Friends Help Mr. Buch Observe 85th Birthday

Last Tuesday evening about 25 relatives and friends gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Emil Buch to help him celebrate his 85th birthday. A birthday dinner was served and everyone enjoyed the occasion.

Mr. Buch, one of Tawas City's pioneer businessmen, the senior partner of Emil H. Buch & Sons, operators of a grocery and meat market in this city, and founder of the business, Mr. Buch came here in September of 1882, and for some time operated a butcher shop for A. G. Van Wey, who was the well known operator of the Bayside Hotel. Later he was employed by John Graham who had a grocery and meat business at the time in what is now known as the Moeller block. Following this he became an employee of John Weckerly, and in 1890 he purchased the Weckerly market. A few years later a new building was erected. This building is now occupied by the Campbell grocery. He remained there until 1912 when he moved his business to Lake street. This building burned during the big fire of 1919, and then the present building was erected on its site.

In recalling the old days, Mr. Buch said, "When I came to Tawas City, the streets were paved with saw dust and bark. Now we have fine cement and tarvia streets." Mr. Buch's many friends throughout the county extend their congratulations.

To File Briefs in Lazaar Damage Suit

Claiming that a highway drainage ditch across his land which had been allowed to become clogged with debris, and because of this water from the highway had spread out over his fields, destroying his crops, Joseph Lazar of Wilber township sued the County Road Commission for damages. The suit came to trial last Thursday in the Isosco county circuit court before Judge George W. DesJardins of Lapeer.

The ditch in question was dug by the state when old U.S. 23 was constructed through Wilber township in 1921. After U.S. 23 had been re-routed along the shore of Saginaw bay, some years later, the old road was turned back to the County Road Commission. Mr. Lazar claims the state agreed to maintain the ditch and when the county accepted the road it accepted this responsibility.

Last Thursday evidence was heard and Judge DesJardins viewed the land in question and the situation of the ditch. The attorneys were ordered to file briefs. Attorney George Sternberg is representing Mr. Lazar and prosecuting Attorney Herbert Hertzler, the road commission.

New Activity Shown In Isosco Oil Leasing

During the past month considerable activity has been indicated by the leasing of land in Isosco county for oil exploration. A number of test wells have been drilled in the county during past years, but those who know say that this section will be played aggressively by wildcaters this fall. Spudding in for rock formation tests is now in progress in Reno township.

Several hundred acres of state owned land has been leased and private leasing has been very active, with the county pretty well checker-boarded. This new interest in oil leasing extends across the whole northern part of the lower peninsula.

Among the producers leasing Isosco county lands, are: Sun Oil Co., Gulf Oil Co., Standard Oil Co. of Ohio, Sohio of Mt. Pleasant and several others are now entering the field.

Tests for oil made in Isosco county during past years have not been encouraging, but indications are now, with war shortages of oil on, that the county will be thoroughly explored, and if we have that desirable natural resource, it will be found. Oil is where you find it, and Isosco county may produce a rich field.

TAWAS CITY MAN GIVEN MERIT MEDAL

Willard L. Wright, aviation radioman second class, USN, Tawas City, was recently presented the Gold Star in lieu of the Second Air Medal "for meritorious achievement while participating in aerial flight as radioman-gunner attached to Scouting Squadron Three in combat with enemy Japanese forces in the Solomon Island area."

The citation continues: "Expertly maintaining radio equipment in operating condition despite great difficulties, Wright, while on numerous search missions, was alert in detecting hostile ships and planes and reliable in transmitting contact reports to his base."

"During these flights, he courageously remained at his gun position, and, by the deadly blasts from his weapons, repulsed determined enemy aircraft attacks. When it became necessary to minimize the effect of intense and dangerous anti-aircraft fire, Wright coolly and skillfully guided his pilot during retirement from eight dive-bombing attacks on Japanese warships, thereby contributing immeasurably to the safety of his plane and comrades."

The citation was signed by Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox for the President.

Wright previously received the Air Medal for meritorious achievement in aerial combat against enemy Japanese forces during the Solomon Islands campaign August 24, 1942.

BOY DROWNS AT VAN ETTAN LAKE FRIDAY

Becomes Tired, Edward G. Freund Unable to Reach Shore

Van Ettan Lake claimed its first victim of the season Friday night when Edward G. Freund, 16, was unable to reach shore and was drowned.

Freund was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Guido Freund of Grand Rapids. His father is employed at the Oscoda Air Base.

With his brother, Eugene and sister, Joan, and a neighbor girl, Vanetta Goddard, Edwin had set out to swim to an island in the lake, a distance of some 300 yards from shore, shortly after 8:00 o'clock.

After reaching nearly the halfway mark to the island, the older boy became tired and they all started back. Before the group could reach shallow water Edwin disappeared beneath the surface.

The other children were able to reach shore safely but were unable to save him.

Coroner E. D. Jacques, Trooper Joseph Svoke and Sheriff John Moran investigated the drowning. The body was brought to the Jacques funeral and Sunday it was taken to Grand Rapids.

Christmas Overseas Gifts Must be Sent Soon

The Christmas shopping season is here—even though the weather is still warm.

Mailing of gifts for the Army and Navy personnel overseas must begin by September 15, if many of the men and women in our armed services are not to be disappointed; and September is only a short distance away.

Christmas gifts may be mailed by parcel post to Army men and women overseas only between September 15 and October 15. After the latter date, such parcels may not be mailed unless a written request from the soldier for the article is presented with each parcel. No soldier should have to ask for a Christmas gift; so gifts must be mailed on time. The Navy also urges that gifts be mailed between September 15 and October 15.

Those who have relatives or friends in the service should remember that we have fighting men in Alaska, Greenland, Iceland, England, Sicily, far-separated regions of Africa, the Near Eastern countries, Australia, many of the South Pacific islands India, China, South America and other areas. The only way to insure against disappointment for the fighting man is to buy at once and mail early—mail your gifts as soon as possible after the September 15 starting date.

The parcel must not exceed five pounds, and must not be more than 15 inches in length or 36 inches in length and girth combined. It should be marked "Christmas parcel" so that it may be given special attention to assure its arrival before December 25.

