Purchase 30,000 Yards Gravel for Iosco Roads

Although funds are not available to pay for production and putting the material on the roads, the Road Commission has this year ordered 30,000 cubic yards of crushed stone and gravel for resurfacing worn out county highways. (This huge order (equivalent to approximately 900 car loads of material) was necessary because of deterioration on many of county gravel roads to the point where all material would be lost if not resurfaced before another bad spring. 5000 yards were ordered from Greenbush and put on the Alabaster and Tawas Township roads. 10,000 yards are now being produced at the limestone pit in Burleigh township. In addition to this 15,000 cubic yards of gravel will be produced from Conservation property north west of Five Channels under a contract let to C. P. Brady of Flint. The latter will be crushed and screened during October and November.

The necessary funds to produce and put all of this material on the roads. However the material will be made and as much will be put on the roads as funds will permit. An effort will be made to get the additional funds to save the roads.

He breaks the bad news to his domineering wife, Amy, who now hates to part with him. On arriving at camp Mr. Winkle is given his physical and to his great surprise and dismay, is accepted for service. He is sent to Camp Squibb, a thousand miles from home, where he meets Mr. Tinker, a man of his own age. After much hard training, Mr. Winkle is called in before his superior officer and told he is over 38 and can go home if he chooses, but Winkle says he'll stay in the army. He graduates from Motor Mechanics school.

CHAPTER IX

Mr. Winkle peered at him through his glasses and blinked. He had seen the Army work other wonders, even on himself, but never a miracle like this. "That's all right," he murmured.

"I suppose," Freddie went on, "I'm responsible for you being called 'Pop,' too."

"I don't mind," Mr. Winkle assured him. "In fact, I rather like it."

"Me," said Mr. Tinker, "I don't believe it. It's somebody else pretending to be him."

"He's a reformed character," Jack agreed.

Freddie looked at the bar. "I'm not so reformed I won't buy everybody a drink."

Over their glasses, in the noisy bar, Freddie explained how he had come to see the light. He was articulate about it.

"I'm not so reformed I won't buy everybody a drink."

"The kid here did it," he said, indicating Jack. "When I figure the Army made him almost up to licking me, I thought it must have something. Even for me. I got a look at myself, I mean, what I had been. I didn't even like my mustache."

"What about the Alphabet?" Mr. Winkle inquired.

"He isn't so bad," Freddie answered, "when you get to know him."

"You see?" Jack asked. "He's got the right attitude. Of course, he may still need a little polishing here and there, but I'm doing that."

Jack gave a practical demonstration of this when Freddie's gaze wandered to girls in the bar. "Come on," he told Freddie, "you're a strictly USO type now."

The next day Mr. Winkle was given a week's furlough. The permanent post to which he and the other Motor Mechanics School Graduates were to be sent wouldn't be ready to receive them for this length of time. He could, if he wished, return home at his own expense.

He sent Amy a telegram and then boarded a train.

Amy was at the station to meet him. At first they just stared at each other without being able to do anything else. It was an awkward moment. Then Amy cried, "Oh, Wilbert, I didn't think I would ever see you again!"

They embraced. He felt clumsy when he kissed her. It was almost as strange coming back to her as it was leaving her.

"Why," said Amy, "I hardly know you." She seemed surprised. She touched the buttons of his uniform.

"How are you?" he asked.

"I'm fine." She examined him again in some admiration. "I never thought you'd look like that in a uniform. And your stomach—it's gone. You'll have to have your picture taken."

"Well," he asked again, "how are you, Amy?"

"I'm fine," she repeated.

Mr. Winkle drove, for the novelty of feeling a regular car under his hands. It seemed light and dangerous after the trucks and command cars with which he had dealt lately in his field training.

He sensed Amy looking at him.

"You've put on weight." She spoke in an aggrieved tone.

"I wrote you about it," he reminded.

"At least ten pounds."

"Twelve and a half."

"You never did that before." She sounded still more hurt. "No matter how much I fed you."

"It isn't the cooking," he assured her. "It's the exercise and being outdoors that makes you eat more."

Though he knew she felt better after he said this, a restraint remained between them. They found they could not at once, and easily, take up where they left off. The months in between, during which each had had another life, interfered and came between them. They had to get to know each other all over again.

Mr. Winkle sensed her staring at him anew, in a different way. He glanced at her, and saw that her gaze was contemplative, searching, a little suspicious.

He feared that she was reverting to being a termagant, and that the effects of his suddenly being made into a soldier were wearing off. He supposed he couldn't be sure about that until after the war and he returned, if he did, to his regular life.

"Wilbert," she asked, "did you see any women?"

"I told you I'd send you a postcard when I found somebody else," he said. "You didn't get one, did you?"

"No," she admitted slowly. She sat staring at him and he turned to look her for an instant straight in the eye. "I'm glad I didn't," she told him in a low voice.

Mr. Winkle was happy when she dropped the subject.

It was his turn to feel hurt when they reached the house and sneaked inside so none of the neighbors would see him.

Penelope, instead of greeting him joyously, as would have been expected, scrunched down on the floor, growling and barking, and glaring at him with disapproval. Mrs. Winkle scolded her, but it made no impression. Even when Mr. Winkle spoke to her coaxingly and let her sniff his hand, she wouldn't accept him or have anything to do with him. So far as Penelope was concerned, he was a stranger in his own house.

It was barely daylight when he awakened. He expected to hear the bustle of many men moving and cursing and the bugle tooting its dreadful call. He listened, not quite sure of where he was. He heard Amy's light breathing. He looked at his watch. It was exactly 5:45.

He tried to go back to sleep again. This was the morning of his kingship.

But the king couldn't sleep any more. Harsh habit interfered, refusing him his crown.

It being also his accustomed time to eat, he felt hungry. After a time he got up quietly, put on his bathrobe, over his pajamas, and went out. Downstairs, Penelope growled, snarled when he spoke to her, and snapped when he made to pat her. He wandered outdoors just as a strange newsboy delivered the paper. The boy looked at him, startled, then interested, then wise, and went away whistling.

