After leaving the floor at half-time leading 49 to 41, the Monarch's came back to pile up 70 points in the second half to win going away. In seven games to date, Mgr. L. Pfeiffers' Monarch's have amassed 602 points to their opponents 354 for an 86 point average per game. Crippled by the loss of Bill Ludwig and Pat Erickson being in the Navy, Don Westcott and Bruce Myles have carried the scoring load for Tawas. Tate's performance in the Hale game was outstanding as was Herb Looks' excellent backboard play.

Don Westcott has scored 196 points for a 28 point average thus far this season. The Monarch's are not scheduled for home games this week because of the District High School Tournament.

Reelected District MLE President

Dorance Bellville Again to Head Iosco-Alcona Group

Local members of the Iosco-Alcona District of the Michigan Livestock Exchange reelected Dorance Bellville president at their annual meeting which was held at the Whittemore School Friday.

James Mielock, director, and Ike Walton, manager of the state association, and Don Stark, extension specialist in agricultural economics, Michigan State College, were the speakers. Mr. Mielock, who has been director for the past several years, stated that he was proud of the fact that he could have been associated with the board of directors during the long pull from shaky organization to the largest livestock marketing organization in Michigan. Mr. Mielock's term as director expires this year, but he declares he is not a candidate again. He stated that it is his belief that new blood should be introduced in the organization and it is his desire to make way for it.

Mr. Walton reviewed the progress of this outstanding farmer's cooperative marketing organization and stated that it had nearly tripled in volume of business in the last five years. He told of the new marketing centers that the exchange was now operating. Besides Detroit, they operate markets at Battle Creek, Portland and St. Louis.

The "livestock industry in Michigan amounted to over 150 million dollars in 1950," said Mr. Stark in his discussion of the livestock marketing situation. He said he felt that prices will remain favorable in 1951. The government's demand for all out production of food and the efficient use of roughages and pastures puts the livestock producer in a favorable position.

Casper Blumer, county agent of Alcona and Oscoda counties, led an open discussion in which problems of the local marketing situation were brought out.

The officers and delegates elected for 1951 are: Dorance Bellville, president; Gerald Bellen, vice president; James Sturtevant, secretary; Ed Robinson, Martin Siegrist, Wilbur Runyan and Henry Gingrich of Iosco county and Kenneth Lilley of Alcona county, delegates. All eight delegates, James Mielock and Harold Clark, county agricultural agent, will attend the annual meeting at Lansing, March 10.

the head of the column of car owners, but during the first three days of this week County Clerk McKenzie and his assistants, Mrs. McKenzie and Mrs. Dorothy Bubltz, issued 1412 license plates to motor vehicle owners.

Classified the plates were as follows: passenger cars 1087, commercial trucks 183, farm trucks 96 and 46 trailers.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Gov. Dewey Breaks With Top GOP Leaders on Arms Aid to Europe; Farm Aid Needed to Kill Rackets

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

DEWEY:

Breaks With Top Men

The hints at a serious rift in policy within the Republican party during the past few months took on definite form when Gov. Thomas E. Dewey took sharp issue with such top G.O.P. leaders as Taft of Ohio, Wherry of Nebraska, and former president Herbert Hoover over the defense of Europe.

In one of the bluntest statements ever made by Dewey, the New York governor said it would be "utmost of folly" to depend upon sea and air power to protect the U.S. against Communist aggression. He added, "Anyone who thinks you can defend the United States or any substantial part of the world with any two out of three branches of the armed forces, is ignoring every lesson of history."

He then urged faster mobilization and sending more American troops to Europe immediately. He said he felt the deployment of troops was no business of Congress.

This viewpoint is the exact opposite of Taft, Wherry and Hoover who have repeatedly demanded no more American troops be sent to Europe without prior approval of congress. They have also urged placing our faith in defense on overwhelming sea and air power.

Thus develops the serious rift within the Republican party that could have far-reaching results within the coming year. Politically it could mean that Dewey is dead as a possible G.O.P. standard bearer in 1952.

On the other hand, if Dewey's thinking is the expression of the majority of the Republican party, it could mean Taft, Wherry and Hoover will be stamped isolationists and doomed to ultimate oblivion.