Not more than one parcel may be mailed in any one week to the same member of the armed forces by or in behalf of the same mailer.

Victory!!!

CARIBBEAN CONSPIRACY

By BRENDA CONRAD

THE STORY SO FAR: Anne Heywood, beautiful daughter of a wealthy New York newspaper publisher, goes to Puerto Rico on an assignment for her father's paper. Also on the island are Pete Wilcox, a reporter on her father's paper, now a U. S. Army intelligence officer; Miguel Valera, a Puerto Rican educated in the United States whose orders to report to an army camp were abruptly cancelled; Richard Taussig, an engineer whose identity as a German agent is suspected but not yet proved; and Russell Porter, a young American engineer, and his wife, Sue. Pete is suspicious of Miguel Valera, but when they quarrel over him, Anne thinks it is because Pete is jealous of her friendship with Valera.

CHAPTER X

He sat completely stunned as she got up and made her way through the crowded tables out onto the street. No one had more than glanced up, as they would naturally glance up at hair like that in a Latin country. In a corner of his mind Pete was aware that she was like that. If she had to make a scene in public, nobody would be aware of it. There was something in breeding.

Then suddenly he found himself getting very angry. If that was all the sense she had, to hell with her. He picked up his fork and took a mouthful of the tender aromatic dish in front of him. It struck in his throat like a lump of wet dough, and he had to struggle to get it down. He had to get out of there, he thought, and go find her. She wasn't responsible for what she'd been saying—she probably didn't even know what she'd been telling him. Anyway, it wasn't safe for her to be out on the streets in the dark. Poverty and squalor and unrest did strange things to even innately kind and gentle people.

He signalled the waiter, paid the bill and got out as unobtrusively as he could. Not until he was on the sidewalk did he think of the man who had been watching them at the end of the bar. He looked back. Taussig was gone. He wasn't at any of the tables.

Some kind of deeply rooted instinct stirred inside Pete. He turned and hurried up to his parked car. The man watching it got up from the running board and opened the door.

"Did you see the young lady?" Pete asked, hoping to God the man understood English.

"La señorita rubia?" he asked.

Pete nodded. The man smiled and pointed up the street. Then he shrugged. She had gone up the street—that was all he knew. Pete made that much out of his Spanish. Also that she was beautiful. "Ai bonita" kept going round and round in his mind as he drove through the narrow streets and dimly lighted alleys. A couple of soldiers with the armband of the Military Police had seen her crossing Allen Street, but the two standing on the corner of Brau Street had not seen her.

"Maybe she took a taxi, sir," one of them suggested helpfully.

Pete nodded. Of course it was what she would do, he told himself. Nevertheless he drove on around the Plaza again. She was probably out at the Granada by this time. She wasn't a child. She might even have gone back to the restaurant. He drove down the hill again. The man on the curb watching the cars shook his head. She hadn't come that way.

Pete turned left at the next corner and started out toward the Granada.

Anne went blindly up the street. It was true, she thought—all of it was true. But not what she'd been saying to Pete Wilcox.

Miguel Valera was a Puerto Rican. That meant that he was a citizen of the United States. And whatever his devotion to his father, in times like these, with his country putting everything it had into defense, if he wasn't for it he was against it. They had cancelled his Army orders, and they wouldn't have done that without reasons. They were probably watching him, furthermore, and Pete Wilcox was probably one of those doing it. That was why he was at the meeting the night before.

She stopped short, suddenly aware that the street was almost dark, empty except for a few people sitting in unlighted doorways, and that she had no idea where she was.

"They must think I'm crazy," Anne thought. She started walking again, listening to the hollow echo of her heels on the pavement. The people she passed in the doorways stopped talking as she went by. All movement or sound seemed to be centered in herself. If she put her hand out she knew she could touch the rich pregnant silence all about her. She came to a corner, looked along the street with no sense of familiarity, crossed over and went up a hill toward the light on the next intersection. It was noisier now. She hesitated, looked back, and stopped abruptly.

A man was going along the street she'd just crossed. His white trouser legs flapped around his ankles as he walked. It was Taussig, and he was going along quickly, in the street, looking first to one side, then to the other, as if he was afraid of something that might spring out of the dark opened doorways.

For an instant a chill finger touched her heart. She stepped back into the shadow of a shop door and waited. He hadn't seen her. He couldn't see that far anyway, she realized. The significance of his thick-lensed glasses hadn't fully occurred to her until she saw him peer myopically into the mirror behind the bar before he turned and spoke to her. She knew now that he hadn't seen her from the pier, or up the hill in front of the Fortaleza. It was an armor of invisibility that gave her a quick impulsive courage, or rather a foolhardiness verging on sheer madness.

Even then she hesitated. The phosphorescent glow of the rising moon softened the solid planes of the ancient Spanish facades pressing close against the cramped sidewalks, and shimmered, darkly liquid, on the glazed cobblestones. The street was empty, and yet she had an eerie sense that it was not empty—a sense of the shadowy substance of life rhythmically pulsating, of unheard voices and watching eyes and unseen feet echoing softly through the night. From some strident periphery diminishing waves of noise and color beat in until only their muted overtones seeped through into the narrow street. It was the first time Anne had had the feeling that San Juan was a completely foreign city, as foreign as Paris or Marseilles or Tunis. All the veneer that made it part of the New World was gone just then . . . all except the disappearing figure of Mr. Richard

The cat came silently out from the dark recesses . . .

Taussig at the intersection below her, and the cigarette ash plastered in the window in front of her.

She crossed the road, went down back the way she'd come, turned the corner and slipped into the shadowed rectangle cast by buildings against the rising moon. Mr. Taussig was going along on the sidewalk now, almost at the end of the block, looking up at the doorways. As Anne started to go farther along, he turned and came back. She stepped deeper into the shadow. A man came around the corner, looked at her and walked on, looking back twice before he turned into a doorway. Anne stepped back still more, with a vague feeling that she might be running a serious risk, and yet a definite feeling that she couldn't go . . . not until she'd at least seen where Taussig was going.

