miss Florence Green were enjoyed by all.

Golden Wedding Celebrated By Local Couple Tuesday

The golden wedding celebration of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Osborne of this city proved to be a joyous occasion. Open house was held from 3 until 5 o'clock Tuesday afternoon when a large number of friends came to offer congratulations and best wishes for their future years together, after which they renewed their vows before the immediate family. Their son-in-law, Rev. G. W. Gilroy, of Rose City, read the ceremony, assisted by their grandson, Rev. G. M. Jones, of Auburn.

Mrs. Osborne, who was attractively dressed in a white ensemble and accessories and wore a corsage of yellow roses, came in on the arm of her grandson, Lloyd Osborne, of Prescott. The wedding march was played by their granddaughter, Miss Ethelyn Gilroy, of Rose City. Their son, Arley Osborne, of Prescott, and daughter, Mrs. G. W. Gilroy, of Rose City, were the attendants. Little Frances Osborne, the youngest grandchild, acted as flower girl.

The house was beautifully decorated with yellow chrysanthemums and roses for the occasion, many of which were gifts of friends. Immediately following the ceremony a seven o'clock dinner was served. They were the recipients of many lovely gifts.

Mr. and Mrs. Eli Barnum Observe Golden Wedding

On Tuesday evening, October 6th at 8 o'clock, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Eli Barnum of Whittemore was the scene of a very pretty golden wedding when, as Mrs. Glade Schuster played the wedding march, Mr. and Mrs. Barnum, accompanied by Mrs. A. Anderson of Chicago, Illinois, and Geo. Barrington of Sandusky, Ohio, took their places before an embankment of ferns, potted plants and cut flowers and renewed their wedding vows of fifty years ago. The double ring ceremony was used and was very effectively carried out by Rev. H. E. Davis. Fifty-four friends, neighbors and relatives gathered to help in celebrating the anniversary. After congratulations had been extended a short program followed and then lunch was served.

The out of town guests were: Mrs. A. Anderson of Chicago, Illinois; Geo. Barrington of Sandusky, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. James Shay of Bay Axe; Mr. and Mrs. D. C. McEachern and Mrs. Chas. McEachern of Bay City; Mrs. Thomas Osborne of Flint; Mr. and Mrs. Harold Brett of Detroit; Aaron Barnum of Pontiac; Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Stevenson and daughter, Isabell, of Appin, Ontario; Mrs. Roy McCracken, Mrs. Maude Beatie and Mrs. George Beatie of Melbourne, Ontario.

Mr. and Mrs. Barnum were united in marriage at Uby, Michigan, on October 6th, 1886. They moved to Burleigh township, Isosco county, in 1891, living on a farm southwest of Whittemore until 1918 when they moved into the city of Whittemore and have lived there since. Mr. and Mrs. Barnum received many very lovely gifts. Fifty years of gentleness, fifty years of kindly ways, fifty years of tender thoughts, fifty years of splendid days, That's almost a million hours, filled with gladness through and through. Surely God was good to us when He blessed our lives with you. Fifty years of helpfulness, fifty years of manners sweet, Fifty years of tender love, fifty years of faith complete. Storms of care have come and gone, you have wept and grieved awhile, Yet through fifty years of trust you have kept your gentle smile. On this golden day we come bringing all our love to you; Richer are we all today for the kindly deeds you do. All we are we owe to you—love is dancing through our tears As we pray that God will spare you to us for many years. —Edgar A. Guest

WHITTEMORE YOUNG MAN KILLED SUNDAY

Car Plunges Into AuGres River When It Fails To Make Turn

Warren Curtis, age 23 years, of Whittemore was killed early Sunday morning near Santiago when his car, failing to make a turn in the road, plunged into the AuGres river. The deceased was a son of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Curtis of Whittemore.

William Farver and Arthur Duby, whose homes are nearby, heard the crash and hurried to the scene of the accident, only to find the car nearly submerged. They succeeded in bringing up the victim, but efforts to revive him were in vain. Claud and Clare Forshee of Twining were called, and Sheriff John Johannes of Arenac county investigated the accident.

Last July he was united in marriage to Miss Marjorie Common. He is survived by the widow and his parents.

Funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon at the residence. Rev. Herbert E. Davis officiated.

Ram Truck Meeting Is Very Successful

A very successful ram truck meeting was held at the Clarence Earl farm in Tawas township Tuesday afternoon, October 20. Delmer H. La Voi, extension specialist in animal husbandry from Michigan State College who was in charge of the truck, expressed Isosco's meeting as one of the best half-day meetings that has been held in Michigan this fall. "There was not a large crowd at the meeting, perhaps thirty, although considerable interest was shown in Mr. Hoben's discussion upon lamb grading, and everyone was interested in the rams. I admire your sheep men's ability in choosing stock rams, as they have purchased our best quality and most desirable type of rams," stated Mr. La Voi.

The truck came to Isosco county with a load of 69 rams of high quality and from this group three Shropshires were purchased by Edward Parker of Whittemore, W. J. Armstrong of Whittemore, and Harold Goedecke of Tawas City. New Oxford rams were selected to head the flocks owned by John Furst of Alabaster, Lloyd Murray of Hale and John Koehner of Hale, while Hampshire's took up new abodes upon the farms of W. T. Hill of Whittemore and Andrew Anschuetz of Tawas City.

If you will need a new ram next year, the men who purchased these rams invite you to visit their farms and receive first hand information regarding the quality and type of rams that will be available when the truck makes its stop in Isosco county next fall.

Allen Burlew

Allen Burlew, age 57 years, ten months and two days, passed away Monday, October 12, at his home near Standish. A heart attack was the cause of his death. He leaves to mourn his loss, his wife; son, George; granddaughter, Georgia; three sisters, Miss Myrtle Burlew of Phoenix, Arizona, Mrs. Florence Bond of Tawas City and Miss Sara Burlew of Detroit; two brothers, Elmer and Harry Burlew of Detroit, and a host of other relatives and friends.

The family had lived in Flint and Florida the past ten years. They returned from Florida last spring and were employed on the Major farm near Standish where he suffered a heart attack that proved fatal.

The remains were brought to the home of Mrs. Burlew's sister, Mrs. Henry Pake, at Whittemore last Wednesday and funeral services were held at the Whittemore M. E. church on Thursday. Rev. H. E. Davis officiated.

"Sing, Baby, Sing" New Comedy Hit

With Alice Faye swinging torchy new tunes and romancing with Michael Whalen, Adolphe Menjou going daffy and roaming around in his nightie, Gregory Ratoff, the demon dialectician, mangling the English language, the king and queen of comedy, Ted Healy and Patsy Kelly, smashing all laugh records, and the Ritz Brothers bringing a new kind of musical clowning to the screen, "Sing, Baby, Sing" shows Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, October 25-26-27, at the Family Theatre, East Tawas.

Fresh from the hit mint of Twentieth Century-Fox, the picture is said to top their previous triumph, "Thanks A Million," in a million ways.

A laugh-jammed, song-crammed scramble of stars, songs and show-stoppers, "Sing, Baby, Sing" starts crowding the laughs in the opening scenes and only the sizzling songs and romantic love-making provide interludes from the side-splitting mirth.

The action grows wilder and more hilarious. The laughs come thick and fast, with the climax one of the most rib-racking, side-splitting sequences ever brought to the screen.

New "Temporary" Gold Standard Adopted — Russia Accused of Using Spanish War to Rouse International Discord—Belgium Abandons Alliances.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
© Western Newspaper Union.

IT IS a new gold standard, a way of doing business which has never been tried before," was Secretary Morgenthau's characterization of the agreement just entered into by the United States, Great Britain and France, whereby, subject to 24-hour cancellation, they will exchange gold for each other's currencies. Financiers, economists and business men were taken by surprise by the move and immediately gave it close study. Some were disposed to label the maneuver "political expediency," but experts generally said it was a logical step in the sequence of monetary events but not positively in the direction of stabilization.

The new plan, Mr. Morgenthau said, differs from the old gold standard in that it will permit the export or earmarking of gold only to and between governments instead of private business institutions and traders.

"The door is wide open," said Mr. Morgenthau. "We're not going out drumming up business, but we'll welcome all other countries which want to participate."

According to the Treasury department, the United States alone will announce a selling price for gold. France and England will keep their selling prices secret, though there will be a free flow of gold between the stabilization funds of the three nations.

It was believed that Great Britain was the prime mover in this new pact. As one commentator put it: "The agreement was made necessary when France debased her currency and placed an embargo on gold exports, because Great Britain suddenly discovered that nowhere in the world was there left a fixed yardstick against which to measure international commitments and handle international exchange."

SOVIET RUSSIA made a second determined effort to aid the beleaguered government of Spain, and sustained a second rebuff. Ivan Maisky, Russian ambassador to England, handed to Lord Plymouth, British chairman of the non-intervention committee, a virtual ultimatum demanding immediate convocation of the committee to consider blockading the coast of Portugal against arms shipments destined for the Spanish insurgents. It was understood in London that Lord Plymouth replied that if the proposition were seriously made, it should be presented through diplomatic channels to the governments concerned. The Russian plan was for a blockade by English or French warships.

Observers in Europe are convinced that the Soviet government does not expect the powers to agree to any such blockade as is suggested, but is chiefly interested in stirring up discord among the nations.

British Foreign Minister Anthony Eden, after hearing of Lord Plymouth's reply, made a speech at Sheffield in which he pledged Great Britain's unwavering support to the policy of nonintervention in Spain. He declared the government was determined to "confine that tragedy within the boundaries of that country."

Leaders of the Fascists were reported to have planned a steady, steam-roller advance on Madrid, and this offensive was already underway. The defenders of the capital were hastily building fortifications in the suburbs and surrounding the city with trenches. In Oviedo the dynamite-armed force of loyalist miners was still battling with the garrison and rebel troops sent to the rescue were about to enter the city.