In this connection, it was interesting to note that Dewey said, "Any isolationist speech is an aid to Stalin."

FARMERS:

Must Help Curb Rackets

With the government's order limiting the number of slaughterhouses that will be permitted to operate and the amount of livestock they can butcher, it became apparent it is going to take patriotism down on the farm to keep meat off the black market.

While big and middle-size slaughterers who provide most of the steaks and chops for the dinner table will be licensed, several hundred thousand farmers who usually butcher a few hogs, sheep for their own consumption or for local sale are exempt.

While these farmers right now don't account for much of the meat eaten in the United States, they are a potential headache for price controllers. During World War II many farmers sat up their own barnyard slaughterhouses with no more equipment than a tree, a rope, an ax, and a butcher knife.

It wasn't very sanitary, but plenty of racketeers were willing to buy the meat at fancy prices and truck it into the cities for sale at even fancier black market prices.

Price control officials are afraid that some farmers exempted from the slaughtering regulation might be lured into illicit butchering by the prospect of easy money. The job of keeping check on the farmers would require an army of enforcement agents, and is impossible under present conditions. For that reason it will take a lot of patriotism down on the farm if present slaughter regulations are to be enforced.

HOLLYWOOD:

Unpleasant Publicity

Hollywood, that land of make-believe so often in the headlines, appeared in line for considerable more publicity, but of an unpleasant nature.

The new avalanche began to roll when the house un-American activities committee announced plans to investigate certain Hollywood actors that would "inevitably" lead to a revival of the communism-in-Hollywood case.

In 1947 the committee investigated Communist influences in the movie capital in long and sensational hearings with the result that 10 writers and directors were convicted of contempt of congress for refusing to say whether they had ever been Communists. All went to jail.

The new hearings may do considerable good, but as in all such investigations, some innocent people can expect to be hurt.

EDUCATION

College Enrollment Drop Is Expected

Mobilization is having a drastic effect on colleges throughout the nation. A recent survey of American universities and colleges revealed that most institutions predict they will lose 25 to 50 per cent of their students before the end of this year.

Such a drop in enrollment will result in a sharp cut-back of faculty members, possibly as many as 20,000 to 25,000, who will be dismissed from their jobs or will not be replaced when they leave for military duty or war jobs, the survey revealed.

The drop in student enrollment is causing college officials serious concern. They report a decline of 5 to 10 per cent in enrollment for the spring semester which began in January.

Hitch-Hiker

William J. Newton, Jr., who first made headlines last August when he landed a seaplane at sea beside the "iron curtain" liner Batory and got into trouble with the FBI, is shown (left) as he was interviewed by correspondent Frank Conniff, after he turned up in Korea. Newton said he had hitch-hiked 12,000 miles to "kill some Communists" to clear his name of the taint of communism. The 8th army gave him a physical, turned him down as unfit.

PRICES:

Reach Record Level

The American public found itself in a strange position, one which it did not entirely understand and which presented frightening possibilities for the future.

The situation began to develop some weeks ago with the enactment of price-wage controls, which most people believed would halt the cost of living spiral. Shortly after the "freeze" went into force, numerous loopholes in the plan were made known by which many foods could jump from 5 to 200 per cent.

Later the gullible public was told by the bureau of labor statistics that wholesale prices reached a new record high despite the "price freeze." The main increases were in prices of food and farm products.

This, of course, caused immediate rumblings in labor's ranks. In turn, Secretary of Agriculture Brannan defended farmers against the charges that farm prices were "unreasonably high."

Economic stabilization administrator Eric Johnston, who has the most thankless job in the United States today, issued a statement saying that prices may advance a few more months and finally level off in mid-summer.

The average American had no desire to see any one group of the nation's economy — farmers, laborers, manufacturers — unjustly bear the greatest burden of price and wage controls. But the average American was worried about how far he could stretch his pay check without drastically lowering his standard of living. He wanted to know if he could stand it until the midsummer leveling-off took place?

KOREA:

Reds Counterattack

With stunning force and typical blood-curdling methods, complete with suicidal charges, bugle-blowing, bell ringing, whistle-tooting, and drum-beating, Chinese Communists launched a counterdrive against U.N. forces in central Korea.