He had stopped and gone back again. Anne saw him look at a shuttered balcony over an arched entrance that must have been for a carriage or coach in the old days. Then he was gone almost at once, and she saw the dark oblong close behind him. The man who had passed her came out on the sidewalk again. He was standing there, looking at her. She realized with a little shock that in spite of everything Mr. Taussig's presence in the street had been an unconscious protection. A sudden panic of terror gripped her, constricting her throat, making her body taut and as cold as ice. The eerie spell of the ancient streets was gone, an acute sense of physical danger had taken its place. She had an almost overwhelming impulse to turn and run as fast as she could, and controlled it sharply. It was the most dangerous thing she could do. She clenched her fists tightly to make her hands stop trembling, and forced herself to move quietly and at a reasonable pace toward the corner. Perhaps if she crossed the street out of the shadows . . . She took a step toward the curb and stopped.

A man she hadn't noticed before was moving along the other side of the street, going quickly in the direction Taussig had gone. He had come out of no door she'd seen or heard open. But it wasn't that so much as a vague sense of familiarity . . . She caught her breath sharply and moved back into the shadow again, all her terror forgotten, aware only of a sudden nauseating sinking of her heart. It was Miguel. He was going to the same place that Taussig had gone to. She knew that even before he stopped at the arched entrance.

She went forward a little, hesitating, aware that the impulse she'd had to follow Mr. Taussig had not come in relation to Miguel. She didn't want to know any more now—all she wanted to do was get away as quickly as she could. She took two more unsteady steps, and became aware then, with a shock of abject fright, that the man who'd been watching her was beside her, saying something, she didn't know what. All she knew was that the shadows were suddenly alive and horrible . . . and then she was running, breathless, her heart pounding, running toward Miguel, into what it didn't matter, so terrified that she could not hear her own footsteps or those behind her, overtaking her before she could reach the door . . . and Miguel, and safety. She put her hand out, fumbling for the knob. There was none—nothing but a blank painted wall, a narrow rectangle set in one of the leaves. It gave as she pushed against it, and she stumbled in and thrust it to behind her, pressing the weight of her body against it.

She closed her eyes, listening desperately. There was no sound, nothing, either inside or out . . . only the pounding of her heart in her ears. She opened her eyes and looked ahead of her. The faint silver light from the sky sifted down into a shadowy inner courtyard beyond the dark tunnel of the archway. The only sign of life was a cat walking slowly across the cobble yard, its eyes like red coals as it passed into the dark. She could see another arched passage on the other side of the court, with an iron grille in front of it. Perhaps the two men had gone through there. She hesitated, not daring to go forward, not knowing.

A faint fresh odor of cigar smoke seeped through the heavy musty dankness of the tunnel. Her heart skipped a beat. There was no mistaking it . . . and they were there, then. Instantly everything changed again. She took a step forward, her hand touching the cool, smooth patina of the stone wall, and crept along beside it, slowly and soundlessly, until she got almost to the end. She could see the stone stairway leading up to the first-floor gallery. The cat came silently out from the dark recesses and went up the steps. The fragrance of the cigar smoke was plainer now, but as far as Anne could see there was no light anywhere.

Her body went suddenly tense as she heard a sound somewhere above her as if somebody had moved a chair across the floor. She slipped to the other side of the tunnel, measured the distance between her and the stone stairway, and crept silently along the wall under the shadow of the overhanging eaves. She put her foot out gingerly to be sure. The cobbles under the steps were smooth and solid. She took another step forward and put out her hand . . . and for an instant everything reeled horribly. Her hand touched something soft and alive, and when she tried desperately to tear it away it was caught.

"Miguel!" She tried to scream, but her voice was strangled in her paralyzed throat.

"Anne! Anne! It is Miguel!"

She didn't know how long it was before the sound got through to her. All she knew was that she'd stopped struggling, and that he was holding her tightly against him for a moment, before he released her. She leaned back against the cold stone wall, trembling convulsively, trying to keep from being sick. She couldn't see him, but she could feel his body close to hers, and his hand holding her wrist, steadying her.

"Sssh!" he whispered. Then he said between his teeth, "That damned cat."

It was against her ankles, purring softly. She was numbly aware of it, and of its eyes like tiny burning opals shinning up at her. Miguel's grip on her wrist relaxed; his hand slipped down, taking hers, holding it tightly.

"Be quiet." His voice was hardly a breath against her hair. "They're coming."

Anne turned her head in the dark. A little gasp broke from her throat as the meaning of it came to her in a blinding flash of understanding. Miguel was watching them too. Watching Taussig. That's what he had been doing in his room.

She put her hand up to her cheek. It was wet, the tears pouring out of her eyes and running down her cheeks.

"Sssh!" Miguel whispered gently.

Suddenly Miguel's fingers contracted sharply on hers. They were coming now. She held her breath and waited. A door opened, there was the sound of footsteps on the wood floor of the gallery, and of quiet voices. They were coming down the stairs, their heels grating on the worn stone.

Slack Suit With Matching Skirt Tunes to All-Occasion Wear

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

IN ASSEMBLING your fall wardrobe it's wise to plan ahead. Don't wait until your buying becomes a necessity. For downright practicality plus the promise it carries of being smartly costumed for any daytime occasion, women of keen fashion judgment are coming to regard as a "best buy" the smart slacks suit that includes a matching skirt interchangeable with the trousers. Here's why! The slacks and jacket are good for sports and general casual daytime wear. The jacket worn with the matching skirt becomes a suit of style distinction, correct for both town and country wear.

So there you are, sports outfit, and smart tailored suit, all for the price of one. Best of all, they are color-matched in perfect taste. There's nothing "slack" about slacks this season. Smart as a whip, with lines as clean as a whistle, the newer slacks costumes are designed to make you as pretty and attractive as you are comfortable, while you work and while you play.

Expert tailoring and fine sturdy fabrics with lots of color interest and versatile textures, with increased accent on chic and flattery of line, make the new styles important members of the duration wardrobe. Gone are the floppy effects of earlier seasons, giving place to trim tapered lines, cuffless trousers and snugly fitted waistbands.