MAURICE THOREZ, French Communist leader, made a speech in Strasbourg that is causing a lot of trouble. He was charged with deliberately insulting Adolf Hitler, and the Berlin government entered formal protest. The official Nazi organ, Der Angriff, says the speech was an attempt to precipitate war between France and Germany, and also that it was an attempt "to overthrow the German reich and to achieve the definite bolshevization of France for the benefit of the Soviet Communist internationale."

The French rightist newspapers declare the Thorez incident was part of the Russian Communist scheme to throw France against Germany so that Russia will not be left alone to face "any eventual German attack." The rightists were even more vigorous in their accusations when it was learned that Maxim Litvinov, Soviet foreign commissar, was secretly in Paris.

FIGURES made public by the American Navy Department show that since July 1 last every great naval power except the United States has increased the number and tonnage of its war vessels.

In the 2½ months from July 1 to September 15, the United States reduced the number of its ships from 324 vessels totaling 1,080,715 tons to 306 vessels, totaling 1,062,875 tons.

Great Britain increased ships from 37 to 309 and tonnage from 1,224,329, to 1,232,854.

Japan increased ships from 213 to 217 and tonnage from 772,797 to 776,397.

France increased ships from 178 to 187 and tonnage from 558,452 to 571,734.

Italy increased ships from 191 to 195 and tonnage from 403,865 to 406,333.

Germany increased ships from forty-nine to fifty-three and tonnage from 113,708 to 125,458.

The British foreign office announced that France and Italy had agreed to sign that protocol of the London naval treaty forbidding the use of submarines except under strict limitations.

BELGIUM, which since the close of the World War has been tied tight to France by a military alliance, has decided to drop that and all similar alliances and to rely for her safety on strict neutrality and a larger army. King Leopold so informed the cabinet, telling the ministers that Germany's reoccupation of the Rhineland "practically puts us back where we were before the great war." Belgium's geographical position, he said, "makes it imperative for us to maintain a military machine of such size as to dissuade any neighbor from using our territory to attack another state." The period of military service was extended from twelve to eighteen months.

"Belgium must pursue a policy exclusively and wholly Belgian," Leopold said. "In any case our engagements should not go beyond keeping off war from our own territory. Belgium must remain outside of its neighbors' conflicts."

"Any policy of alliance with a single country would weaken our position abroad. A purely defensive alliance would not meet the case because, however prompt the intervention of our ally, it would only come after the invader's blow, which would be crushing."

AUTHORITY of the national maritime commission to declare a permanent truce in current contract controversies is challenged by the negotiating committee for the Pacific coast maritime unions, and members of those unions are instructed to vote on a proposal for a coast-wide waterfront strike.

The maritime commission had peremptorily demanded that the Pacific coast ports be kept open while it sent an investigator to San Francisco to discuss the conditions which have long threatened to bring on industrial warfare.

In telegrams to President Franklin Roosevelt and the commission, the committee said the commission had caused "great unrest" among the workers through its participation in negotiations between shipowners and dock and shipboard employees.

The seven unions, claiming a membership of nearly 37,000 workers, are the International Longshoremen's association, the American Radio Telegraphists' association, the Marine Engineers' Beneficial association, the Masters, Mates and Pilots of America, the Sailors' Union of the Pacific, Marine Cooks and Stewards, and the Marine Firemen, Oilers, Watertenders and Wipers' association.

SENATOR WILLIAM E. BORAH of Idaho, whose attitude in the Presidential campaign is a matter of great interest to all parties, has declared he would confine his attention to state matters; but then, being irked by some criticism from Republicans he went further and said he was "going after the Republican party." The veteran said he had been accused of not being regular.

"Well, what is a regular?" he asked. "A regular is a man with no ideas, who waits for someone to tell him what to do. My idea of being regular is in doing what you believe to be right in the interests of the people you represent."

"Let this be understood—I'm telling all parties, Republican, Democratic, Union—I'm going to advocate the things I believe in whether they cross party lines or not."

PESSIMISM and discontent marked the final session of the League of Nations assembly, the leaders admitting that little had been accomplished. Carlos Saavedra Lamas of Argentina, president of the assembly, even asked if he might not raise the question whether "civilization is on the verge of a final breakup."

The question of reforming the league covenant provoked a bitter controversy on whether nonmember states should be consulted. Russia was understood to be anxious particularly to bar German influence and achieved a minor triumph since no definite action to solicit nonmember co-operation was taken. A committee of twenty-eight was named to study reform proposals.

The assembly approved reports of its economic and disarmament committees. The economic report carried a British proposal to create a commission to study accessibility of raw materials. The United States and other nonmembers would be invited to participate. The report of the disarmament committee approved the reconvening of the world disarmament conference at an early date.

KURT SCHUSCHNIGG, chancellor of Austria, is taking his place among the European dictators. In order to consolidate military power in his own hands, he decreed the dissolution of all private armies, this being aimed especially at the Fascist Heimwehr headed by Prince Ernst von Starhemberg. The prince directed his followers to obey the edict, and Major Fey, Starhemberg's rival for control of the elements recognizing his leadership to preserve order.

The chancellor's order also affected his own Catholic storm troops. All the private troops were ordered consolidated with the Austrian state militia. This would increase Austria's official armed forces to about 158,000 men. The dissolution decree met strong opposition within the cabinet, and was voted after three ministers had walked out.

Schuschnigg's task now is to actually disarm the private armies. If he succeeds in doing this, his complete control over Austria may be conceded. It is recalled that the Heimwehr was ordered to disarm in 1931, that the government seized many weapons, and that a year later some 40,000 Heimwehr men appeared fully armed and uniformed. Von Starhemberg may not be really squelched this time, either. It is a certainty that he has a powerful friend in Premier Mussolini of Italy.

ARABS of Palestine, who had been on "strike" for 175 days in protest against unrestricted immigration of Jews, were persuaded by the British to call off the strike, which had been accompanied by great disorders and the killing of several hundred persons. The Arab high committee issued an appeal to Arabs throughout the country to return to work quietly, and this command was obeyed generally. Sir Arthur Wauchoppe, British high commissioner, was said to have informed the British government that it was now safe for the royal commission of investigation to begin its work of inquiring into the grievances of the Arabs.

According to a Hebrew newspaper of Jerusalem, the Arabs have arranged for backing by Italian Fascists for their aspirations. Also, the Moslem authority administering Islamic church property is reported to be prepared to sell Catholics a Christian holy place on Mount Zion.

ASING its conclusions on a study covering the period from 1900 to 1935, the National Industrial Conference board finds that there is no evidence to support the theory that the burden of private debt upon business is excessive. Statements that private debt is "absorbing wealth" or is showing a changed and unfavorable relationship to wealth, or that the depression was precipitated by an excessive debt burden are without factual basis, the board reported.

Interest charges have not outrun the capacity to pay them, according to the board's study, which showed that the rates of growth of private long-term debt and of interest charges from 1900 to 1935 were similar to those of national wealth and national income.

Since 1930 private long term debt has tended to decline. Only the public utilities have increased the amount of their outstanding debt. But the board points out that no debt problem exists in the public utility field as a whole and that expansion of the electric light and power utilities has been on a sound basis, with the industry in a safe position to meet interest charges.

The steam railroads, taken as a whole, are neither overcapitalized nor overburdened with debt, the board concludes.

ONE of the worst typhoons in the history of the Philippines swept across Luzon island, killing scores of persons and destroying villages. At least 310 perished and the authorities feared the death list would be much larger for four hundred were reported missing. Eighty-two bodies were recovered from the city of Cabanatuan alone.

FROM AROUND MICHIGAN

Holland—All attendance records at the Black Lake State Park were broken this season, when 900,000 persons visited the Ottawa Beach resort.

Sault Ste. Marie — A six-year freight tonnage record went by the boards recently when the St. Mary's falls canal reported 11,041,109 tons moved through that waterway in the month of September.

Lansing—Into the record books has gone September 1936, the dampest since weather statistics have been kept in these parts. A series of downpours and steady rains accumulated a precipitation total of 7.76 inches.

Lansing—Alfalfa seed production in Michigan may be nearly double the 1,092,000-pound crop harvested in 1935, the United States bureau of agricultural economics reports. Growers are being offered $20 per hundredweight, compared with $18 to $20 last year.

Seney—A new fire tower is to be erected by CCC men near Walsh between Seney and Shingleton this fall. Towermen in the Seney area will be able to make cross-shots to this tower when visibility is poor and thus determine the location of fires more accurately.

Lansing—Michigan's 1936 duck hunting season opened in a crashing barrage of shotgun fire on marsh and lake and slough in every section of the state at 8 o'clock Saturday morning, Oct. 10. Wildfowl hunters, favored by state and federal regulations, took to the field five days ahead of the upland game army.

Pottsville — This little Eaton county village has its own art museum in which every painting is the work of one person—Mrs. Fronie B. Backus, 77-year-old artist, who for the past 40 years has painted more than 600 pictures, covering a wide range of subjects. About 360 of them are exhibited in her 16-room home here.

Brooklyn—For more than 100 years the Cray family has owned, occupied and tilled the same farm, the third generation now being in possession. The farm is located 2½ miles west of here. Charles A. Cray, grandfather of the present owner, acquired 160 acres of the United States government in 1835. The farm residence was built about 67 years ago.

Ann Arbor—How many trout will occupy a mile stretch of a good trout stream? The institute for fisheries research here conservatively estimates 10,000. The figure is reached by a computation of the number of tagged brook trout known to have been in a 1.75 mile stretch of the north branch of the AuSable river near Lovells. The total was 2,437.