Mr. Winkle didn't approve of such precocious behavior in one so young.

He investigated the kitchen, over Penelope's continued protests, and devoured odd assortments of food. He had an idea that tickled him.

Sometime later, with a daintily prepared tray and the newspaper resting at one side of it, he went in to awaken Amy. Her eyes went wide and staring as he saluted and announced "Breakfast in bed for you, queen."

Mr. Winkle visited his shop to see that his tools and machines were in good order. He made small repairs about the house. He had his photograph taken so that Amy could have him up over the mantel while he was away, or if he didn't ever return.

He talked with Mr. Wescott, who first laughed outright at the sight of Mr. Winkle in his uniform and then was prone to be triumphant about his prediction for him. "What did I tell you?" he cried. "You're being used as a mechanic, just like I said. You'll stay right here."

Formerly he and Mr. Wescott had considered together the large and broad scale aspects of war, and now his neighbor expected that, as an actual military man, he would have some expert ideas.

"Our antitank guns," Mr. Wescott inquired, "are they going to be able to stop the Germans?"

"I don't know a thing about them," said Mr. Winkle.

"But surely in your training—"

Mr. Winkle coughed apologetically. "I never saw one."

Mr. Wescott considered. A little of his pompousness left him and he proposed, "Perhaps I shouldn't be asking such questions. You probably have your orders not to let out any military secrets."

"No," said Mr. Winkle, "that isn't it. I don't know any military secrets."

"Thanks?" asked Mr. Wescott.

"I've never seen a tank."

Mr. Wescott stared at him. He dropped the subject, and took up the Mediterranean campaign.

"How is it coming along?" Mr. Winkle asked.

"Do you mean to say you don't know?" demanded Mr. Wescott.

"Well," said Mr. Winkle, "I hardly ever saw a paper in camp. Since I've been home I've glanced at the headlines a little, but I haven't read the details much."

"You," spluttered Mr. Wescott,

"above all people, you, in the service—"

"There isn't much time to think about it," Mr. Winkle apologized.

"But you don't even sound interested," Mr. Wescott complained.

"Somehow," said Mr. Winkle, "I've come to leave that up to the generals."

"Of course," said Mr. Wescott stiffly. "Yes. Of course." He gathered the forces of his indignation and scolded pettishly. "All I can say is that you aren't any more of a soldier than I thought you'd be."

Too late, Mr. Winkle realized that he had offended his neighbor, that Mr. Wescott thought he meant to squelch and ridicule him as an arm-chair strategist. That had not been his intention at all. It was simply that he and Mr. Wescott had grown apart, that they had become strangers.

Domestically, the Winkles were as happy as they ever had been. They lived the few days he was home like a honeymoon taken up from where it was dropped many years before.

Amy seemed intent on making up to Mr. Winkle the period she had been shrewish, and he decided to enjoy this, no matter what might happen after the war.

She sewed on several buttons for him, and though her way wasn't exactly the manner in which he had learned to sew, he was delighted to have her do it. After that first morning, Mr. Winkle managed to stay in bed long enough for Amy, by getting up very early, to bring him his breakfast there.

The weather was fine and Mrs. Winkle squandered her gasoline ration by going on a picnic with him every day into the woods. On these trips even Penelope agreed to wag her tail sluggishly at the soldier, though she still wouldn't accept him wholeheartedly.

They spoke little of the war and his portion of it. Not that they took it for granted, or had become fatalistic about it, but they wished to forget it during the time they had together. Only on the day of his departure did the war come again between them.

Once more he held her in his arms. She wept, and he felt like crying, too. Then, when they parted, for a fleeting instant before they spoke or moved again, he saw that she looked at him defiantly, nearly with antagonism. But it wasn't a hen-pecking look. It was like the unreasonable anger of a person who loves another a great deal when the other has put himself in mortal danger.

Sergeant Technician Wilbert George Winkle would have preferred to be alone in one of the upper berths rather than occupying a lower berth with Corporal Technician Tinker. But that was the way the Army said it was to be on the troop train roaring through the cold night, and that was the way it was.

Mr. Tinker, besides taking up most of the space with his bulk, leaving only a few inches for Mr. Winkle, was in addition restless because, having boarded the train at night, none of them even knew in which direction it was going.

All they were sure of was that they were being shipped to an embarkation port.

Mr. Tinker twisted, nearly knocking Mr. Winkle out of the berth, and stared out the window. "Not a star," he said. "Mebbe I couldn't read them anyway, but you say you can."

"I think we're going south," the man above them called down.

"What do you think we're going to, the Civil War?" someone demanded. "I hear they ain't finished fighting it down there yet."

"Now," another differed. "It's east. That means England and the Nasties." This was for Mr. Tinker's sake, to devil him about being sent to fight the Germans instead of the Japs.

"What's it matter which way?" someone else wanted to know. "You ain't going to get off and catch another train, are you?"

RELIGION IN THE LIFE OF A NATION

LESSON TEXT—II Samuel 7:17-29. GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory. Isaiah 60:19.

"Righteousness exalteth a nation" (Prov. 14:34). True religion is vital to the life of a nation and is the only foundation for national stability and growth. David, the man after God's own heart, knew this, and was not content that the ark of God, the center of the nation's worship, should be without a suitable house. He was not one to be content with a fine palace for his own comfort while the ark of God had a temporary abiding place within curtained walls (v. 2).

Although the prophet Nathan encouraged him in his plan (v. 3), the Lord revealed to the prophet that David was not to build His house (see I Chron. 22:8, 9), but to prepare the materials so that his son Solomon could do it. David's response to that message reveals the true religious attitude of a king and a people who fear and worship God. They were ready to—

I. Receive God's Grace (vv. 18-22).

The great Davidic covenant, which is yet to have its final fulfillment in David's greater son, our Lord Jesus, was made with him at this time. He was promised that the throne of his kingdom was to be established forever (vv. 13-15), a prophecy to be fulfilled in Christ.