The counterattack stalled the U.N. advance that began late in January and which had approached Seoul.

Eighth army officers reported elements of nine Chinese divisions and six Korean divisions were used in the counterattack.

At full strength this would mean as many as 150,000 to 200,000 men. However, heavy casualties had been inflicted on the Communists since the U.N. offensive began. Officials claimed Red casualties, by ground action alone, totaled 80,121.

Some military observers believed Communist armies in Korea had been hurt so seriously in recent weeks they could not continue an offensive for a long period of time. Others, however, were cautious with their predictions, remembering the overwhelming manpower available to the Communist cause.

Morale was reported high among U.N. troops during recent weeks as they pushed slowly toward the 38th parallel.

JAPAN:

Progress Toward Treaty

Preliminary steps for a peace treaty between the United States and Japan appeared successfully completed with the announcement that the basic points of a defense agreement to be guaranteed by American power has been agreed upon.

Japan has become more important to American security since the Communist plan of conquest in Asia became clear. The proposed peace treaty hinged on future security measure in Japan.

The security guarantee includes stationing of U.S. armed forces in and about the country. No time limit will be specified and U.S. troops might be stationed in Japan for many years.

And while the arrangement lasts, an attack on Japan would be considered the same as an attack on the United States.

American policy has leaned heavily toward a free and strong Japan as a balancing factor in the Pacific. The United States does not want to place heavy economic or financial burdens or major commercial disabilities upon Japan.

In this respect, however, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand may not agree fully with the United States.

BIG-FOUR:

Meeting Proposed

The United States, Britain and France were reported willing to hold a meeting of the Big Four foreign ministers in Paris sometime during March. Whether or not the Russians would consent is another matter. No one is willing to make a guess.

One of the main problems of such a meeting would be to get the four nations to agree before the meeting took place on just what they would talk about. Britain and France appeared willing to have deputies of the Big Four meet and work out an agenda. The United States wanted to list some of the topics that should be included.

The United States wants to talk about the rearmament of western Germany, eastern Germany, the Soviet Union, and the Communist satellites in the Balkans. Russia would never consent to such an agenda.

It became apparent from the approach of all four governments that nobody expected much to come out of another Big Four meeting. They may meet but it will produce nothing except more frayed nerves and propaganda blasts.

BUDGET:

Congress Accepts Dare

President Truman in presenting his budget to congress said it was a good tight one and dared the legislators to trim it. Evidently congress is going to accept Mr. Truman's dare.

Several Democrats and Republicans at least have promised to do so. Senator George of Georgia, chairman of the powerful senate finance committee which will handle the tax bills to pay for the budget, said it could be cut $5 to $8 billion "without harm."

Senator Bridges of New Hampshire, ranking Republican on the senate appropriations committee, termed the President's program "as full of water as a field of melting snow." He urged the senate to squeeze the "water" out.

On the other hand, Senator McMahon of Connecticut asserted talk of a $6 billion cut in nondefense items was "fakery—it can't be done."

Whatever Mr. Truman's motives for making the dare, he certainly stirred up opposition in congress. The battle may be bitter before it is over.

Engineer

Joseph H. Fitzsimmons, engineer of the Pennsylvania railroad commuter train that met disaster at Woodbridge, N.J., was recovering from injuries received in the crash. He reportedly admitted that he was speeding at 50 miles an hour at the time of the wreck over a stretch of track where speed was supposed to be a maximum of 25 miles per hour. The wreck death toll was 83. Approximately 500 injured.

IRAN:

Red Gift to Royalty

Joseph Stalin's gift of a $150,000 mink coat and a desk set studded with black diamonds to Iran's Shah of Shahs and his new bride caused a number of lifted eyebrows in diplomatic circles.

It is not unusual for presidents, kings and even dictators to send each other presents on important occasions, but Stalin's gift to the Shah of Iran was viewed with deeper meaning than mere respect for the head of one state to another.

FROZEN BODIES OF KOREAN CIVILIANS . . . As the United Nations forces advance northward along the trail of the Red army's retreat, they come upon the remains of thousands of helpless victims who have been left behind by the North Koreans and Chinese Communists to perish in the sub-zero weather. Here the frozen bodies of a father and son lie as they were found by an American graves registration unit 100 yards off the road a mile south of Osan. In cases where victims can be identified as husband and wife, they are buried in the same grave. Mothers and children are always buried together.