Detroit—Circuit Judge Harry B. Keidan has declared unconstitutional and invalid the act passed by the Michigan legislature after the disastrous Kerns hotel fire in Lansing. A permanent injunction was issued against the state insurance commissioner, to prevent him from enforcing the law in his official capacity. The act provided that buildings used for sleeping accommodations must be of fire-resistive construction.

Quincy—A new variety of grape, combining features of both Delaware and Concord grapes, has been produced here by F. E. Lindsey. He has named the new variety "Delco," from the names of the basic varieties. Dark amber in color, it is said to have the tang of the Concord variety and the sweetness of the Delaware. It ripens about Aug. 1, according to Lindsey, and is ready for the market no later than Aug. 5 or 6.

Battle Creek — An ultra-modern seven-room apartment has been completely furnished even to the latest labor-saving devices, to serve as a laboratory for the home management course at Battle Creek College. "Families" of five students and teacher will occupy the apartment, with the students taking turns at having complete charge of budgeting, marketing, household organization, care and use of household equipment and entertaining.

Owosso — An experiment being carried out in Cheboygan County is being watched by cattle men with the thought in mind that the vast cutover lands of northern Michigan may sometime be turned into profitable grazing grounds. The "Circle 6" ranch, in its second year, receives cattle from the west, cowboys turning them loose and watching over them while they graze during the summer. Only a few weeks of dry feed in the fall is required to "finish" them.

Lansing—The State fire marshal plans to ask the 1937 Legislature to enact more stringent laws on the handling of volatile liquids, such as gasoline. Aftermath of an explosion in Flint in which two persons were killed and six injured seriously, an investigation showed that waste gasoline was poured by mistake into a basement pipe, where the fumes came in contact with flames of a water heater. It developed later that no city ordinance or State law covered the condition reported.

Kalamazoo — Kalamazoo College recently inaugurated its ninth president, when Dr. Stewart Grant Cole was formally inducted to office. The institution is 103 years old.

Lansing—The State Administrative Board will purchase for state use this year, an amount of Michigan coal equal to that used in state institutions last year. A total of 30,350 tons from Michigan mines were consumed.

Traverse City — Northern and western Michigan wore its most beautiful robes for autumn tourists the past week. Communities in this section organized numerous "color tours," designed to take motorists through the most beautifully wooded sections.

Detroit—The last of 12 men, convicted by the Black Legion murder of Charles A. Poole, have been sentenced to prison by Circuit Judge Joseph A. Moynihan. The sentences, ranging from life to five years, closed the first major Black Legion trial, which started Sept. 1.

Detroit—A daytime storm warning station, intended primarily for small craft operating on Lake St. Clair, is to be established immediately at the Marine Hospital in Windmill Pointe, Clarence J. Root, meteorologist in charge of the Detroit office of the Weather Bureau, has announced.

East Lansing—Sixty-four pens of pullets from leading poultry farms in the United States and Canada are competing in the fifteenth annual egg laying contest at Michigan State college. The race will run for 51 weeks. The competition is one week short of a full year as the college reserves seven days of each contest to thoroughly clean the laying houses.

East Lansing — The stray dog problem, bad for years, is driving farmers out of the sheep business in some sections of the state. Heaviest losses are suffered by livestock producers in counties north of Kent and Bay. A total of 109 stray dogs were killed by the village marshal of Standish this summer. Despite this big round up, Arenac sheep men have suffered heavily.

Ann Arbor — Several movements are on foot throughout the northern part of the state, to launch intensive campaigns against ragweed. Sponsors, composed of public spirited persons and organizations, scientists, members of the medical profession, etc., have expressed the hope that the weed may be eradicated. Michigan will then become the haven of hayfever sufferers.

Oscoda—King Lumber is not dead in Michigan. Almost 100 years from the time the first saw mill cut the first logs which launched the state's major pioneer industry, sawmills again buzzed loudly in several sections of the northland. The revival is confined to removing the "deadhead" logs from lake and river bottoms. It is estimated that more than 15,000,000 feet of lumber will be thus recovered.

Lansing—Michigan, center of the automotive industry, reported for 1935 an increase of more than 20 per cent over 1933 in business done by blacksmith shops, the Federal bureau of the census has reported. Although the number of shops remained at 369, receipts jumped to $443,000 from $364,000. A smaller number of employees received a payroll totaling some 38 per cent higher, the average annual wage being $679.

Lansing—Surfacing with oil aggregate nearly three miles of the highway north of the M-55 intersection to connect with a 14-mile stretch of concrete under construction south of Houghton Lake has been approved at a cost of $10,263.20. U. S. 27 ultimately will run straight north and west of Houghton Lake, as called for in Federal routing, so the three-mile oil aggregate work is intended only to complete a hard surface to the Straits.

Benton Harbor — Michigan orchardists, experiencing one of the most golden seasons since 1919 and 1920, are getting out of debt. In addition, growers also are reported to be taking advantage of good prices to purchase or order needed farm equipment and some are even planning vacations. These signs of prosperity's return to orchardland are largely the result of Michigan's good fortune and other states' misfortunes in the matter of fruit yield this year.

Ann Arbor—Prof. E. Blythe Stason, adviser to the State Legislative Council's Subcommittee on Taxation, states that the committee will recommend assessment of property partially on its revenue producing capacity rather than on its cash value. The Council will propose legislation enabling the State to hold tax sales of property forced on it by unpaid taxes, and a measure authorizing "scavenger sales" in which the State could sell such property to the highest bidder.

Grand Rapids—The State Chamber of Commerce has laid plans to complain to the Interstate Commerce commission with reference to the freight rates on coal shipped into the state. The traffic director for the organization stated that no reduction had been made in the rates governing coal shipped from the eastern bituminous fields since they were nearly doubled about 20 years ago. Member organizations will be called together to draft a formal complaint which will be presented to the ICC.

Washington.—Some time ago I reported in these columns that Mr. Roosevelt had sent a commission to Europe to study consumer co-operatives.

Six Men, Six Views
Europe to study consumer co-operatives. I said at that time that the commission was likely to find itself unable to reach an agreement concerning a report to the President on the consumer co-operatives and that in the event they were able to reach an agreement, the publication of their findings would be delayed until after the election.

The commission has returned to this country and has gone through its labor pains to the end that there are six different views, an opinion by each of the six different commissioners concerning the value or lack of it that consumer co-operatives have.

But it is important to know developments concerning this commission because it appears that by engaging in an investigation of the consumer co-operatives, the President has awakened a number of different interests in our own country to the fact that there are some kinds of co-operatives which are not helpful. The fuss stirred up by failure of the six commissioners to reach an agreement makes it seem unlikely that there will be any unanimity of opinion in congress if and when Mr. Roosevelt attempts to gain action in a legislative way to encourage creation of these co-operatives. In other words, if a move is made in congress, or if the Chief Executive attempts to force congress to enact legislation favorable to consumer co-operatives, we are likely to see a vigorous legislative battle. Personally, I hope that happens. Unless that end materializes, there is every likelihood that the average person who has not access to full information will be inclined to favor consumer co-operatives, without realizing he is lending his influence, whatever it may be, to fostering institutions that in the end are certain to cause heartaches and financial losses.

I am in a position to say that the one thing upon which the President's commissioners were able to agree was that consumer co-operatives in Europe constitute the focal point for radicalism. Not a single consumer co-operative was found, I am told, that was not controlled, managed or inspired by radicals of one breed or another, mainly, communists. These hotbeds of radicalism constitute "pressure groups" that have been able to impress governments in the various countries of an ability and an influence that do not actually exist with them. That is to say, these groups, like minority groups everywhere, are cohesively organized and they are vocal, in addition. The result is they have been able to force upon peoples in many countries restrictions over private and independent initiative, or to gain for themselves exemptions and privileges not accorded to others. The result is an obvious alignment of peoples into fresh factions, the tendencies of which are dangerous.

It may be news to many persons that we have consumer co-operatives in this country. They are already being fostered by the United States government. I refer to the activities of Professor Rexford Guy Tugwell, who has installed in the resettlement colonies various and sundry consumer co-operatives. It may be news as well to many to learn that Mr. Tugwell has spent almost two million dollars in financing these co-operatives to get them started. And the third bit of news respecting this circumstance is that a book written by James Peter Warbasse is being used as a guide for the creation of these consumer co-operatives in federal resettlement projects.

Now, the name of James Peter Warbasse may not seem important. Many persons have written books, but there are not many volumes extant in the United States that advocate changes in the form of our government. Yet, there are propositions in the volume to which I have referred which do just that and these books, as I have said, are serving more or less as a guide for the people whom Professor Tugwell has "resettled."

With this brief presentation of the facts, it seems to me it does not take much imagination to see the basis upon which the promoters of the consumer co-operatives are building their structure in this country. Taking these facts into consideration with the information brought back by those who made the study for Mr. Roosevelt, it is made to appear at least that a foreign link is somehow or other being forged, and that link, I believe, is designed as a fundamental unit in the general radical program to change the form of our government as well as the form of our national life. I can arrive at no other conclusion.

There is still another phase of this general proposition of consumer co-operatives that ought to be of interest to every producer in this country. Let us assume, for example, that they were perfect in organization and management; that they prospered and expanded in numbers and that they were rendering genuine service to the people. If that condition were to obtain, does it not occur as a natural question that with so much strength, the consumer co-operatives would eventually establish a class alignment between producer and consumer? It seems to me that the natural course of events would lead to this end, and if it did lead to this end I am afraid that because there are more consumers than there are producers, the producers would get the dirty end of the deal. They would be short-changed because they would be outnumbered.

This phase seems the more important because the food stores, food fields generally, are the sectors in which these consumer co-operatives operate best. As a matter of fact, the food field is the most fertile field for experiments anyway and here is quite apparently another experiment that has fastened, or is fastening itself as a parasite upon the agricultural industry of this country.