But there was also the great promise of blessing upon David's son Solomon, and the reminder of God's grace upon David, the one brought up from the shepocote to be king (v. 8).

In humility of heart David received this grace and thanked God for it. Note such expressions as "Who am I?" "What is my house?" "What can David say more?" and "For thy word's sake thou hast done these great things." David knew and admitted his unworthiness; he realized that this was indeed unmerited favor from God, but he accepted it as God's gift.

II. Recognize God's Power (vv. 23, 24).

Israel had seen the mighty hand of God at work on their behalf repeatedly, since the day God had brought them forth out of Egypt. God had literally redeemed them for Himself, a purchased possession, protected by His limitless power.

That redemption was not only national but spiritual—they were set free from the gods of Egypt (v. 23) and confirmed to the Lord (v. 24).

It is a great and noble thing when a nation recalls its past and thanks God for His powerful hand upon its destiny. It has been said that a nation which does not remember its past will not have a future worth remembering; and when it remembers, let it recognize God in its history. He is the God of the nations as well as of individuals.

III. Rest in God's Promise (vv. 25-27).

"Do as thou hast said." That is a perfect prayer for any nation. Let the will of God be done, and all will be well—now and in the future.

There is nothing commendable about doubting God's promise or limiting Him in fulfilling it. It glorifies God and magnifies His name to take Him at His word and to confidently expect Him to fully meet His promise. To do anything else is to reflect on His power and His integrity.

It was the prayer of David that the Lord's name might be magnified forever in the keeping of the covenant which He had made with him. That squarely put all of the authority and dependability of God behind the keeping of the promise.

David found peace of heart there. May not we do likewise, resting on the promises of God?

IV. Rejoice in God's Blessing (vv. 28, 29).

David praised God for the assurance that His words were true, and claimed the promise of a blessing upon his house, "That it may continue forever before thee."

He evidently saw beyond the immediate fulfillment of the promise in Solomon to the coming of Christ (cf. vv. 18, 19; Rom. 4:5-8). And his heart leaped for joy at the unspeakable honor which had thus come to him.

This is substantiated by the translation of verse 19 by the Hebrew scholar Adam Clarke: "O Lord God, thou hast spoken of thy servant's house for a great while to come, and hast regarded me in the arrangement about the MAN that is to be from above, O God Jehovah."

Little wonder, then, that David raised his voice and heart in praise and worship. His "adoration and thanksgiving at the revelation of this great truth is beautiful. Its humility, faith, and gratitude reach a sublimity unequalled since Moses" (James M. Gray).

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Tests have shown that a single skid may take 100 miles off the life of a tire. The loss will be greater with tires made of synthetic rubber.

A B. F. Goodrich official believes that before natural rubber is again available in quantity the industry will so improve the quality of synthetic rubber that it will be equal to the former for many uses.

It's important to put your spare in service when making periodic tire switches. In that way the wear is distributed over five tires instead of four.

Oil Leadership

Year after year the United States has held world leadership in oil—63 per cent of all oil production in 1941 against 11 per cent for second-place Russia. Of all foreign producers only Russia has challenged the United States position. In the period 1898-1901 Russia led the world, fell behind the United States in later years.

Bakers' Yeast
 Backbone of the yeast industry is bakers' yeast, generally grown in molasses. More than 248,000,000 pounds will be made in 1944, mostly for civilians. This material, containing some 70 per cent moisture, sold in bulk for about 13 cents per pound in 1939. The vitamin content of bakers' yeast is low, only about one-third that of brewers' yeast, but it is possible by changing the nutrient to produce a high-vitamin bakers' yeast.

Potato Values
 Two medium sized potatoes will furnish over half of a person's daily requirements of vitamin C, one-third the needed vitamin B, and one-sixth of the iron.

With a shield of armor plate and plenty of "fire power" in his horns, the dinosaur Triceratops was a prehistoric model of today's fighting tanks. While dinosaurs lived, millions of years ago, Nature was mellowing and filtering the crude oils used today in refining Sinclair Opaline Motor Oil.

Shark Fishing Is the Business Of Florida Town

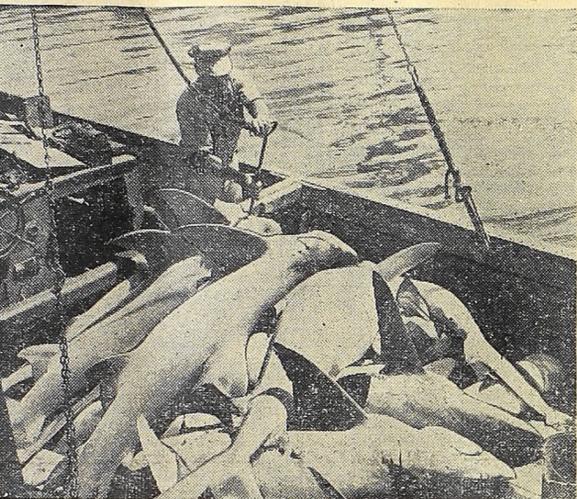

If you want to learn about shark fishing, Salerno, Fla., is the place to go. Sharking is a growing industry there. They don't go after sharks in Salerno for the fun of it. In recent years it has been discovered that shark liver is phenomenally rich in vitamin A, and therefore valuable medicinally, so the primary urge of the shark hunters was for the liver. However, uses have been found for other parts of the so-called "tiger of the deep." Hides are made into luxury leather; the flesh gives good steaks—if you like shark meat—and the "innards" are dried and ground for fodder and fertilizer. Shark fins are a delicacy in China.

The sharks caught off Salerno and in Hobe sound average 20 feet or more in length. They weigh a ton or more and include such branches of the shark family tree as the mackerel, black leopard, sandshark, hammerhead, black tip, tiger, lemon and white shark.