TO FOUR HEROIC CHAPLAINS . . . President Harry S. Truman, with Maj. Gen. William J. Donovan (center) and Rev. Daniel A. Poling, father of one of the heroic four chaplains, look at a mural depicting the heroic chaplains who perished in World War II in the sinking of the transport Dorchester. The four chaplains, a Catholic, two Protestants, and a Jew, gave their lives in an attempt to save G.I.'s aboard the vessel. President Truman was on hand to dedicate the chapel to the four chaplains. The chapel that has been constructed in memory of these religious heroes stands in Philadelphia.

CAREFUL SUICIDE . . . Los Angeles police carry the body of Nathan Goldberg, 71, from the apartment where the elderly man committed suicide. As Goldberg made preparations to join his late wife, Minnie, who died two months ago, he carefully lettered two three-foot signs to warn others of escaping gas and then lay down by a gas jet and inhaled the fatal fumes. Signs warn visitors not to strike matches and advise them to call the police upon discovery of his body.

PUNISHED FOR LYING . . . Former commerce department official, William Renington (left), shakes hands with his attorney, William Chanler, after he was sentenced to five years and fined $2,000 for perjury. He was accused of lying when he denied ever being a Red. The courts thought otherwise, thus the perjury charge. The punishment was not given him for his alleged Communism but for denying that he ever was affiliated with the Communist party.

"GAT THIS!" . . . Valentine's gone, but Marilyn Monroe is out to hit your heart just the same. The Hollywood star wants to know "Will You Love Me in December?" At least, that's the name the script for her new picture carries.

A Second Warning

IT WAS JUST about five years ago that General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower addressed members of the house and the senate in the auditorium of the library of congress. On that occasion he was fresh from the allied victories on the battlefields of Europe and he plead with members of the congress in an attempt to quell the national outcry for a swift and vast demobilization of the American army, navy and air forces. He predicted what would happen, and it has happened. But the senators and the representatives, who curiously become overnight statesmen when they get down to Washington, thought they knew more about world affairs than did General Eisenhower and they thought more about their reelection than they did the future of this nation.

In short, they made this country impotent and weak and they threw overboard the billions spent in building up the most powerful nation on the globe. They put the navy in mothballs, they demobilized the army as fast the the men could be brought home and they scrapped thousands of planes and refused to listen to the warning of the one man, who knew more about what was coming than these congressmen ever could know. And the people of the nation aided and abetted the sabotage.

Only a few days ago, General Eisenhower played a return engagement to the auditorium of the library of congress. He was fresh from a speedy tour of the capitals of our European allies. And he told the members of the congress that no weaseling logic on their part can drown the fact that it is the duty of this nation, for our own preservation and for the preservation of our democratic institutions, to immediately send men and munitions and arms to a rejuvenated western Europe if we expect to stop the communist hordes of Russia and her satellites.

He told them he would not be put in a straight-jacket, that he wanted to be left, as supreme commander-in-chief of the allied armies, in a flexible position to have as many men and munitions and arms as necessary to do the job. He fully and completely upheld the position of the Truman administration and the plans of Secretary of Defense George Marshall, his old-time chief of staff in World War II days, to bolster European armies and European defense production with our own divisions and our own production for national defense. The question is, will the congress and the American people listen to him today?

Weaseling Logic

There are some with "weaseling logic," as General Eisenhower describes it, who are dragging their feet. They are suspicious of our neighbors in the Atlantic pact. They are even suspicious of the American people, an outgrowth of McCarthyism, which sees a golem behind every pillar on every building in the nation's capital. They are the same men, generally, who refused to listen to General Eisenhower five years ago. You can name them on the fingers of two hands, but they are vociferous and articulate and they have followers in high places. They take great pains to get their names in the newspapers, talk on the radio and be seen on television.

Will Preserve Peace

General Eisenhower told the American people that if this country seized the lead now, "we will preserve and be worthy of our own past. Our children will dwell in peace. They will dwell in freedom. They will read the history of this decade with tingling pride, and, from their kinship with this generation, they will inherit more than can be expressed in millions, in acres, or in world acclaim."