I know there has been some argument that the consumer co-operatives are the answer to the effort to destroy chain stores. That is not so. Chain stores in foreign countries have licked the co-operatives. They have virtually destroyed them where the co-operatives attempted to drive the chain stores out of business. It becomes important then to recognize that while the United States has many chain stores, it has not now and never will have as many chain stores as it has independent.

Again, here is a threat to independent business men, particularly to the small shop owner, whether he be in a large city or in the thousands of small towns and villages where the owners of such stores are important to their communities and pillars of strength in our national society. If the consumer co-operatives get going, I predict a further decline in the number of independent merchandise houses throughout the United States. For that reason, if for none of the others that I have outlined, it does seem important that the consumer co-operatives move in this country should be stopped in its tracks and that those responsible in an official way for encouraging this sort of thing should be shorn of power.

Then
There's Beer
It may seem a far cry from the farm field to the price of beer as a working man finds it, but there is a direct connection and recent developments again demonstrate the fact that our whole economic structure is quite closely related. There is an increase coming in the price of beer. Either the working man and others who like beer are going to pay more for it, or else they will get a smaller glass. The answer is that ingredients entering into the production of beer have increased in price to such an extent that, according to official figures, the brewers are now paying about $1.50 more for the things that enter into the production of one barrel of beer than they did when the sale of beer again was legalized.

This circumstance is significant for the reason that it shows conclusively how tampering with the currency upsets the general balance within our economic structure and results sometimes in displacement of markets and sometimes in diminution of sales. In the case of beer it probably will result in a displacement of markets, rather than any decline in the amount of beer consumed, despite the fact that the ultimate consumer will be paying more.

This condition is of interest to agriculture generally because it has always been contended by the proponents of open sale of beer and whiskey that a substantial new outlet for farm crops was made available by the repeal of the Eighteenth amendment. Rather, it was a restoration of an old outlet that existed before the Eighteenth amendment was adopted. But there has been a combination of circumstances, largely the result of governmental meddling, that has mitigated against the farmers obtaining full benefit from repeal. These may be enumerated as follows: Devaluation of the dollar, crop restriction under the Agricultural Adjustment act, higher taxes, and a tendency on the part of the Roosevelt administration to increase imports from abroad.

In the case of the devaluation of the currency, the main purpose, as announced by the Roosevelt administration, was to increase prices. It has had that effect and has made the brewers pay more for the hops they must import from abroad, and they must import hops because our own production is insufficient.

The Typical American Foreign observers note a marked change in the physical appearance of Americans within the last half century. Fifty years ago the tall lantern-jawed man typified Uncle Sam. Today, they say, the square-faced, stocky business man of the Babbitt type best typifies him.

Yanks Are Tops But Giants Rate Medal for Valor

PLENTY of people will tell you that the world champion Yankees are going to stay on the top of the baseball heap for some years to come—like their predecessors of the Ruthian age. And it looks as though plenty of people are going to be right.

The boys from the Yankee stadium are young and healthy. There's hardly a creak in a carload of them. The only spot where age insurance might be in order for Joe McCarthy is at second base and even the supposedly fading Tony Lazzeri drove in 111 runs during the American league season and had a batting average of .287. In the World Series he handled 30 fielding chances without a bobble. While his series batting average was a pallid .250, he can grin when he remembers that bases-loaded homer.

Only Lou Gehrig and Bill Dickey among the other regulars are older than twenty-eight. Dickey is a year under thirty, while Lou tops that age by three years. Of the pitchers, Ruffing and Hadley are thirty-two; Pearson twenty-seven, Gomez twenty-six and Fordham Johnny Murphy whose pitching stopped the Giants in the last game and who should be a 20 game winner in '37 is twenty-eight.

So the Yanks can give Old Man Time a race for his mazzama for a few years at least. Incidentally Marse Joe doesn't have to be ashamed of the trades he made last winter when he decided to strengthen his club. He picked up Jake Powell and Bump Hadley from the Washington club and Monte Pearson from Cleveland. How would the Yanks have looked in the World Series without them?

But on the other hand, the vanquished Giants need a lot of overhauling. Last June owner Stoneham said they wouldn't do. But the rest of the league by being woefully weak made a liar out of him. He can't take a chance with the truth another year, though.

Some so-called prognosticators go so far as to say that in their present condition the Giants will be lucky to finish in the first division next year. That five-run Yankee blast off Fitzsimmons in the final game proved he needs plenty of rest betw. ee. starts. He'll be thirty-six next year and Hubbel thirty-four. Manager Bill Terry is playing on borrowed time. So is Travis Jackson. Sam Leslie's future is a question. The club will need more secondary pitching and some additional extra base punch somewhere in the lineup.

While the praise for the World Series is being handed out, though, don't overlook the Giants. They did a magnificent job considering what they had to work with. Colonel Bill Terry battled as desperately for a lost cause as did that ancestor who fought for the Confederacy.

On paper the Giants were woefully outclassed by the Yankees, just as they were supposedly outclassed by two clubs in their own league—the Cubs and Cardinals. But they made a daring start by winning the opening game behind Hubbel's pitching. Then in the next they were treated to a drubbing the like of which has never before been seen in a World Series. Almost any other club would have given up. But what happened? The Giants came up with a swell pitene. game by Fred Fitzsimmons and were outlucked in losing. The third game found McCarthy starting his best bet, Monte Pearson, who fairly out-pitched and won from Kubbler.

That left one game to go for the Yanks to sweep the series. Even that didn't stop the Giants. Terry rallied his veterans and behind the lion-hearted pitching of Hal Schumacher, won the fifth game. The Yanks couldn't figure out how they did it. In the sixth and final game, for seven innings the Giants withstood an early display of Yank power, which would have been enough to stop almost any one else cold. They were right in the thick of the argument. In the interests of efficiency, Terry made all the shifts the book called for, but in the pinch the Giants were stopped by Fordham Johnny Murphy.

NOT IN THE BOX SCORE: ON PHILADELPHIA'S Sansom street the gossip is that Coach Harvey Harman will get the gate in his Christmas sock no matter what happens to Penn's football team this fall. Lou Young will return to the Alma Momsie as athletic director and Bert Bell will be the new H. C., they say. Mrs. Carl Hubbell was the most tensely nervous of the Giants' wives no matter who was pitching. She always looked as if she wanted to root out loud but just couldn't. Mrs. Gabler was the smartest dressed of the ladies who gathered by themselves in the stands when the club was in town and who visited one another's apartments to listen when the National league champions played in a town where games were broadcast.

Jock Whitney won $8,000 from the Guests (Winston and Ray) when his Greentree team won the National Open polo title. He made one $1,000 wager while riding down the field three goals behind in the fifth period. Dave West of the Rutgers Targum now does a column called Not in the Box Score. Ike Gellis, the eminent writer and promotion expert, is the voice with the smile announcing events at Bill O'Brien's new sports club in White Plains. Before his hair had turned to silver Walter Winchell used to be a left-handed first baseman on the One-hundred and Tenth street lots. He was a swept fielder but no Lou Gehrig up at the plate and if he doesn't like it he can sue his Uncle Frank Bakst.

Friends Wonder Why Landis Ignored Stark

North Carolina fans are so vexed at Dr. Graham, the State university president who wishes to give free, public and limited aid to football players, that they may ask the legislature to investigate him. The reason is that down yonder where so many good elevens come from recently there are some things (such as proselyting) which you just don't speak about in public. Starter George Cassidy is one of the most nonchalant of turf officials. The other day he was gnawing on a fried leg of chicken while preparing to dispatch a Belmont field. Friends are wondering how Judge Landis happened to forget a very honest and capable former ballplayer and umpire named Dolly Stark when he put the okay on World Series broadcasters.

Rutgers players (who performed in a practice affair against the Lions) say that Columbia's football team is being overrated in the papers. Dorothy Snyder brought her pretty sixteen-year-old self all the way from San Antonio to see her daddy do the Giants' third base coaching. Waiters in a high-class Boston hotel already have presented Gus Uhlmann with a bottle of champagne and may wind up by painting his name all over the Bunker Hill monument. The reason is that when the celebrated cartoonist was visiting the town recently he gave the garcons a tip on Eli Yale who then proceeded to win at Belmont at 30 to 1.

Three-year-old Skippy Bartell was the most energetic of Giants' rooters. He was always fighting to get out there on the field and help the old man play shortstop. Horsemen are balking at the starting gate okayed for New York next year. It is a six-strand rope affair and they claim it is the gallows for a rider if the barrier slips. Four generations of the Levin family (their boy Dave is a wrestling champ) have been in the butcher business. Note to the numerous clients who want to know three reasons why Joe Louis' highly publicized suit against that weekly mag probably will never go very far in court—Ask Messrs. Black, Roxborough and Blackburn.

His booking agent shortly will announce that Jesse Owens has changed his mind again and really will turn pro. A bit of sentiment does not hurt in sports. For instance there is Emileo, which belonged to Bill Knebelkamp, Louisville baseball magnate. After Bill died there were folks who said the die was no account and should be disposed of. But, out of respect for Brother Bill, Pat Knebelkamp would not let the traders send the thoroughbred down the river. Now Emileo is stepping so fast he seems likely to be another King Saxon.

Golf pros, irked with the present P. G. A. administration, are plotting a new organization to be labeled the North American P. O. A. Germany is building four giant airships to transport its Olympic team to Japan in 1940 in three days instead of three weeks, the boat schedule. The eight pitchers who have won three games in a World Series were right handers. Lou Gehrig took a few aspirin tablets before each of the Yankees' games in the closing weeks of the campaign.