Shark fishing does not involve the rod-and-reel angling technique. In some parts of the world, the huge fish are harpooned. In Salerno they catch 'em on the assembly line method. A steel chain from 3,000 to 3,500 feet long is strung between buoys at a depth of about 60 feet. Great hooks are attached to the chain at intervals and these hooks are baited with scrap fish. After a sufficient interval the chain is raised by a winch on the fishing boat and the monsters hauled in. Fifty sharks is an average catch. There is a record of 130.

A big shark is hauled over the gunwales. A winch lifts the sea beast onto the deck as the average weight is more than a ton. It is necessary to use chain for all the tackle, since the shark's double row of keen teeth would snip through any sort of line or rope.

A day's haul for one boat. The heap includes lemon shark, tiger shark, hammerhead, and leopard shark. These last are considered the most vicious of the "sea tigers."

Washington, D. C. FEAR OF CASUALTIES

The inside story can now be told regarding one of the greatest worries of the Allied High Command in connection with the Normandy invasion—namely, casualties. It was feared they would be terrifically high.

In fact, Prime Minister Churchill, who had hung back from a cross-channel front for two years, feared the Allies might suffer losses comparable to the early days of the last war, when the cream of British manhood, then relatively untrained, was mowed down in Flanders fields. He frequently told FDR that he was worried about losing the "seed" of Britain.

This worry gives an insight into the sudden change between the type of slow fighting during the first few weeks in Normandy and the headlong onrush of today.

Allied orders during the early weeks in Normandy were to advance under a "curtain of steel." As a result, the greatest artillery barrage ever laid down in history was thrown at the Germans in advance of Allied infantry. It was an artillery barrage so heavy that it wiped out almost everything in its path.

However, it was slow. It took time to unload big guns on shallow beaches. It also took time to batter down German positions. But once these positions were battered down, and the rim of German defense was broken, the Allies found what General Eisenhower knew was the case—a complete military vacuum inside.

In other words, the Nazis had staked everything on holding the rim, had no defenses in the interior. That is the explanation for the headlong rush of Allied forces in recent weeks. The Nazis were gambling on their Atlantic wall, a wall which could not stand up under Bradley's "curtain of steel."

NOTE—General Montgomery's cautious advances in Normandy probably reflected in part Churchill's worry over casualties. However, he has been cautious in other areas also. Before the Battle of El Alamein, when the British army had been pushed back and back across the desert toward Cairo, Montgomery queried his chief, General Alexander: "What casualties can I take?" Alexander, with the fate of the Suez canal at stake, replied: "One hundred per cent." Caution, of course, is no reflection on courage.

SAILOR'S OUTMODED UNIFORM

Now that Adm. Ernie ("Clothes Horse") King has finally relented and will let naval officers shed their jackets under certain conditions in hot weather, a lot of sailors wish he would also examine the uniform of the enlisted man.

Most enlisted men would whoop with joy if their present, long-outdated uniform was discarded. What most people don't realize is that the sailor's uniform was designed by the British about 200 years ago and is now just as outmoded as the sailing ship.

Take, for instance, the broad collar worn over the shoulders. It was designed for vermin-infested ships of the 1700s, when sailors had to be deloused and a broad collar was practicable to catch the tar oils used in a sailor's hair.

Again, the bell-shaped trousers, which flap around the ankles and nearly trip the wearer when he runs, were designed for days when sailors rolled their trousers up over their legs to scrub decks. Today, dungarees are provided for this sort of work.

Again the drop front, 13-button trousers were designed for a day two centuries ago when tidiness was nothing like what it is today.

One thing which particularly gripes the enlisted man is the tight-fitting waist of his blouse, which has to be slipped on and off over his head. If a sailor is dumped into the water and has to swim for any length of time, it is almost impossible to get this blouse off. It is tight, sticks to the body, and you can't very well swim and at the same time hold two arms above your head while you wriggle out of your middy.

Some of the boys wish that Admiral King would take off his new grey-green uniform, designed for him by His Majesty's tailor in London, long enough to experiment with a middy-blouse in the water. They think that, despite a century's delay, he would then design for them a new uniform overnight.

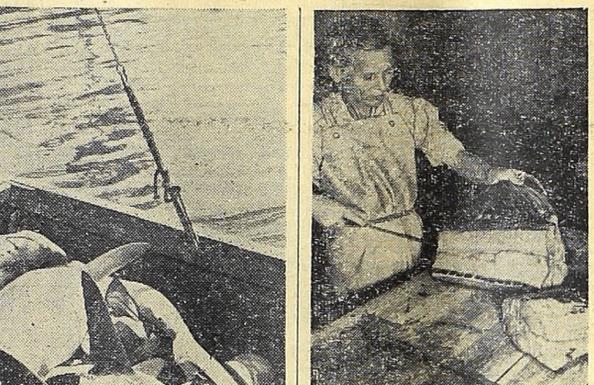

CAPITAL CHAFF

Before every White House press conference, scores of newsmen crowd against the velvet rope outside the President's office, awaiting the signal to enter. When secret service men let the barriers down, the rush is terrific. Cracked one perspiring secret service man, "It's worse than a New York subway." First new international magazine to be published in liberated France is a French edition of "Free World," edited by members of the French underground.

Ship Pump Is Operated By Beating of Waves

NEW YORK.—A Norwegian pump operated by the beating of waves against the vessel's side has recently been invented, according to Ships magazine.

A wave half a yard high, it is claimed, will cause the pump to eject about one ton of water a minute. The newly patented pump can be used on vessels under 3,000 dead-weight tons and is said to be ideal for fishing boats.

Fillets of shark are said to be tasty morsels. The meat has little "fish taste" and there are no small bones to choke on. The most attractive way to cook it, according to the experts, is to dip it in egg and cracker meal, and fry it in deep fat.

Q.—When attending the theater with a man, who goes down the aisle first and how are we seated?