It is easy to see why slacks have come to be recognized as important all-year-round stars that tune to many occasion wear. Styled like the smartest of knit frocks, they sponsor the new vogue for jacket-type tops matching or harmonizing with the slim-lined slacks or the interchangeable skirt. Glamorous color combinations such as chartreuse and fuchsia, purple and canary, olive and maize are used for striking effect. Canary yellow sleeves, for instance, are smart accent to a jerkin jacket and slacks in royal purple spun rayon hop sacking. Contrasting shoulder yokes, trouser stripes and jacket fronts add fashion interest. Jackets are generally brief and well fitted. You'll see them in the new weskit cut as illustrated, also in the bolero mood or in smoothly cut hip-length versions.

Fine spun-rayon basket weave in a soft shade of deep green is beautifully tailored on trim but feminine lines for the attractive slacks suit with interchangeable skirt here illustrated. To the right the slim-cut slacks is worn with the very new weskit-type fitted jacket with three-quarter sleeves and distinctive convertible front button closing.

Designed to be interchanged with the deep green slacks is the graceful trouser-pleated skirt in matching spun-rayon basket weave as shown to the left in the group. Worn as you here see with the same brief weskit jacket, it makes a charming daytime costume that is correct for both town and country wear. The slacks teamed with a long-sleeved shirt of snowy rayon crepe, make a very flattering feminine costume.

Here's a fashion tip you'll appreciate. The tailored suit in all black is big news for fall. Buy a three-way slacks outfit, jacket, slacks and an interchangeable matching skirt, tailored of a handsome all-black wool-type rayon weave. The jacket worn with the skirt gives you an up-to-the-minute black suit, while the slacks worn with bright blouses, especially the vivid print types (with gay gypsy sash if you like) offer endless possibilities for color glamour. You'll be delighted with the slacks suits available in handsome wool-type rayon weaves designed for year-round wear. These wool-type rayons are given the same name as the wool fabrics, since they are woven the same, for example, rayon covets, twills, chevrets, napped effects, broadcloths and so on.

Denim 'K. P.' Aprons

You can depend on this clever kitchen-police apron serving nobly on the home front. This blue cotton denim creation turned out by a New York designer is perfect for gardening and "man-of-the-house" work. The deep "K.P." pocket for holding tools makes work easy. See the buttons on the yoke top and the buttonholes on the pockets? The trick is you can button the pocket up to the square neckline and carry on with your chores in the kitchen, in the laundry, or tidying up about the house.

Exotic Embroidery Glamorizes Hats

The new fall dress-hat fashions are a revelation of artistry and handcraft that reflects Mexican, Russian, Chinese and South American influence in colors, design and embroidery technique. For instance, a big black felt sailor has a huge crimson rose embroidered on its brim in true Mexican manner. Worn with a black curtain veil, the effect is gorgeous. A tореador hat in black felt is richly embroidered and border-stitched in riotous colors. It ties under the chin with cords like the bullfighters' hats. A type hat that lures the young is the sectioned black velvet calot that is trimmed with multi-color jewelled sequins. Coolie hats give excellent opportunity for surface applique and embroidery. Chic as a suit hat is the felt homburg, the high crown of which is spaced with tiny dangling tassels.

Black Wool or Rayon Frocks Are Accented With Satin

Satin-accented black wool or rayon-weave frocks styled with utmost simplicity give the answer to what's what for immediate wear. The dress of the moment has exquisitely molded slim lines offset by soft bows of black satin tied here and there with perhaps a satin peplum or flaring satin pockets. It is typically the dress of "a lady." To complete the picture milliners are making fetching little wearable hats of satin with which they team smart satin gloves together with bags to match. The newest dinner gowns, sleek and suave in lines are also of satin.

Soybeans Benefit By Crop Rotation

Beans Use Chemicals Remaining in Soil

Since soybeans have assumed such an important place in the family of war crops, the condition of the soil on which they are produced is a matter of importance to the farmer.

George H. Enfield, of the agronomy department of Purdue university pointed out that while soybeans need a plentiful ration of plant foods in order to produce maximum yields for Uncle Sam's war requirements, their diet can be adequately filled by "eating at the second table" if the soil's fertility level is high.

"Eating at the second table," Mr. Enfield explained, "means that soybeans respond to the hold-over fertility placed in the soil by previous crops in the rotation. Long-time fertility tests have demonstrated repeatedly that yields have increased, on the average, from 3.2 to 10.6 bushels per acre because of this sound practice."

In view of the essential value of soybean products to agriculture and war industries, Mr. Enfield said, the fertility level of the soil that produces the crop is of prime importance. "Every farmer has noticed that beans will produce larger yields on fertile than on infertile soils," he added.

In three-year soybean growing tests on fertile land at the Purdue soils and crops farm, he said, increase from applying fertilizer with an attachment to a corn planter for row-seeded beans was about 70 per cent greater than when the same treatment was applied with the wheat drill and the beans seeded solid.

"The tests revealed that the unfertilized crop averaged 27.8 bushels of soybeans per acre," Mr. Enfield explained. "Applying 100 pounds of 0-20-20 with the fertilizer attachment to the corn planter at seeding time increased the yield 3.3 bushels per acre."

Advantages of "plow-down" methods of fertilization were likewise described by Mr. Enfield. "In dry seasons," he said, "if the fertilizer is placed near the surface it is in dry soil and out of the reach of feeding roots. However, if the fertilizer is placed deeper, the roots can get it out of the moist soil. In wet seasons, fertilizer placed near the surface encourages weed growth. Results from one experiment showed that the weed competition was so severe where 666 pounds of 0-12-12 analysis was applied to the surface of the soil and disced in, that the yield was decreased 1.6 bushels per acre. The same treatment plowed under greatly increased the yield."

Mr. Enfield declared that soybeans apparently are very sensitive to potash deficiency. The results of demonstrations showed that potash-starved soybeans did not mature naturally. The leaves would start to die before the beans were completely filled and the test weight was lowered. In all cases of potash-starvation the percentage of damaged beans was unusually high.