The toughest position to play in football? "Center," says Bert Metzger, Notre Dame's watch charm guard of a few years back, who for his size was the greatest lineman of the last decade. "He takes a mauling all through the game, but he has to hang in there and keep passing that ball."

Ripples From Guiley Creek

By the Trout Specialist
Well, hunting season opened with a bang, and the squirrels, bunnies, partridges and pheasants must have thought the Spanish civil war had been moved to northern Michigan as the army of hunters invaded the woods.

So far, your correspondent has done some very poor shooting, miffing three good shots. Rabbits seem scarce, and the partridges are doing a good job of playing hide and seek.

Harold Wade and five friends, of Detroit, spent the week end at his cottage on the AuGres. As I stood on a hill, up the Guiley, Sunday forenoon, the intermittent shooting of hunters blended with the regularly spaced shots from Mr. Wades shooting range, to make an almost constant bombardment.

Paul Myers of Saginaw, with his sister, Dorothy, and aunt, Mrs. Sayre of Lansing, spent the week end here.

ON DISPLAY at all Buick Showrooms

SENSATIONAL is the fervor with which the American public has taken to its heart the brilliant motor cars offered by Buick this year.

That's why every car in the 1937 Buick line—the SPECIAL, the CENTURY, the ROADMASTER and the LIMITED—is a triumph visibly and intrinsically outranking anything we have ever done.

Each has more beauty for dazzling style, more power for breath-taking action, more room for full-family comfort, more downright "road-command" for safety and pleasure.

See them—then you'll know why Buick's soaring sales curve is headed for yet loftier altitudes next year.

Should we continue this amazingly popular line of cars into next year, perhaps the prudent thing to do—or should we dare broad improvement upon their spectacular excellence?

We felt there was only one right answer to that question, the bold and progressive answer—and that's why insiders now forecasting 1937 are already saying: "It's Buick again!"

That's why on top of $15,000,000 recently spent re-tooling and re-equipping Buick's great plant, we appropriated and are now spending $14,500,000 more.

YOU'VE GOT WHAT IT TAKES!
You can afford the new Buick. It's easy to buy and thrifty to own. With all its quality, its phenomenal performance and stunning style, prices start as low as $765 and up list at Flint, Mich. General Motors terms to suit your liking. Safety glass included, accessories extra. Prices subject to change without notice.

Hale

Mrs. Fritz Holzheuer is spending the week in Flint where she is visiting friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Streeter have returned from sections of the Thumb and southern part of the state, where they enjoyed the week end pheasant hunting.

The children of the Hale schools enjoyed a two-day vacation while the teachers attended the teachers' institute at Saginaw the first of the week.

Geo. Mowbray, who for the past month has been recuperating from an operation, is much better. Rev. Vertz made a trip to Bay City where Mr. Mowbray visited his doctor.

Ed. Fory spent the week end in Bay City visiting friends.

Richard Greve had one of his hands badly mangled Sunday when his gun was accidentally discharged.

Considerable attention has been paid Glenwood Streeter's herd of cattle during the past week. The object of attention was a large deer that has been feeding with his cattle. The deer, a doe, became so bold as to graze very contentedly in the orchard adjoining the house.

The W. P. A. recreation group under their leader will soon have their ping-pong tables ready for use. It has been slow work. Volley ball is being played.

Albert Gardner is suffering from quinsy and has been unable to work. Robert White, who has been visiting Mrs. Rosa Ballard, is also suffering from quinsy.

Mrs. Cora Johnson and daughters, Margaret and Dorothy, are in Flint visiting relatives.

Tuesday morning Mrs. Gardner made a business trip to Bay City. Eleanor Koehler is visiting in Hale for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Streeter have as their house guest for several days, their nephew, Kenton Bissonnette, of Lansing.

A very good potato crop is reported in this vicinity. Several farmers have well over 1,000 bushels.

Ruth Ingersoll and her grandmother have returned from Akron, Ohio, where they spent the past month.

Lyle Frost spent part of the hunting season in Hale.

While hunting, Forrest Streeter happened to see a flock of geese flying rather low. He picked out what he thought to be a nice one and shot. To his surprise, two geese dropped. Now, it isn't so wonderful to shoot a goose but to shoot two geese in one shot is something to write home about.

Hallowe'en night there is to be a masquerade dance at the community hall north of Hale. The public is invited to come masked.

He paused, breaking the passion engendered by his hot words, and the heat went out of him before he.

"I ought not have done that. I reckon it just kind of did itself. But I meant my words."

He stepped down from the porch and walked with long fast strides across the yard to the paling fence where his mule was tied. He mounted in one long rhythmic leap, and loped down the creek out of sight while Cynthia stood with her stupefaction by the kitchen door whither she had retreated. Then she felt weak in an unfamiliar world, and she ran into the weaving-room and threw herself upon a pile of raw wool and for the second time in the same day she wept.

"Why did he have to come today?" When Sparrel came in late from the trip to town he found Cynthia waiting his supper as Julia had always done. He also observed that she looked weary and sad and that her eyes were red. He talked more than usual to her, complimenting her cooking, telling her of the journey, of Jesse's room. Then he went to his desk by the big fireplace, and took from his pocket a large envelope and began to study it. "Reuben's father sent the deeds and the calculations," he said.

CHAPTER XIV

Cynthia had often in these months contrasted her father with Shellenberger. She never got it formulated into a neat and satisfactory proposition that could be tied up in a packet and laid away. It was illusive as human personality and subtle as the involuntary response of pleasure or distaste to another human being. Sparrel, honest in himself and generous in assuming the same qualities in other people, inspired instantly a sense of security and faith in the rightness of things; like the jutting Pinnacle on his place. Shellenberger, with all his good speech and manners, left an impression of uncertainty and suggested that things which should be assumed as ordered and fixed were precarious and sinister; like a pair of fox eyes discovered focused upon you in a clump of bushes.

So it was with a quickened sense that she heard Sparrel saying to Shellenberger that the surveyors had got the land mapped and calculated and the deeds made out ready to sign.

"So they're all done, are they? That's good."

"All complete they are, except the place where the terms of sale are put down, it's left blank for us to fill in."

"All right. How much was there of it?"

"They figured the whole place has six thousand two hundred and ten acres, more or less."

"How much in my part?" Shellenberger asked.

"I haven't looked at that part yet," Sparrel said.

"Well, you give me the papers and I'll go over them today and we'll sign them up."

Sparrel handed him the documents. In the evening after supper he sat with Sparrel in the big kitchen by the smoldering logs.

"They did a good piece of work, and clear and all there. He figures there are four thousand two hundred and fifty-one acres in the strip I bought," Shellenberger said.

"I calculated there'd be around four thousand acres more or less," Sparrel said. "It takes a sight of ground to fill up the space between Gannon, Wolfpen Ridge, and the Big Sandy, just on a surveyor's level measurement, and I reckon it'd about double if you measured the ground itself."

"You couldn't measure that way, and anyway the trees I am buying are perpendicular and you can't have any more of them on a hillside than in a flat, if as many."

"Yes, that's what Reuben Warren tried to explain. I don't see it, but it is a way of selling and it's all right."

"Warren has left blank a space for writing in the contract, so I suppose we might as well begin to talk details of settlement," Shellenberger said.

"Yes," Sparrel said.

"Four thousand two hundred and fifty-one acres at five dollars an acre would be, let's see, five ones are five, five fives are twenty-five . . . twenty thousand two hundred and fifty-five dollars, I make it."

"Twenty-one thousand two hundred and fifty-five dollars," Sparrel said, "one to carry."

"So it is. Twenty-one thousand two hundred and fifty-five dollars, but it's about four thousand too much. The surveyor's bill is five hundred and thirty dollars."

Sparrel offered no comment.

"Now about the terms of the contract," Shellenberger said. "On sales like this it is customary to pay so much down and agree on a way of carrying the balance. I take it that is all right with you?"

"I reckon that's all right," Sparrel said.

"Suppose then that we agree on this: I'll arrange to pay you, say, forty-five hundred dollars now, twenty-five hundred about the first of the year, and the balance when I get the logs down the river to the mills?"

"I reckon if that's the way you do in big deals like this, it will be all right. We'll just write in that agreement," Sparrel said.

"I'll have to go down the river in a few days," Shellenberger said, "and if we could go over to Pikeville together we could have it witnessed and notarized, and I'll draw a check on the Catlettsburg bank for the amount. I'll pay Warren while I'm down there."

Cynthia had finished her work, and she stole quietly out of the kitchen and into Julia's room and sat down in Julia's chair by the window to look down the hollow in the dark as Julia had so often done, thinking, "So the sale ends and all the months since April have gone by and the menfolk write what they're supposed to write to make it on paper. They're always putting things down on paper as if that made it any different, and then they forget about what it really is."

"And Mother lies there on the Shelf with Saul and Barton and the rest where the stars are dim tonight, and across the ridge are all the men for cutting down the trees to float away when spring comes, the way Reuben floated away that morning. Pears like Wolfpen has just become a place for a body to float away from and not live in, Reuben and Jesse and Mother and the land and the trees, maybe me, I could float away now and not miss things so much."

At the end of the week, Sparrel rode with Shellenberger over to town to sign the papers and file them with the county recorder. He brought back word from Jesse. He was proud of his son in the law for he was doing well, his heart was in his work, and he was aglow with his young enthusiasm and there was an inspired look in his eyes. Tandy Morgan, large, jovial, easy-going Tandy had praised Jesse to Sparrel. "That boy of yours has got a head on him, Sparrel. He beats all I ever saw the way he takes to the law. I'm going to take him into court to help me with cases, come next term." Sparrel liked that, and told it to Cynthia when he returned.

"I always knew Jesse would do well at whatever he was minded to follow," Cynthia said.