A.—If the usher is to show you to your seats, the woman follows the usher and enters the aisle first. When aisle seats are obtained, the man occupies the aisle seat.

When there are no ushers, the man goes down the aisle first and finds the seats. He then stands aside and allows the woman to enter the aisle first.

The woman precedes the man up the aisle after the performance.

HUSBAND IN CHURCH

At last she got him out to church . . . This man of cheerful sin. She dragged him off from Satan's perch—
Maneuvered him within. She guided him into a pew. In back of church remote . . . Where he at once omitted to Take off his overcoat. While all were singing of a hymn . . . She made him take it off, Although for reasons dark and dim Her own she did not doff.
When time arrived to pass around The regulation plate, His pocketbook could not be found, And soon 't would be too late. He fished it from his overcoat—
Two pennies fell therefrom, The pew seat they resounding smote, Disturbed the tranquil calm. They sounded, so she later said, Like manhole covers flat . . . Dropped on a concrete pavement dead—
They sounded just like that. At last 'twas o'er—she got him out He to his home was yanked. Had he been small, without a doubt He would have been well spanked.

Minute Make-Ups

By GABRIELLE

Your makeup should be composed of Lights and Shadows. By careful blending of your foundation cream you can highlight your most attractive features and shadow the plainer ones. For instance, blend eyeshadow on the eyelids to dramatize your eyes if they are your best feature. If not, then soften the eyes with foundation cream but no eye-shadow on the lids. If your chin is too pointed, "shadow" it with darker cream and careful powdering.

Army Buying Pack Mules For Mountain Transport

The army quartermaster corps is purchasing approximately 2,000 mules for the use of the armed forces.

The mules, of the type most suitable for use as pack animals, are of somewhat smaller stature than those required for draft purposes. They usually weigh from 1,000 to 1,150 pounds, and are capable of carrying loads weighing from 200 to 250 pounds.

Far from being outmoded by mobile warfare, the mule is proving more valuable than ever to the army for supply transportation over rough terrain such as has been encountered in Sicily, Italy and Burma.

In addition to his sure-footedness on mountain trails, the mule is seldom disturbed by the noises of battle when working under combat conditions. Once his reluctance to boarding an air transport or landing craft is overcome, he usually stands quietly and gives little trouble while being transported.

Velveteen Jumper-Type Dress Rates High With College Girls

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

THIS year registers a decided change in college-girl fashions. No longer is the careless happy-go-lucky type of dress accepted as good form. This season it's farewell to the casual type of dress that has been carried even to the point of looking untidy and it's "in" for the well-groomed ladylike look.

Of all the campus fashions that are getting the spotlight this fall, it's the jumper-type dress that stands out as everybody's favorite. It takes class honors not only because it has the "looks" that win but the fact that it is so thoroughly practical because of the interchangeable sweaters and blouses that can be worn with it. Since it is adapted to many-purpose wear, the jumper frock is the ideal choice of the college, school and career girl.

Time was when the jumper frock was regarded as being more or less in the casual and informal class. Today, however, jumper and pinafore frocks are being made of soft and lovely velvetens and corduroys fashioned, as you see in the illustration, to look as dressy as you please. Which goes to show what's doing in way of smart cottons these days, for the big fabric news is that handsome cottons, notably velveteen and corduroy, have gone quite formal. The attractive models shown here have just that eye-appeal college girls want.

Pinwale corduroy, such as fashions the attractive frock to the left, has hosts of admirers among the campus set, because of its sturdiness and washability. Also it has the smart and attractive appearance which every well-dressed collegian and career girl covets. The popular pinafore styling is given to this pretty jumper-type dress which speaks youth in its every detail. The dress is made of dark blue pinwale corduroy enlivened with red peasant embroidery on the bob with a repeat trimming around the armholes, the same matching the edgeing on the peasant blouse sleeves. By way of diversion try a bright plaid blouse, for a touch of plaid is quite the thing this season. A fine white cashmere sweater blouse teams nicely with the corduroy pinafore dresses.

Cottons of the dressy sort, especially when they are rich and soft black velveteen like the Juillard fabric used for the handsome dress-up jumper pictured to the right, go to dinner and dancing with all the self-assurance in the world. This gown has a suspender back and looks right for evening wear worn without a sheer blouse, depending upon the formality of the occasion.

If you feel the urge for a touch of glitter, make a cunning little breast pocket in heart shape that is solid embroidered in multi-colored beads or sequins. This can be basted on so it can be detached at will. Clever too, are the pockets of hand crochet that are embellished with all sorts of tassels and your fantasies. Pretty as can be are the little baste-on pockets made of single crochet flowers.

It's fun to vary the jumper costume with varied blouses or light-weight pull-over sweater type. One of the highlights in the sweater collection is of striped jersey in vivid colors. The striped sleeves show off to perfection worn with a black velveteen jumper.

Pink accents on black is a favorite theme with fashion. A black velveteen jumper dress takes kindly to the idea when worn with one of the new peasant-sleeved sheer pink blouses.

Dramatic Scarfs

This season you'll be wanting not one scarf but a collection of scarfs for the new displays show them to be more beautiful and more versatile than ever for fall and winter. You'll be amazed at the dramatic role that has been assigned to the scarf. There's romance and loveliness in a sheer scarf that is starred all over with gleaming sequins as shown above in the picture. The scarf below features an exotic type that will impart outstanding glamour to even the simplest costume. Its brilliant coloring is enhanced with the gleam of multi-colored sequins that scintillates throughout the printed design.