Pressure-cooker canning is safer than is the hot water bath method because it is the only method whereby the heat-resistant spores that cause canned foods to spoil can be killed. These spores are found in meat, fish, and poultry, and in all vegetables except tomatoes, pimientos, peppers and rhubarb.

★ IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT ★

★ FROM YOUR PULPWOOD COMMITTEE

THIS Committee is starting a drive to cut more pulpwood trees. The shortage is serious... and pulpwood is urgently needed for everything from blood plasma containers to parachutes... from shell cases to airplane parts... from gas mask filters to explosives.

Our Government is asking every able-bodied woodcutter and farmer to pledge 3 extra work days this year (at regular pay) to cut pulpwood... 2,500,000 extra cords are needed quickly.

This is a challenge to everyone of us in this community. We must not let our boys down. 3 EXTRA days' work are little to ask when our boys are out there giving their lives for their country.

Enlist today in this drive. Wear the button that shows you are in this fight. This is one way this community can help win this war.

Come to Committee headquarters or get in touch with any of these men. And do it quickly.

SPeAKING of SPORTS

By Bob McShane
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
ISOLATIONIST CUPID
The nuptial rumor that the Chicago Tribune's Col. Robert R. McCormick was going to wed Mrs. Helen Essary, widow of the Baltimore Sun correspondent, was told to the President recently by one of his aides.

Both Colonel McCormick and Mrs. Essary are ardent isolationists and vigorous critics of the administration. In fact the colonel is considered the leading isolationist of the Midwest, if not the nation, while the widow Essary, writing in the Washington Times-Herald, is probably the leading lady isolationist in the nation's capital.

So the President received word of this isolationist romance with considerable interest.

"I wonder," he mused, "what their progeny will be like."

Note—Later, Mrs. Essary heard about the President's remark and telephoned one of the White House aides to find out precisely what had been said. She did not comment as to whether the rumor of matrimony were true or untrue, but she showed great feminine curiosity regarding the President's comment.

DAY VS. NIGHT BOMBING

When Churchill and Roosevelt were in Casablanca, the British prime minister had a friendly argument with U. S. air generals regarding the feasibility of daylight bombing. Churchill was against it, arguing that the British system of night bombing was much safer, did more damage to the enemy.

However, latest figures just received by the war department show that Gen. Ira Eaker was right in sticking to day bombing. These figures show that U. S. bombers have knocked out Nazi fighter planes at a rate ten times greater than the British.

Here are the figures: In July U. S. airmen destroyed 500 Axis planes, lost 108 bombers of their own. In other words we knocked out five times as many planes as we lost.

In the same months, the British knocked out 129 enemy planes, but lost 253 of their own. In other words, the British lost two planes for every one they knocked out.

The British were operating at night when they could not see the enemy so well, but also when the enemy could not see them. American planes, operating in the daylight, could better concentrate on enemy fighter planes, but also were better targets for the enemy.

INFLATION REMEDY

The President has a non-inflationary solution to organized labor's demands for wage increases to meet higher living costs: namely, non-negotiable bonds, payable after the war.

Roosevelt revealed this secret during a confidential talk with R. J. Thomas, president of the United Auto Workers union, on price roll-backs, strikes and the War Labor board's Little Steel formula. Here is the summary of his views:

Prices. Roosevelt stated that he would make a vigorous attempt to roll back prices. He told Thomas that he would prefer that congress provide the money, but that, failing this, he would use either RFC or Commodity Credit corporation funds to restore the following food prices to their September, 1942, normal: Meat, canned goods, potatoes, milk and milk products.

It would be too difficult, the President said, to attempt a rollback of clothing and personal services. He pointed out that rents already have been rolled back to March, 1941.

Little Steel Formula. Roosevelt frankly stated that he was not enthusiastic about any arbitrary ceiling on wages—15 per cent above those prevailing in January, 1941. However, he considered the Little Steel formula the best brake on wage inflation so far proposed.

Instead, the President suggested that war workers would be much better off, and that the present wage stalemate between labor unions and the WLB could be broken, if workmen agreed to accept non-negotiable bonds, payable after the war, in lieu of wage increases.

CAPITAL CHAFF

Manhattan Banker Jimmy Warburg was not only the mysterious "John Durfee," spanked by the President for calling Victor Emmanuel the "moronic little king," but he also was the fictitious "Wallace Herrick." Warburg has so dominated OWI's foreign broadcasts that some people call it the "Office of Warburg Information."

INSIDE EUROPE

Swiss Minister Charles Bruggmann, brother-in-law of Henry Wallace, is probably the only man in the United States who has recently passed through Germany.

He not only visited Germany, but also France and Spain. In France he found the people downcast and downhearted. German soldiers on the streets of Paris went out of their way to be polite to the French people, even got off the sidewalks if necessary in deference to a Frenchman.

IN HIS rough dismissal of Bucky Harris as manager of the Philadelphia Phillies, William D. Cox, club president, showed a remarkable lack of common decency.

That fact was called rather forcibly to Cox's attention when the Philadelphia players issued an ultimatum which forced the president to apologize. It had been officially announced that the ouster followed action of the club's board of directors. But inasmuch as Harris was a member of the board it was obvious that the move was taken on a quorum basis. Harris could not be expected to take part in his own dismissal.

Bucky Harris

The disagreement between Cox and Harris was a long time growing. Cox was a newcomer to the baseball world. The early success of the Phillies spoiled him. They gave him a false slant on his material and caused him to raise his financial hopes beyond all reason. He couldn't understand it when the team slumped and the crowds fell off.

When Cox saw his club take six straight toward the end of May and then draw 37,176 at a Sunday double header with the Pirates, it gave him a too-optimistic feeling about the whole thing.

Then the Phillies lost six in a row and 10 out of 13. Newcomer Cox was distinctly unhappy.

All during the time the Phils were playing over their heads, Harris, ever a realist, didn't permit himself to believe his club was going far beyond fifth place. He attempted to tell Cox that he didn't have enough good ball players. Cox couldn't believe that.