"They say the school is doing right well this term under the new principal. I was just thinking," Sparrel said, "you might just as well as not go over and get in the second term."

"No. I can't this year now," Cynthia said.

"We could get a woman to come in now," Sparrel said.

"I don't fancy a strange person taking over the house. There's always been a Pattern woman to do the woman's part of the house. I don't think Mother would want Amy Wooton or somebody messing around her closets and beds and kitchen and smoke-house and fruit shelves and milk cellar. It's too soon yet. Maybe next year with Jasper getting married and all."

"You're the doctor," he said.

"I read the books on the shelf and the papers that come. And, anyway, I am about of the mind that to run a house like this the way Mother did it is just as good as the book learning over at town."

"Unless you have a real turn for books."

"It takes a real turn for a house, too."

Sparrel left it there, glad of her pride in the house. He took the bank book from his pocket and held it near the light for a long time.

"That looks pretty good, I reckon," Cynthia examined the single entry of $4,500 in the neat banker's hand.

"Is that all there is to it?" she exclaimed.

"That's all."

She could not somehow get used to it. Through the days it moved in and out of her thought.

"Four figures in a little thin scrap of a book. That's all there is to it. Four figures in ink. It don't seem right. The Pattern land sold, a bunch of strange men from down the river in here chopping down the place, everything changed right around until a body don't know whether she is living on Wolfpen or in a lumber camp, and all it matters to the menfolk is some scratches on a thin little scrap of a book with a brown back to it."

Sparrel was not so busy at the mill after early November. He went less often to the logging camp and found more content in being near the house. He seemed to her more like the Sparrel of a year ago when the new mill was being planned, only he was graver now. He was doing things that gave a satisfaction deeper than the physical act of doing. He spent an entire day going over the loom, replacing and tightening loose threads, and greasing the threads. He pegged the boards in the floor which had come loose. He brought sawed lumber from the mill and built the new row of shelves in the smoke-house. A little shyly he gathered up the seeds from Julia's flowers and put them in label jars as she had always done, saying to Cynthia:

"I reckon we'd better put these away for seed. It wouldn't seem natural not to have the flowers around the place."

Then he gave the garden its coat of cow dung and its fall plowing, turning it carefully in deep narrow furrows and harrowing it until it lay soft, mellow and without clods. And so he worked about the place for many days until Cynthia thought for a moment that past days of peace had returned to Wolfpen.

It was only for a moment. Then Abrial came at the end of a wet and misty afternoon, out of breath with running, bearing the news about Doug. Sparrel was in the medicine-room behind the chimney. Cynthia was in the kitchen listening.

The lumbering had moved relentlessly up the Dry Creek Hollow. As the great trees fell, they were collected and dragged down to the creek by the mules and the yoked oxen. Now, at the end of November, they were far up into the narrow portion of the hollow and beyond the floating capacity of the creek. Mullens constructed a narrow tram road around the rim of the hollow to carry the logs to the dam at Gannon Creek. They were snaked down from the hill to the rude platform and there rolled onto the log trucks. The track sloped rather sharply down the hollow, giving to the trucks considerable speed under their own momentum. At the last bend opening into the mouth of the hollow at Gannon, the tracks curved abruptly and plunged down the slope to the dam. One man rode at the end of each truck to apply the brakes and bring the load of three logs to a halt at the collecting point. The men grew reckless and increased the speed. They drank. They laid bets against a record speed over the course. They boasted against one another of going around the curve and down the long last slope without touching the brakes.

Doug had grown rash in their company. He talked more and bolder. He drank with them from the jug behind the bushes. That afternoon he pushed the wood blocks from their place under the wheels of the loaded truck and gave it a sharp urge with the crowbar. Standing on the narrow platform by the brake, he waved his hat at the lumbermen, and as the load of logs gathered speed he shouted, "This'll be a record." The two logs on the bottom were thick and very heavy, the third and top one was thin, not straight and of little value. Doug held to it, letting the truck go its way untouched by the brake.

Abrial and the men at the dam heard the uncommon rumble of the truck. Doug came furiously into sight around the bend, preceded by the roar of the wheels on the infirm tracks.

"It's Doug Mason. He's gone plumb crazy," Abrial said.

While he was yet speaking, the heavy load struck a weak joint in the wooden rails in the middle of the curve and plunged down the foot of the hill to the creek bank.

They rolled the worthless log from his torn body and carried him bleeding to the camp. Sparrel must hurry.

There was nothing much Sparrel could do for the left hand, fattened and punctured, with the white broken bones, hanging by a single string of skin at the wrist. The left eye was struck too hard by the heavy links of the log chain, and was no longer an eye.

Sparrel did well by him with his turpentine and salve and castile soap. When the worst of pain had passed, they carried him out of the bunk in the lumber camp to his own house.

A moan came sometimes from his lips out of his control. He would twitch the handless stump of his arm, his teeth grinding, and stare at the blank wall with a bitter eye.

His mother, hobbling about on her poor legs, and his sister Hattie did the weeping.

Cynthia, preparing things to bear to the Mascns, riding down Wolfpen and Gannon Creek with them on the Finemare, kept thinking over and over: "Worrying and regretting are what you can't help and they don't make things a bit different. But a body can't hardly see why things in the world can be the way they sometimes are. Seems like there has been a plague on this year that just hangs around Dry Creek Hollow waiting to reach out and do everybody an ill turn. Like the hills couldn't have all the fine trees cut down without cutting down people, too. Only why need it be poor Doug; if it had to be somebody, it might have been . . . but a body oughtn't to say that I don't reckon, it being the Lord's business and not any mortal's. But a body can't hardly help thinking, I'm downright sorry about Doug. The selfish thoughts that keep bobbing up; being glad I told Doug I didn't love him to marry him or anything before this happened to him. I couldn't ever have him and he sure would have had it in his own mind that I wouldn't just because he was maimed so bad. But that's not so because if I would have had him before it wouldn't make a difference now. That's a selfish way to be thinking to be finding something to be glad for yourself for. It's an awful pity. It's that man and the lumbering and the bad re-thing in. Like the trees were a family avenging itself for a hurt done to it."

She lifted her eyes from the road for one instant to see the dam at Dry Creek and the growing mountain of logs in the barren hollow waiting for the rains.

December was dreary and full of heaviness. It was as if the sorrow for Doug Mason had taken visible form over the house. Day after day the thick clouds lay on the hills.

The bodies of the trees were cold and black with the damp, the upper branches absorbed in the low clouds. The wood-smoke from the chimney was pushed back into the yard with the smell of the wet wood-lot and the rotting leaves. At the barn the corn-crib smelled of damp cobs and the mice, and the ammoniac odor from the stable dung was bitter in the nose.

All day long the house was as quiet as death. Shellenberger was still away down the river somewhere getting ready for the rafts in the spring. Jasper was busy in the hollows and at the barn. Abrial went each day to Dry Creek. Sparrel was at the mill grinding the cornmeal for the winter for himself and the families on the creek. Cynthia found herself sometimes tiptoeing lest she break the absolute stillness. Then she would become conscious of it and let her heels fall solidly against the floor, move the beds with a screech, and say in a loud voice, "There's nobody asleep here now that I should be sneaking around the place like a ghost. Nobody at least that I can wake with a noise."

She looked out over the barren apple trees watching the mist collect into large drops on the slender twigs and slide down in a slow procession to their tips and then in silver globules to the ground. "They are pretty that way," she thought. "But in December the snow would be better. Snow isn't sad like mist drops. You can hold your face up to the big flakes and watch them slide bumping each other down the sky. They are happy and wondering where after all their journey they will light. They might fall right on the warm nose of a fox sticking his head out of a hole under a rock in the woods. I would float down into the plume of a pine-cone on the hill where the clean smell is. It's not snow, it's nearly a rain, the sun hasn't been out for days and days, and I never saw the place so dreary. And Mother no place where I can see her, and Jesse over at town, and poor Doug! He talked about it being lonesome down there. It never was lonesome here before. The sorry troubles take hold of you like a bur and when I think of him getting mangled that way under that man's old log truck I have to shudder for it hurts so. It cuts a body to the heart not to be able to do hardly anything for him and Sarah, and it's so dark and dreary in December. I can't even remember hardly how it was in the spring. And Daddy nearly every day down to see about him, and when I ask him how Doug is, always saying, 'Poorly, Cynthia, he's getting well, but he's in bad shape. And he's that proud he won't let anybody see him only me.' Maybe if I went down to the loom and wove a while instead of looking at the drip, drip, drip in the orchard I could get my mind on something else. I'll think about the look of Reuben when he went away, the shine in his eyes, the . . ."

They were trying days, and they trailed one another through the gloom. Then Jesse came one warm week-end when the wind blew into the hollows and pressed the rain from the clouds, driving them from before the sun. The darkness lifted for a moment, the grass looked up wondering and the birds sang. Jesse was happy. He filled the house with his enthusiasm and good-will. He talked about the law and the lawsuits pending next term of court, of the people and the activity of Pikeville, feeling himself no longer a spectator but a part of it. He described the new brick jail to be built on the lower corner of the court-house square, the new Baptist church by the Institute, the general store the George Brothers were putting up, the stone sidewalks being laid all through the town and the talk about even lighting the streets at night. He could see all this progress from Tandy Morgan's office.

It was good to have Jesse come back, but it was somehow different from the way she had imagined it. He was changed and all this talk sounded strange from him. He was already more of the Pikeville lawyer, Cynthia thought, than the boy who set out the plants in the spring and read Blackstone haltingly under the haycock. She realized with heartache that even the Jesse of those days existed no longer except in her memory, and would return no more to Wolfpen. It was idle to think of it being otherwise, and yet the thought of placing Jesse in the vault along with all the other treasured things that had died in that year was full of grief. And the days after he was gone were less happy than before.