Fashion Emphasizes Idea of 'Separates'

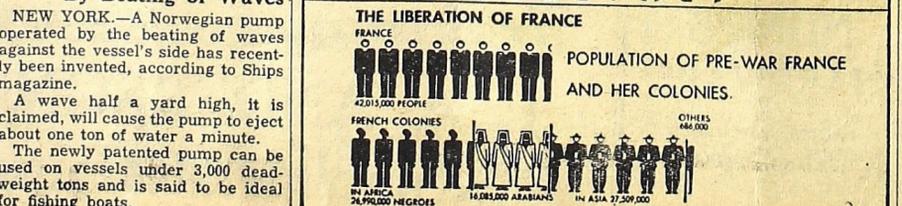

Style creators are showing utmost enthusiasm in regard to the idea of creating separates to mix and match with this and that in your wardrobe. It's a grand feeling to know you can buy as many items of dress as you want, from slacks to party frocks, each item of this or that costume designed on same color or key and of identical fabric. In fact, so closely family related are they that you can team this and that so as to have a unified costume that shows you are fashion alert as to what's what for fall. We have grown accustomed to sports outfits that are mixed and matched, and the items of which you can buy separately, but there is a new style angle developing that does the same thing for formal dinner and party dress as in utilitarian clothes.

For instance, you can buy a stunning two-piece black frock with two skirts—the one of street length, the other a formal. The new long-torso blouse in black is a favorite tope to either skirt. Another item is a sequined crepe bolero which will top a light satin blouse attractively. A long-waistline blouse of metallic satin brocade, enhanced with jeweled buttons, will achieve a most outstanding evening costume.

Colored Shoes by Spring

The changes in leather conservation will bring back colored shoes in time for the spring season, when they are normally most popular. Leather bows—of scrap leather only—will also reappear then. Two-toned shoes can still be made only in black and white or brown and white, but the War Labor board says that new designs, lasts and patterns may be introduced provided a manufacturer can do so without employing additional workers.

Well-Wishers Chip in For Tough Luck Guy

EVANSVILLE, IND.—Two months ago K. B. Westerfield came here with $2,630 life savings with which he was going to buy a farm—but a pickpocket stole it. Now he has made a $2,295 cash down payment on a 40-acre farm near Owensboro, Ky. All the money was given him by well-wishers who had heard of his tough luck.

FISHERMEN BEWARE!

A woman bopped her husband off a pier in Rhode Island 30 feet into the water the other day with a shout "Fishing, fishing, fishing! That's all you ever do, and the porch screens still out!"

If this develops into a movement few men will feel safe. This is the time of year when piers, docks, beaches, and seawalls are lined with so-called anglers. For every fisherman there is a little woman quietly sitting at home nursing a suspicion that he is ducking his homework.

She knows it is not mainly the love of fish. He seldom gets any. He would not get up at daybreak, spend it happily wet, hungry and frustrated just for those bullheads, blowfish and eels.

He would not sit in the rain 12 hours at home and call it fun. A loud "No" would be his reply to her proposition. "Look dearie, get into some sopping clothes, hang around home all day with a line in your hand and I'll buy you a halibut."

She knows it is something else. She is sure he is escaping something.

She could swear he is getting away from repainting the porch chairs, putting up the screens, clipping the hedge, washing the dog and helping her with the home-gardening.

So far she has borne her suspicions with restraint, but this Rhode Island incident may be the shape of things to come. It may be necessary to throw guards around those piers.

Elmer Twitchell, always playing it safe, has already taken precautions. He now fishes only from piers from which he can jump.

And he is talking of organizing the Fishermen's Protective association. He doesn't think there is much sense in trying to get any guaranty from wives that they will not follow the precedent just established.

"Once a thing like that is started, it is pretty sure to go far," he said today. "I look for a lot of fishermen to be shoved off wharves by irate wives. But I am for the establishment of certain rules!"

Elmer thinks they should be drawn up for the signatures of fishermen's brides at once, and that they should embrace the following regulations:

- 1—No wife should shove a husband off a pier without first ascertaining whether the water below is of rock or mud bottom.
- 2—In case of a rock bottom she should first propose adjournment to another pier.
- 3—No wife should assault a fisherman without a preliminary warning.
- 4—This warning must be in writing.
- 5—In no case shall any wife approach him by stealth and obtain a running start before shoving.

"I also think," said Mr. Twitchell, "that before shoving me off a dock my wife should agree to see that my fishing rod is saved. It is pretty hard to get tackle this year.

Donald Nelson has issued orders permitting the manufacture of many items cut off during the war. The list includes bobby pins, electric pads, garbage cans, escalators, bicycles, vacuum bottles and bottle openers. Ho, for the open road again!

The order also permits the manufacture of wire coat hangers. This depresses us no end. We had hoped the postwar world would definitely exclude them.

Factories may also reconvert to making insecticide spray guns, too, a sufficient supply to take care of the Nazis having been assured to the forces abroad.

The Japs have a new slogan: "Iki, waki, konki, sookeeki." It makes about as much sense as their war effort.

Iki, waki, konki sookeeki. For the Japs the outlook's bleeky; How they wish their hopes so weaky; They had never been so sneaky!

The WPB is permitting the production of some auto replacement parts. Those rattles had become so loud that they were getting to be a definite blow at morale.

It will seem good to go to a garage now and not have them demand "Don't you know there's a war on?" when you ask if there's any chance to buy a couple of bolt-washers.

German Road Blocks Fail to Halt Allies

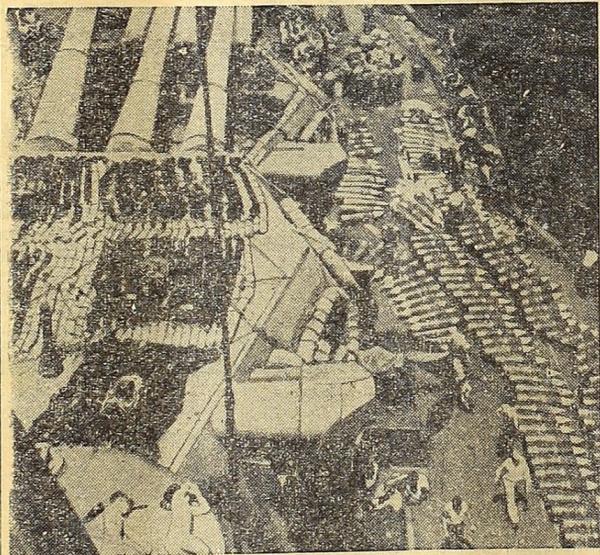

The Germans spend considerable time and supplies in erecting blockades which prevent the rapid advance of the Allied armies. The blockades had little effect as noted by rapid progress being made in France. Left, is a German road block along the water front in St. Raphael, southern France. Another type of block, shown at right, was used in Paris.