One of baseball's most able observers, Shirley Povich of the Washington Post, said in a recent column that Cox was far too devoted to rah-rah tactics. In part, Povich said:

"Harris discovered that Cox was calling in players for inspirational pep talks and invaded the dressing room at will. Cox once wanted to deliver a lecture on the bench, but Harris talked him out of it. Cox wasn't doing the team or Harris any good by sitting in a box seat and hurling insults at the umpires, either. The man meant well, but it was no way to run a ball team."

"Before the season started, Cox got some grandiose ideas about his Phillies. He thought about calling them the 'Commandos,' a name that would have made the perennial last-place club even more ridiculous. He told Harris that he wanted Commando training for the players in the spring along with their hitting and fielding practice. Harris didn't like it."

Critics Answered

Harris has a reputation for being one of the most patient managers baseball has ever known. When the Phillies chose to come to the support of Harris in his war with Cox he answered the critics who failed or refused to understand why baseball's wise men regard Bucky as a good manager. They knew he wasn't getting a fair shake.

Fred Fitzsimmons, the former Brooklyn pitcher named to manage the Phils, is a well liked player, but his ability as a manager is unknown. Harris proved his capabilities during 19 years of managing big-league teams.

Fitzsimmons has two heart-breaking jobs ahead of him. He must try to suit Cox, who has proved his inexperience, and he must make something out of the Philadelphia club. Either job requires the patience of a Job and the wisdom of a Solomon.

For a while the Phillies were giving more than they were able to and time found them out. They got by on hustle and near-desperation. That wore off and they were no longer able to tear themselves to pieces. Cox couldn't realize that. He was wearing rose-colored glasses and believed there were no rough spots or detours on the road to success. Harris realized—all too well—that the club had definite limitations. He knew the day of miracles had passed.

Cox, a Johnny-come-lately, allowed himself to be stampeded into ill-advised action. Only time—and a reasonable amount of common sense—can remedy the situation. Time, in his case, is not the important factor.

SPORTS SHORTS

Bill McKechnie of Cincinnati has used only six starting pitchers this season.

No player succeeded in hitting home runs in all eight National league parks last year.

Frank Strafacci, one of the nation's leading amateur golfers, now on duty in Australia, recently bought a racehorse for $65.

Gunder Hagg, famed Swedish runner, will return to the United States after the war and take out citizenship papers.

Churchill Arrives for 6th Conference

Britain's prime minister, Winston Churchill, is pictured at the Chateau Frontenac in Quebec, Canada, prior to conferences with President Roosevelt and Prime Minister King of Canada. ISRAEL'S SIN AND RESTORATION

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 32:7-10; 34:4, 9, 27, 28.
GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord is long-suffering and of great mercy, forgiving iniquity and transgression.—Numbers 14:18.

God is righteous, and cannot look with approval or in forgiveness upon sin until His mercy has been stirred and set free to act by repentance. Then He whose wrath is hotly kindled against man's transgression shows Himself as the tender and gracious God, "keeping loving-kindness for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin."

This grace of God is fully revealed in Christ and the redemption which He brought to man, but is prefigured in the experiences of Israel under the law.

I. God's Wrath Kindled (Exod. 32:7-10).

There are those who would have us think of God as a benevolent old gentleman who is easily hoodwinked by clever sinners who can talk fast to cover their iniquity. Even if He does see it, He is supposed to be so tenderhearted that He overlooks their sin.

Such folk had better read these words, "That my wrath may wax hot." The wrath of God is a real and awful affection of the divine nature and it is revealed against man who sins against His holy law.

The special sin of Israel on this occasion was idolatry, which is the setting up of some material symbol to represent the invisible God. Moses had been with God in the mount for 40 days. He had been the Lord's representative in their midst. His presence had evidently been the chief stabilizing influence.

Having their eyes set on a man, or a material object to take His place, they had lost sight of the invisible God. So they proceeded to establish this idol which would provide a center of worship. At first it was evidently intended to remind them of God, but soon it led them out into heathen revelry (Exod. 32:6, 17, 18).

Whatever a man puts between himself and God, even though he may at first intend it to be but a reminder of God, will lead him away from God. Ritual, symbols, theology, scholarship, all good in their places, may become the idols which separate present-day man from God.

II. God's Mercy Invited (Exod. 34:4-9).

Aaron had only a weak "alibi" to offer. The golden calf had practically made itself (see Exod. 32:24). How quick man is to justify himself instead of admitting his guilt. No doubt our excuses sound just as silly as Aaron's in the ears of God.

Moses knew better. The sin was dealt with in drastic fashion. When one deals with a wild ravenous beast, there is one remedy—"shoot to kill." Not only were the leaders of the wickedness slain, but the ground gold of the calf image was put into water, which all Israel drank. Thus were they all marked as sharing the guilt of this idolatry.

There is a lesson here for us. America is far from God. We need to seek His face in repentance. But let us remember that we (that is, Christian men and women) are a part of America. It is our guilt, and we ought to be on our faces before God, pleading for God's mercy upon our land.

Moses was now ready to seek the Lord's mercy for his wayward people. He is the intercessor, the intermediary. God had a man who had compassion and love in his heart, and the Lord heard him. Loving-kindness and tender mercy flowed forth in place of flaming anger.

Note that God has not changed. He is the unchangeable One. His wrath is still hot against man's sin, but man has repented, and moved out of God's wrath into His love and grace. That too is always being shown to His obedient children.

III. God's Covenant Renewed (Exod. 34:27, 28).

Moses had broken the first tablets of commandments. The people had sinned and were not then ready to listen to any word from Jehovah. But now they were prepared to receive it, and God renewed the covenant as He again gave Moses the law.

There is no need for despair in the heart of the one who deals with God. The missed opportunity for obedience and blessing may be gone forever, but God is still on the giving hand ready to meet the returning prodigal, ready to give beauty for ashes (Isa. 61:3) and to restore the years that the locust has destroyed (Joel 2:25). Amazing grace!

In the keeping of these commandments, Israel was assured of the blessing of God. As we pointed out last week, the real fulfillment of the law came in Jesus Christ, who did not set aside its requirements, but met them all, for all who believe in His name.