Shellenberger and Dry Creek seemed to have conquered and possessed Wolfpen. Shellenberger returned from his journey down the river. He was still talking about the progress of business minded men who were developing the country—for a profit. For themselves Everything was going to come along big very soon now. Just at the moment things were a little tight because it required a steady outlay of capital: to get an operation going and a long time to get returns on it. Vision, cooperation, enterprise were the necessary qualities. A few days later he came up from Dry Creek to the mill where Sparrel was grinding.

"I was wondering whether you couldn't help me out for a few weeks," Shellenberger said in his pleasantest manner.

"What could I do to help you out, Mr. Shellenberger?"

"Those fellows are grumbling for their pay again, and the God's truth of it is, Mr. Pattern, that I'm just a little short of cash right at this minute. I was wondering if I couldn't borrow a thousand dollars from you for a short time. I'll give you my personal note for it, and at the end of the month when I go down I'll have Judge Wade of the Catlettsburg bank endorse it if you wish."

"I don't hardly see . . ."

"You ought to have interest at six per cent. Say fifteen dollars for the loan. That's the way men make money, by making it work. You let it idle in the bank and the bank lends it out and gets the interest. Just for ninety days and you'll do me a great favor and help my work along."

Sparrel thought it over; the end of May, a thousand dollars, fifteen dollars interest, enough cash for Jasper, a real favor to Shellenberger.

"I guess I could spare that to help you out," he said. "And I don't see any cause to bother Judge Wade with it."

"I'm certainly much obliged to you, Mr. Pattern."

Dry Creek kept pushing in like its new owner. Abrial was much engrossed in the technique of lumbering and the prospect of driving a raft in the spring. He could even bring a fleeting moment of cheer into the house when he stood in the middle of the kitchen floor in Cynthia's way, with a broom locked in the back of a chair, swinging it like an oak-blade and shouting to his imaginary helper on the raft to shove on the pole and keep the headlogs away from the bank. Then, the stiff curve cleared, he would relax while the raft rode safely on the current, and turn to Cynthia and say, "That's the way to take her around a sharp bend."

"I bet you run right into a sand-bar, Abrial."

"All right, I bet you. What'll you bet?"

"Well, how many rafts have you ever run?" Cynthia asked.

"I can take one around any bend in Gannon Creek or the Big Sandy. I learned all about it from Mullens."

Cynthia would carry it on, or she would drop it and be happy for a time in the presence of his energy and his confidence. She lived in the rich world of her imagination, for the most part, above the routine of the house where Julia was not. Soft white fluffs of snow, small hard pellets of ice, the sun and the thaws carried away the colorless days of January. The wind and the rain, the sleet freezing enamel on the pear tree, the sun cracking it and dropping it to the ground, brought in February.

In Dry Creek more and ever more logs were piling up, and the rough men were getting more restive in the loins and irritable with one another in the long isolation from a town with good drink and women.

Cynthia could know little about them, but Sparrel was concerned. He mentioned it to Shellenberger who dismissed it with a word. Sparrel said no more, except to himself. "A body hates to see that kind of life in here but it's just the men he brought up from down the river. I don't reckon a little drinking will hurt any man, except it's encouraging some pretty bad characters to make it. I'd hate like anything to see Gannon Creek get a bad name down below where they come from killings and then more killings if somebody witnesses against them in court. These fellows already give a black name to a lot bigger country than has title to it. I wouldn't want any of that around here even on Shellenberger's land. Maybe it'll be all right and I'm just touchy about things."

Jewels Become Ill; Must Be Sent to a Gem Doctor

Jewels can become ill like people, but, states a writer in Pearson's Weekly, jewels that have lost their lustre or are otherwise "sick" are seldom discarded. They are sent to a gem doctor.

Emeralds, onyx, diamonds and mineral stones in general suffer chiefly from slight surface wounds due to carelessness on the part of their owners. A revivifying is necessary. The doctor fixes the patient in a metal holder called a "dop." He then applies it gently to a rapidly rotating iron wheel or "lap," chared with diamond dust and the stone returns to its former radiance.

No jewels come oftener to the surger than pearls. Lock a pearl away in a safe or deprive it of legitimate exercise, and it becomes sickly looking in no time. But the severest pearl casualties are, curiously enough, caused by diamonds. The Arabs have a legend that the diamond is an angry stone, not to be trusted with other stones, lest it scratch them.

Household Questions

To polish a table that has become spoiled by hot dishes, apply a few drops of essence of peppermint with a clean cloth and rub briskly.

Never allow cold water to run into an aluminum pan while it is hot. If done repeatedly the rapid contraction of metal will cause pan to warp.

A teaspoonful vinegar beaten into boiled frosting when flavoring is added will keep it from being brittle or breaking when cut.

When whisk brooms have become worn, cut them down for sink brushes.

For Russian dressing, mix two tablespoons of chopped dill pickles, two tablespoons chopped ripe olives, two tablespoons chili sauce and one tablespoon of catchup to one-half cup of mayonnaise. Serve on lettuce or vegetable salads.

HOW ARE YOU TODAY
Dr. James W. Barton TALKS ABOUT

Our Bodily Fuel.
MORE and more we are realizing that in comparing the body to a machine or boiler—a man-made piece of metal—we are doing a great injustice to this wonderful work of creation—our body.

Dr. Barton.

It is true that the boiler takes in fuel and manufactures heat and energy but that is as far as its likeness to the body goes. That body of yours must take in fuel (food) enough to keep it warmer than the surrounding air, and must create energy for the workings of the body itself and for the extra work which the huge muscles on our body were meant to do.

But the food we eat must have the raw materials in it to do more than give heat and energy; it must be able to supply materials for all the various kinds of cells of the body—nerve cells, muscle cells, bone cells, liver, kidney, and all the various juices necessary for the proper working of the body processes. And as these cells are wearing out all the time, the food eaten must be able to repair them.

And still another important point is that while all the fuel in a boiler gives heat and energy, the fuel or food taken in by the body in addition to giving heat and energy must be made up of different kinds of fuel or food stuff, each of which has definite use or uses.

Functions of Foods.
Thus proteids (meat, fish, eggs, cereals) not only repair or build up tissues, but create so much extra heat that all the body processes work faster and create that much more energy.

The fat foods (butter, cream, fat meat, egg yolks) also create heat and energy but burn more slowly and what isn't needed may be stored as fat. Fat is also helpful in preventing the proteid foods from burning too rapidly.

The starch foods (bread, potatoes, sugar, pastry) are not builders but great heat and energy producers; in fact starch foods supply two-thirds of the body's energy. The starch foods also help to spare or save the proteid foods from being used up too quickly. In addition to proteins, fats and starches, there are the mineral salts, vitamins (which make foods more active and prevent various ailments) and last but perhaps most important, water. Water must be taken in foods and as water itself if the body is to do its work; every individual cell needs water daily.

As we think of all the different kinds of foods and what they do to or have done to them by the body, we realize how different the body is to a machine.

Overweight and Diabetes.
When insulin was discovered by Drs. Banting and Best, Toronto Canada, and was shown to prevent death from diabetes, it was naturally thought that diabetes would gradually disappear; or at least that the number of cases would rapidly decrease. Now, insulin was a wonderful discovery because previously young people afflicted died in a short time, and adults attacked by diabetes in later life died in a very few years.

With ordinary care with the diet young and old are enabled to live comfortably and safely by the daily use of insulin. As far as our present knowledge is concerned insulin will have to be taken daily the rest of their lives.

But notwithstanding this wonderful discovery the cases of diabetes are not decreasing. This may be due in part to the fact that more people live to middle age than ever before because the percentage of babies that are now saved at birth and during their first year is greater than in former years. Another factor may be that more patients learn that they have diabetes.

However, notwithstanding that more people live to middle-age, and more people report their diabetes, it would appear that there is still an increase in the number of diabetic patients with diabetes.

What is the reason for this increase in number of diabetics notwithstanding the knowledge and use of insulin?

It has been estimated by careful investigation that one in every five—men, women and children—are overweight. It has been proven by a large life insurance company that six in every ten men past forty-five years of age who have been attacked by diabetes are at least 20 per cent overweight. In women the percentage is higher—68 per cent are at least 20 per cent overweight, and 50 per cent are 30 per cent overweight.

WELL, sir, I am pleased to note that Old Lady Adventure is still busy initiating new members in this club of ours. The newest is Distinguished Adventurer Edwin da Costa of New Haven, Conn. And Ed writes: "Many times while reading the stories in your column I have wished I might have some weird experience. Well, by Jove, I found this one."

You see, Ed is back from South America with the tale of just the sort of experience he'd always wished he could have. And now it's his turn in the story-tellers' circle, and he's going to dish it out to us.

Ed went to South America last November. Cold weather doesn't agree with him and he'd heard it sometimes got a little warmish down near the Equator. He landed in Brazil, hung around the coast for a while, and then took a six-week trip up the Amazon with some English explorers. Did Ed get into an adventure with those explorers? He did not. Explorers like quiet, peaceful lives compared with us folks who live in civilized parts of the world. Ed got into that adventure AT A HOTEL.

Hotel Whose Guests Lived in Stucco Huts.

After he left his explorer friends, Ed landed in Pernambuco and put up at the Derby hotel. "The hotel," Ed says, "was located about five miles outside the city limits, in an isolated section. Why they ever built it here, I don't know. Like all the other hotel buildings in mountain sections of Brazil, this one contained only an office, dining room and dance hall. The guests lived in individual stucco huts, called chalets, located away from the main building near the jungle's edge. The space between the main building and the chalets was filled with hibiscus shrubs, swaying palms, and other tropical plants of rare beauty, but at night one felt very lonely, all alone in one's stucco hut, and I was pleased to make acquaintance of another American who was also stopping at the hotel."