Chinese Soldiers Cross Treacherous River

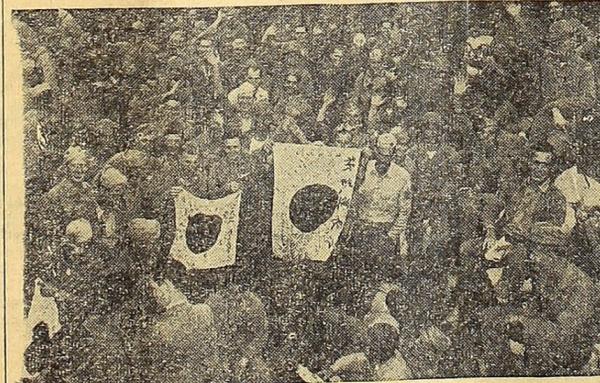

Chinese soldiers march to the front crossing the treacherous Salween river by means of a temporary suspension bridge. The original bridge was blown up by the Chinese as a measure against the Japanese advance. All supplies for the Chinese forces in this district have to be carried by Chinese on their backs or dropped by planes. Increased transport planes have made it possible to begin to furnish the fighting Chinese in the Salween river section with much needed weapons, food and other supplies.

Ship Loaded With Jap Death

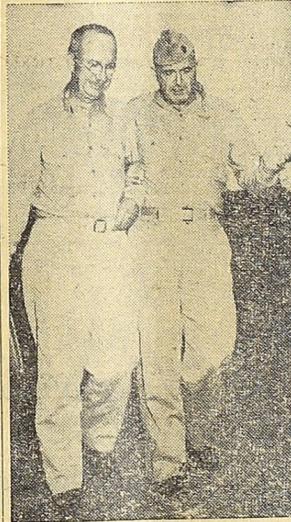

Rows of huge shells wind along the decks of a U. S. battleship as it loads up somewhere in the Pacific preparatory to carrying out its assignment of blasting Jap holdings. The inferno loosed by its guns cleared a path for the landing forces, which were then able to send a landing party ashore to capture the base.

Marine Vets Return Home

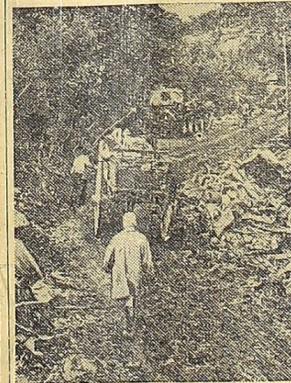

Home for the first time in 30 months, some 300 marines of the Second division, heroes of fighting the Japs on Guadalcanal, Saipan, Tarawa and Tinian, shouted with joy as their transport docked in San Francisco. Sixty-five of the returning heroes were casualties, sick or recovering from battle wounds. They display captured Jap flags.

WHEN you are adding up the higher spots of 1944 in a sporting way, don't overlook the rebound of one Joe Medwick of Mel Ott's Giants. This has taken place in his 15th year of pro baseball, the greater part of it spent with the Cardinals, Dodgers and Giants.

Apparently well over the hill through 1943, Medwick has suddenly turned to prove that his batting eye is still intact by keeping in close pursuit of Dixie Walker and Stan Musial for the batting championship of the National league. Joe hasn't the speed and dash that he once carried to the field, but he can still handle a bat.

Grantland Rice

It was just 10 years ago when Medwick first came to national fame by batting .379 in the Cardinal-Tiger World series and acting as the leading target for a barrage of Detroit tomatoes, lemons, apples—in fact, anything Tiger fans could find to peg in his general direction. The tumult and the shouting grew so loud that Judge Landis had Medwick removed from the famous World series battle to prevent a riot.

Joe was the type that played the game out to the limit and his fiery temper was no great soothing force. But he was a great outfielder who could hit, run, throw and cover his territory when the Gas House Gang was at its peak.

He hit .353 in 1935, .351 in 1936 and .374 in 1937, his peak year, when he was named the National league's most valuable player.

Shortly after this he was traded to the Dodgers where the beaming he took in 1940 was no help.

In the 1942 campaign Medwick dropped to an even .300, which is still supposed to be a pretty fair mark, so in 1943 he was traded to the Giants. Joe wasn't any too hot last season. But while he has been no consistent ball of flame this summer on the defensive side, which is a natural matter after 15 years, he has shown that he can still use a baseball bat.

Colorful Ball Club

My first meeting with Medwick took place at Bradenton, Fla., in the spring of 1935. I went down to put in a week's visit with Dizzy Dean, where I ran across the most colorful ball club I've ever known.

Frank Frisch was the manager then. Dizzy and Paul Dean were the two leading pitchers. Pepper Martin apparently was trying to wreck himself diving into bases through exhibition games.

Leo Durocher and Medwick were pals. I dropped by to call on Durocher and Medwick one day and ran across more suits of clothes than Adolph Menjou ever wore. Medwick suggested a golf game next day against two rugged opponents I felt we couldn't beat.

In the next day's round at St. Petersburg Medwick had a 70, which included a 7 on a short par 3 hole. His long and his short game were both high class and he has remained one of the better ball playing golfers.

As strong as the Cardinals were around that time, Medwick remained their star for some years, a fine outfielder and one of the best hitters the National league ever knew over a stretch of time.

"I suppose one of the reasons I've held up," Medwick says, "is that I've tried to keep in shape, especially my legs, before any training season ever started. Too many ball players wait until a training campaign opens to get back in condition."

Medwick, born in Carteret, N. J., is now 33 years old.