Microbes That Save Soldiers' Lives
By J. D. Ratcliff

(WNU Feature—Through special arrangement with Collier's Weekly)

Most of us think of microbes in terms of sudden death. But there are good microbes, too. We couldn't live without them. If we didn't have microbes to eat dead vegetation it would pile up and choke off all life. Microbes give us cheese, butter, milk, sauerkraut, pickles, olives. They capture atmospheric nitrogen to enrich the soil and do us a thousand good turns.

Industry is beginning to see tremendous possibilities in microbes—in the yeasts, molds and bacteria. These little creatures are magnificent chemists. They can do jobs which stump the brightest men. They can turn wood into sugar, and sugar into fat. They can convert stuff like corn sugar into resins, gums and vitamins.

These facts account for the quickening interest in the new science of industrial microbiology. And it also accounts for the fact that in the past year or so, this country has built up one of the world's best microbe zoos—so the creatures will be on hand when jobs are found for them.

Microbe 'Zoo'

This zoo is in Peoria, Ill.—in the department of agriculture's northern regional research laboratory. The zoo contains 1,900 molds, 1,000 yeasts, and 500 varieties of bacteria. The creatures in this zoo are kept in test tubes and flasks instead of cages. Some live in refrigerator rooms, others in closets or incubators.

The hero of the laboratory at the moment is a mold called Penicillium notatum. This mold makes the drug penicillin, which is the most potent weapon against death ever discovered. The new drug, not yet on the market, was discovered by accident by a British research man named Alexander Fleming. He was growing disease-causing bacteria in his laboratory when he noted that a mold had contaminated the plates. More important, he noted that something given off by the mold was killing the bacteria. He started searching for the cause of this bacteria death—and found penicillin.

British doctors found this drug would do almost everything the sulfa drugs would do and a great deal besides. It was the most potent weapon ever found against infection. Penicillin cleared up horrid bone infections and did other jobs. It literally snatched people back from sure death.

Yet there was a catch to all this magnificent life-saving. The mold that produced the drug was inordinately difficult to grow. And it yielded only minute quantities of the drug. Since large quantities of penicillin were desperately needed to treat war wounded, British research men turned to America. Would the Peoria laboratory see what it could do toward finding molds to produce large quantities of the drug? The job was handed to long-faced, pipe-smoking Dr. Andrew Moyer.

Some people have an intuitive sense of knowing what will please children. Moyer has the same flair with molds. He has worked with them 20 years, knows their likes and dislikes. He coddles them with vitamins, beef broth and other things.

'Penicillium' a Slow Grower.

When it was turned over to him, Penicillium notatum was pretty sorry stuff. It was difficult to grow. And it produced only two units of penicillin per cubic centimeter. Since a desperately ill human being might require two million units, this was an almost hopelessly inadequate yield.

Maybe, Moyer decided, the British weren't feeding the green mold properly. He looked around for other foods—and hit on corn steep liquor. This is the water starch-makers soak corn in. Don't ask why Moyer decided this might work. He can't tell you himself. But it did work. Production shot up immediately. He looked for other foods that might be tempting; and looked for more productive strains of the mold. All this, of course, required months. But the work was crowned with magnificent success. Instead of getting 20 units of penicillin per cubic centimeter, Moyer is getting dozens of times this yield!

Government chemists recently found a microbe that would produce tremendous quantities of gluconic acid. At the time, this stuff was a chemical curiosity costing $100 a pound. But once it was available, in quantity and at a low price, research men quickly found uses for it. They found that if it were converted into calcium gluconate, it had uses in tanning, metallurgy, and in making toothpaste. But its most striking use was in veterinary medicine, where it provided a ready source of calcium in a form easily assimilated by farm animals.

Women Cheer Soldiers in Camp Hospital

Red Cross 'Musketeers' Stick to Job; Accept Discipline, Hardships

For a long time after this war is over many American soldiers who convalesced in the hospital at Camp Young, Calif., will have kindly remembrances of three feminine Red Cross musketeers of morale. These young women live in tents, wash their clothes in buckets, and work long hours, but the altruistic nature of their job apparently brings them more satisfaction than a softer position.

The "three musketeers" are Miss Dorothy Ewing of Berkeley, Calif., head of the Red Cross staff at the isolated desert training center; Miss Ann Maddox of La Jolla, Calif.; and Miss Hortense White of Lindsay, Calif., who are Miss Ewing's assistants.

Their duties are made up of endless acts of kindness embracing the widely varied activities which have become known as "Red Cross work."

A sick soldier is worried about an invalid mother, an ailing wife or child. Miss Ewing tries to contact the family. Another soldier gets word that his family has not been receiving dependency allotments. Miss White contacts the proper officials to straighten out the error. Medical officers need a case history on a soldier who was hospitalized before entering the army. Miss Maddox contacts his family physician and the report is on its way.

Many little items which loom into importance only when they are needed are thoughtfully kept on hand by the three morale builders. Toilet articles, money for tobacco, and plenty of Red Cross stationery are always on hand to cheer an ailing soldier.

Although their work is informal and they are not part of the regular army, these "three musketeers"

Bob Hope and Bing Crosby via celluloid film are ready to entertain this group of grinning soldier patients in the hospital at Camp Young on California's southwest desert. This is one of the services arranged by the Red Cross and administered by three feminine morale lifters who withstand the hardships of army camp life in order to administer their program. Left inset: A model airplane set will help lighten Private Stanley J. Kowal's long, heavy hours of convalescence. Right inset: A bingo game plus a smile from Miss Dorothy Ewing help make things more pleasant for Lieut. Henry J. Richards.

share desert hardships and privations along with the regular army nurses. They are on the job at reveille, usually through by taps. Their "vanity dresser" is a wooden table and a mirror clipped to a tent pole alongside their army cots.

The camp laundry is usually overburdened so the girls solve their clean clothes problem with a bucket, a washboard and elbow grease. When a uniform needs pressing, a foot locker across a couple of tent chairs with an army blanket serving as a pad becomes their makeshift ironing board.

They also share the strict army discipline of the regular nurses. Once a week all three stand stiffly at attention while the hospital's commanding officer inspects their tents, bunks, steel helmets and gas masks.