The other fellow was a man named Kellmer—a South American representative of a Texas oil concern. He and Ed struck up quite a friendship, and together they spent the long evenings strolling through the gardens, smoking and talking.

One evening at dinner, Kellmer told Ed about the Becho—or animal man. He was a strange creature whom the natives were all talking about—a lone robber who used an animal pelt for a disguise. HE HID IN DARK PLACES TO POUNCE OUT ON HIS VICTIMS. HE CARRIED A BIG REVOLVER AND HE WASN'T AT ALL SLOW ABOUT SHOOTING PEOPLE WHO DIDN'T DO WHAT HE TOLD THEM.

Decided They'd Better Have Revolvers.

It all sounded like a native's tall story to Ed and Kellmer. At first they laughed about it. But as the days went by and each one brought a new tale of some atrocity by the Becho, they began to wonder. And one day when the rumor was going around that the Becho had killed another man, Kellmer bought two revolvers and presented one to Ed.

A few more days rolled by. Then, one night while Ed was sitting in his chalet, he heard a knock on the door—heard Kellmer outside calling, "For Pete's sake, Ed, let me in!" Kellmer stood there, clad in a black-and-white zebra-striped bathrobe, his revolver in his hand. "THE BECHO'S ON THE GROUNDS," HE GASPED. "I HEARD VOICES AND FOOTSTEPS. LET'S TRY TO NAB HIM!"

It Looked Like Taps for Kellmer.

Ed got his own gun. He and Kellmer started a search of the hotel grounds. Says Ed: "The palms swished spookily in the breeze. The night was pitch dark, and before long both of us began to shake like hula dancers. Presently the sound of hoofbeats came to my ears. Then they faded. We secreted ourselves near the great iron gate by the roadside and waited. Suddenly, a shot rang out, shattering the stillness of the night. All at once we found that we were in no mood to be shot at by bandits. Separating we ran like deer, Kellmer for his chalet and I for mine."

Safe inside his hut, Ed nervously lit a cigar and awaited developments. They weren't long in coming. Somewhere outside he heard a loud jabbering in the native Spanish and Portuguese dialect. He looked out of the window and saw a crowd of people and half a dozen horsemen of the Guardia Civil grouped around Kellmer's chalet. He dashed over to see what was wrong and arrived just in time to see the native policeman dragging Kellmer forcibly from his chalet. Kellmer saw Ed. "ED," HE HOWLED, "TELL THESE NITWITS WHO I AM. THEY WANT TO STRING ME UP!"

Ed accosted the captain of the guard. "What do you want with this man?" he asked.

"Senior," replied the captain, "we have caught the Becho." Ed's eyes opened wider. "Why that's not the Becho," he protested. "That man is a guest at the hotel!"

"Becho in a Black and White Skin."

The captain shook his head. "Senior," he said, "the hotel watchman positively saw the Becho at the gate in a black and white skin. He fired a shot in the air, and the Becho ran into this chalet. He is the only man in the place, and if he is not the Becho, where did the Becho disappear to?"

For a moment, Ed was puzzled. Then he remembered Kellmer's black-and-white striped bathrobe and started to laugh. "TLL SHOW YOU THE ANIMAL SKIN THAT WATCHMAN SAW," he told the captain. And he went in and got the robe. "Senior Kellmer was with me," he explained. "We were hunting the Becho too, when the watchman saw him and took the bathrobe for an animal skin."

Kellmer was released then, and the police rode away with as much pomp and dignity as they could muster. "And the next day," says Ed, "I saw Kellmer coaxing a bonfire near his chalet and asked him what he was doing. He said, 'I'm burning that bathrobe—that's all.'"

Lights at Sea

At sea at night a red light can be recognized as a red light as far as it can be seen, which is usually from three to four times farther than a green light appears green. On the other hand, a green light can be seen, although its color cannot be distinguished, many times farther than a red light.—Collier's Weekly.

Lesson for October 25

CHRISTIANITY AS LOVE

LESSON TEXT—Acts 18:1-4; I Corinthians 13.

GOLDEN TEXT—And now abideth faith, hope, charity (love), these three; but the greatest of these is charity (love). I Cor. 13:13.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Why Paul Was Not Afraid.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Courage in the Night. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Christian Love Is and Does. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Love, the Law of Life.

By way of Athens the apostle Paul and his co-workers came to Corinth, one of the great commercial and social centers of Greece. It was a city known for its magnificent architecture and its patronage of the fine arts, but even more widely known for its abandonment to vice and wickedness. Here Paul, the apostle of faith, demonstrated that his faith was rooted in love, and it was to the Christians who were dwelling in this infamous spot of corruption that he addressed his supremely pure and beautiful discourse on love.

I. Love Is a Fact, Not a Theory (Acts 18:1-4).

The man whom we now recognize as perhaps the greatest preacher and teacher of Christian truth who ever followed the Lord Jesus Christ "came to Corinth." That great and busy city in all probability knew nothing of his arrival and cared nothing for his message. No one met the distinguished messenger of God and received him into a home of comfort and honor.

But God had not forgotten him. For we read that Paul "found a certain Jew"—a convert to Christ, and his noble wife, and "abode with him." Persecution had sent Aquila to Corinth, and he was there for Paul to find.

And the humility of loving service expresses itself further in the fact that the one who was to bring Corinth the glorious message of the gospel did so at his own cost. He labored with his hands at the trade which he, as every Jewish boy, had been taught by his father. Christianity does not ask, "What will ye give me?" but "How much can I give?"

In his first letter to the church which grew up at Corinth we find the inexhaustibly rich chapter in which Paul so fittingly describes true Christian love. It is impossible in any short discussion of this passage to make a complete study of it, but we note

II. Four Truths About Love (I Cor. 13:1-13).

1. Love is superior to the other graces (vv. 1-3).

Life has many excellent gifts and men seek after them. How do they compare with love? Glowing eloquence, the far-seeing eye of the prophet, mountain-moving faith, self-sacrifice—without love they all lose their worth; in fact they are nothing. All the attainments of men apart from Christ are vain and empty.

2. Love is necessary to the other graces (vv. 4-7).

There is a sense in which love is not so much a grace in itself as the underlying and motivating power, which shows in every fine and noble expression of Christian character. Study these verses to see how patiently and unselfishly love works.

3. Love is permanent; other graces fail (vv. 8-12).

Some gifts will cease, for there will no longer be any need for them. They are temporary in their value or simply a means to an end. But love—it began with God in eternity and will go on with him through eternity. Why then do we labor and seek after these other graces so diligently and neglect the one grace which is above them all, for

4. Love is supreme (v. 13).

Even over those other graces which with love will abide, namely, faith and hope, love stands supreme. It is the fundamental of all fundamentals. Without it all else is empty and futile. And let us remember, this is not pious theory; it is fact and to be translated into daily life.

Hardships

Wounds and hardships provoke our courage, and when our fortunes are at the lowest, our wits and minds are commonly at the best.—Charron.

Common Sense

Common sense in one view is the most uncommon sense. While it is extremely rare in possession, the recognition of it is universal. All men feel it, though few men have it.—H. N. Hudson.

An Odious Quality

Conceit is the most contemptible and one of the most odious qualities in the world. It is vanity driven from all other shifts, and forced to appeal to itself for admiration.—Hazlitt.

School Notes

Proposed Amendments Three and Four

While speaking before the general assembly of the Michigan Education Association in Saginaw, Monday morning, Dr. Eugene B. Elliott, Michigan State Superintendent of Public Instruction, said that it appeared to him that the proposed amendments to the state constitution become worse in their natural order. He stated that it seemed to him that one was a fair proposal, two was a poor proposal, three was a very poor proposal, and that four was the most radical proposition ever proposed in any state at any time. He is much in opposition to both amendments three and four.
State Treasurer Theodore I. Fry has reiterated his opposition to any attempt to tamper with the sales tax, voicing a belief that the exemption of certain articles might result in the invalidation of the entire act. He contends that the proposed reduction to the sales tax would remove an amount of revenue greater than the annual appropriation for relief work; four times the amount distributed annually for old age pensions, and nearly half the sum that now goes to school aid.

Governor Fitzgerald has avoided direct expression on the proposals, but in discussing his hope for a building program to relieve crowded conditions in state mental institutions he said recently: "This necessity will cost money, it is imperilled every time a proposal is pushed to lower revenues from the state sales tax. Local municipalities want more school aid, additional relief money, but the voters also want the sales tax lowered. To have more money and less taxation is impossible."

High School

About twenty dollars was cleared from the harvest auction which was held last Friday night for the benefit of the Junior class. session, resolved to pay a $2.00 bounty for stray dogs and coyotes in order to cut down on expenditures for such claims, but the plan had to be abandoned after about three months because it did not prove practical.
A resolution was passed empowering and authorizing the supervisor of AuSable township to spread a special tax on the property within the corporation limits of the former city of AuSable, amounting to $1613.31, over a period of four years for the purpose of collecting a charge back to that township. This charge back resulted about eighteen years ago when land owned by the state in the city of AuSable had been assessed and taxes levied thereon.
The board failed to finish its work by Friday night and recessed until Monday of next week. Completion of the budget for the ensuing year remains, and this matter will be taken care of at that time.

Two Kinds of Vampire

The Greeks believe that there are two kinds of vampire—one dead, but retaining a sinister half-life by preying on the blood of the living; and the other still alive. Thus, we are told that the vampires of Thessaly and Epirus are "living men mastered by a kind of somnambulism, who, seized by a thirst for blood, go forth at night from their shepherds' huts, and scour the country, biting and tearing all that they meet, both man and beast." According to another authority, this type of vampire is particularly active when the moon is at its full.