While the N.L. batting race has been a hot scramble between Musial and Dixie Walker, with Hopp also in the running, it would be no great shock to see the old-timer who has a lifetime batting mark above .325 give all three a ride down the stretch.

When the present season opened up no one figured that two such veterans would be up there with the brilliant Musial around Labor day. The Cardinal was supposed to be a kick in for his second year in succession. He is one of the best young hitters that baseball has known in years. But the two old-time hitters, Walker and Medwick, refuse to be shaken loose with only a month of play left.

After all, the arms and the legs may begin to develop kinks but the batting eye is the last to go.

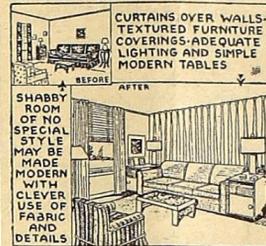

Football Material

We were wondering where all the good football players were coming from this fall. I asked Chip Robert, one of the leading factors in southern football for over 20 years.

"The woods are packed with good football players," Chip said. "You ought to know in the South alone how many young fellows, under 18, there are who can pass, run and kick. The same thing is true all over the map. It has largely been a matter of getting many of them into college."

The Use of Fabric and Thread in Decorating Homes of Tomorrow

By Ruth Wyeth Spears

NOTE—You do not have to wait for your home of tomorrow to have the attractive coffee table shown in this sketch. It is easy to make from straight cuts of lumber. A map, a favorite print or a piece of hand work may be placed under the glass top to give a decorative effect. Ask for pattern No. 254 and enclose 15 cents. Address:

IF YOU are dreaming about re-decorating after the war—and who is not—put this in your note book. There will be a more lavish use of fabric in home decoration than ever before. There will be many new types of textiles and many new weaves. Fabrics will be designed to wear longer and to stay clean longer. A feeling of spaciousness will be obtained by blotting out some walls with curtains. Irregular or badly proportioned spaces will be brought into harmony by covering parts of them; and small windows will be made to seem high and wide by covering the wall around them.

The homemaker who can sew a straight seam will save many a dollar for she may have curtains of any length, width or fullness merely by stitching straightwidths together. And here is a decorator's tip for her—allow a hundred and fifty per cent fullness if French pleats are to be used at the top of curtains; and set the machine for a long stitch for speed. Clip selvages every few inches to avoid puckered seams and hems.

Multiple Births

The number of multiple births in the U. S. since 1920 has averaged annually 21,747 sets of twins, 218 sets of triplets, and three sets of quadruplets.

And it's a wise decision she's made, because all the engineering and manufacturing skill that have helped us do a good war job will be applied to the production of fine radios for civilian use.

A great line of table and portable models, farm sets and combinations will be available right after the war. It'll be worth while waiting for Clarion!

School NOTES...

High School
The Senior class voted to secure caps and gowns from the Inter-Collegiate Cap and Gown Company. The representative of this company called on the Seniors this week, and they decided to have maroon gowns with maroon and white tassels.

Betty Winn, who has been attending school in Oscoda, has transferred to our 11th grade.

The school issued 284 A gas aton book at school house on Monday and Tuesday.

The Seniors had their first class meeting last week. The purpose of the meeting was to elect Class officers. The following were elected: Janette Montgomery, president; Lillian Birkenbach, vice president; Donna Moore, secretary, and Ardith Lake, treasurer.

The Junior Class ordered their rings and are now bringing their money to school for them. The rings will not be delivered until February or March. They were secured from the H. R. Terryberry Company of Grand Rapids.

Most of the high school students enjoyed their half-holidays of Monday and Tuesday during the gas rationing program.

A large number of high school boys went duck hunting Wednesday. Not too many reported getting ducks.

The United States Office of Education, the Office of War Information, and the War Manpower Commission are all supporting the effort to induce young men and women of high school age to remain in school despite temptations which tend to lure from classroom. If a large number of youth of the United States are not in school today, the development of the nation will be impeded from the scientific, the cultural, and the political standpoint.

7th and 8th Grades

The Seventh and Eighth elected the following class officers Wednesday:

Eighth Grade—Herbert Look, president; Leo Burch, vice president; Chester Smyczynski, secretary; Virginia Sims, treasurer.

Seventh Grade—Bruce Myles, president; Geraldine McArdle, vice president; Stanley Brown, secretary; Harold Coates, treasurer.

The Seventh Graders are studying the explorers, and the Eighth Graders, the Civil War for history.

5th and 6th Grades

We have 41 pupils in our room—26 Fifth Graders and 15 Sixth Graders.

Mr. Giddings gave us a new soft ball.

Our room plans to buy Defense Stamps every Friday morning. Francis Yanna and Shirley Allen will have charge of the sales.

Mr. Amschuetz has been trying to find enough desks for everyone in our room. Some pupils have had to sit in chairs.

Mary Ostrander, Katherine Ostrander and James Misener are the only new pupils in our room who didn't attend school here last year.

3rd and 4th Grades

We have a new pupil in the Fourth Grade—Ralph Braden from Flint.

Junior McDonald brought some things to school to show us what the German soldiers used. We were glad to see them and find out what they looked like.

Bertha Mae Johnson of National City visited our room Monday and Tuesday.

Several of our boys and girls are bringing in some very interesting things for nature study.

1st and 2nd Grades

We are very much interested in nature study for language.

We have watched Monarch caterpillars change into the chrysalis stage, and are waiting for them to turn to butterflies. We have also observed crayfish and learned interesting things about them.

We have colored autumn leaves and gathered different kinds of leaves. We have also learned the use to which millweed floss is put.

John and Charles Engle are absent because of whooping cough.

Kindergarten News

We nine little folks are getting acquainted. We like to play games and we are learning to play our stories. We have been playing "The Lion and Mouse" story this week.

Two games we play are center ball and we can dance the chop dance. When it's recess time we play follow the leader.

We went for a walk one morning and gathered colored leaves; then we made some colored leaves.