Ann Maddox is in charge of one of the biggest morale lifters among all Red Cross activities—the recreation program. Games, books, the theatricals, musicals, and even movies straight from Hollywood are a regular part of her constant programs to keep hospitalized soldiers from getting down in the mouth, to keep them from worrying about things at home, and to ease the long heavy hours of convalescence.

AMERICA IN ACTION

MOVIES TEACH AAF STUDENTS

Detailed, first-hand accounts, movie films, and still photographs, all direct from battle zones, covering combat activities of air force technicians are now being made available to instructors and students in AAF technical training command schools throughout the country.

The technical training command's widely diversified curricula for the training of 15 main categories of specialists have always been based on combat experience whenever possible. Previously, however, the information was presented verbally to students by instructors in the technical school laboratories and work shops. Few movie films or still pictures were obtainable.

The new program, now in effect, provides for the establishment of technical intelligence information libraries at all the larger schools. Sources have been set up overseas through which technical information from combat areas is obtained.

Technical school libraries now under construction will have student reading rooms, instructor reading rooms, and storage rooms. Movie screens and projectors, or automatic film viewers, similar to the computerized type found in railroad stations, hotel lobbies and other public rooms, are being installed. Library walls will be covered with maps, charts, and portfolios of still photographs.

One of the basic principles of the technical training command program has been to turn out technical specialists who can start performing the duties for which they are trained the day after they graduate from the technical schools. It is believed that the new system of technical libraries, providing a steady flow of practical information from combat zones, will make the transition from technical school to combat zone advance airdromes easier and shorter.

What to Do

By PHYLLIS BELMONT

Please tell me if it is ever proper to butter a whole slice of bread or a biscuit?

Answer—When rolls or biscuits are served hot it is permissible to break them in two, and butter both halves, otherwise spread only a small piece just before you eat it.

It is considered bad form to butter the whole slice of bread—and only a bite or so should be buttered at one time. However, it would not be incorrect to butter a whole piece of toast.

Home Dehydrators Can Prevent Spoilage With Good Storage and Careful Packing

Home dehydration of this summer's fruits and vegetables may be of little help to next winter's table unless care is exercised in proper packaging and storing.

Adequate protection against moisture is an essential consideration for these products, particularly in humid climates.

Every housewife knows that a leaky seal will ruin a jar of canned tomatoes or string beans. She should be equally aware that a poor container will similarly cause spoilage of many home-dried foods.

Not all vegetables can be dehydrated successfully. Sweet corn, apples, and parsley and celery (for soup flavoring) can be dehydrated and packaged without much difficulty, if they are properly processed according to instructions issued by the U. S. department of agriculture. The amateur dehydrator is confronted with real problems when she tackles the more hygroscopic foods (those which absorb moisture easily). Even the industrial dehydrators, whose business has undergone tremendous expansion during the war, have had to overcome many difficulties in preparing and packaging these products for the army and for lend-lease shipments.

In all cases the packaging of dehydrated foods should be done promptly, under sanitary conditions, and out of contact with dust. Containers should be filled to the top in order to displace as much air as possible—to keep down oxidation. Extreme cold will not injure dehydrated foods, since they contain so little water. But prolonged storage in a very warm place will adversely affect them, and light affects some products. Storage in a cool, dark, dry place is best.

Home dehydrators should also make sure that the interiors of larger pieces of fruit or vegetable are thoroughly dried. Too often one assumes that because the small pieces feel dry the whole batch is sufficiently dehydrated, whereas the larger pieces may be still moist on the inside. Then when all are packaged together the moisture in the large pieces may be given off and cause the whole batch to become moldy.

For the safe storing of most fruits and vegetables dehydrated in the home, a container must be used which has the greatest resistance to passage of moisture vapor.

Cellophane of the moisture-proof type provides an excellent protective package for dehydrated foods. However, it is not always easy for the consumer to obtain this type of film at present due to its great demand for war packaging. It is, therefore, important for the housewife to know the difference between moisture-proof cellophane and the type known to the trade as "plain transparent," which is grease-proof but not moisture-proof. The moisture-proof cellophane used for this purpose seals to itself upon application of a hot iron, and this is a simple test. This variety may be purchased at some of the stores which sell home-freezing supplies, as it is extensively used in packaging frozen foods. The plain—or non-moisture-proof—film should not be used.

Where cellophane is used, it is a good idea to place in one bag the amount of dehydrated food needed for one family meal. A number of these bags may be placed in a crock, jar or box with a tight-fitting lid. The food then can be used one bag at a time without exposing the remainder to moisture absorption.

In the event that the home dehydrator cannot obtain moisture-proof cellophane or other satisfactory moisture-resistant paper type containers she may turn to the traditional home-preserving receptacle, the glass jar, one of the safest and most available containers under present conditions.

Minute Make-Ups

By GABRIELLE

Is your mouth too narrow? Too wide? Look directly into your mirror. Smile, even if it hurts! The corners of your mouth should be in a direct line with the corners of the pupils of your eyes. If your mirror reveals incorrect balance, the too-narrow mouth must be lip-sticked from corner to corner. For the wide mouth deepen the lipstick in the center, fade out the color at the corners. And NEVER draw a Cupid's Bow unless you really have one. You'll fool only yourself.

When the word went out that soldiers overseas wanted packages from home—the response was so overwhelming that Uncle Sam reluctantly had to call a halt. Today, due to shipping space, there are Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men—but you can still send packages to soldiers in the U. ## SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

It did have a bearing on rubber use—the close to 24 billion gallons of gasoline used by highway vehicles in 1941. California led the states with a mark on the edge of 2 billion gallons. These are numbers for the "A" card holder to conjure with.

Tires for our fighting aircraft consume from 35 to 96 pounds of rubber, depending on the size of the plane. Inner tubes take from 24 to 54½ pounds.

At a rubber plantation in Haiti, a 75-foot tree was pulled to the ground by the weight of cryptogamic vines which had fought one another to climb it.

Keeping Dust From Scattering

To keep dust from scattering when dusting radiators, lay a slightly dampened cloth on top of the radiator and paper beneath.
Then take a long handled brush and dust with a vengeance. The cloth and paper collect the dust.