These are perilous times. Charles E. Wilson, president of General Electric and boss of the office of defense mobilization, told railroad strikers the other day that Communists could not hope to be as effective if they started a full-scale campaign of sabotage. Not to back up General Eisenhower to the hilt, in the opinion of this reporter, is sabotage of a much more flagrant nature. We refused to listen to him five years ago. Let's heed his words and his warning today.

Washington Silhouettes

A bill is expected soon authorizing construction of federal buildings to house about 40,000 workers within a 20-mile radius of the city. Government savings bonds have now turned into defense bonds. CIVIL DEFENSE Knowledge of Biological Warfare Is Vital Link in Civil Defense

(This is the third of a series of articles on civil defense by Walter A. Shead, Western Newspaper Union's Washington correspondent.) By WALTER A. SHEAD WASHINGTON, D.C. — With an enemy which places no value whatever upon the lives of individuals, which have no moral scruples as we know them, an atomic bomb is not the only peril faced by the American people in an all-out war with Russia.

Biological warfare against people and against animals is one of these perils. This sort of warfare which can spread a wide variety of disease including a number of viruses, rickettsiae, bacteria, fungi, protozoa and soluble toxins, may be waged from within by sabotage, or from without by enemy planes and can be disseminated through a variety of media, chief of which are food, air and water. These infectious diseases taken in by humans through inhalation, absorption through the skin or by food, could be disseminated by aerial bombs and other munitions, by release of infectious aerosols from planes or from ground devices, taking advantage of favorable winds, or by release in ventilating systems of large auditoriums. Particularly effective is contamination of water sources.

In addition to humans, biological warfare against animals can be effective since meat, dairy and poultry products are an important source of diet for both military and civilian personnel. Production of wool and leather, might be curtailed and important biologicals and pharmaceuticals such as adrenalin, liver extract and insulin, entirely dependent upon animal glands and organs, could be cut off.

Such animal diseases as foot-and-mouth disease, rinderpest, fowl pest and foreign types of Newcastle disease appear to have greater possibilities for damage in this country.

ON MARCH 4 "Theatre Guild on the Air" plans to do a full hour-and-a-half hour broadcast of "Hamlet", which will certainly be heard by the largest single audience that has ever heard it since Shakespeare wrote the play centuries ago. It will come from the stage of the Belasco Theatre in New York and will be heard over the full NBC network. Stars will be Dorothy McGuire of the movies and Pamela Brown and John Gielgud of the theatre, both now appearing in one of the season's hits, "The Lady's Not for Burning". "Hamlet" was modernized for GI's during the war, and the broadcast will follow along that line.

Irene Vernon, whose latest picture is "Sound of Fury" (a Robert Stillman production for United Artists), is one of the four judges who will hand out 15 savings bonds to the winners of the Num-Zit baby beauty contest. It's open to infants from 6½ months to 2½ years old, from March 1 to June 1. Entry blanks available at all drugstores.

Then there is biological warfare against crops in the spread of insect pests and plant diseases which constitute a threat to our food supply. It would be comparatively easy for low flying planes to spread such crop and animal diseases across the vast stretches of the country's great plains where wheat, oats and the meat animals are raised and where population is comparatively meager. The department of agriculture knows about many of these foreign pests such as Japanese beetle, European corn borer, Mediterranean fruit fly, citrus canker and other pests. Our most successful method of keeping down losses is development of strains resistant to specific diseases, which takes time. But it is likely that new organisms which present crop varieties cannot resist, may be introduced, even in peace time, and herbicidal chemicals might be disseminated openly over these vast crop areas where hostile planes might gain access.

OF COURSE CONSTANT vigilance, before-hand knowledge how to detect the effect of biological warfare on both humans and animals, the proper method of fighting the effects, and how state, towns, cities, and counties can be organized to fight these perils is a function of the civil defense administration. Probably one of the most insidious and dangerous methods of chemical warfare is the dissemination of so-called nerve gases, developed in Germany during World War II. These nerve gases are more toxic than any previously known war gases and are nearly colorless and odorless. They are liquids which yield toxic vapors when they evaporate and are laid down near the ground. These gases cut off breathing and blood circulation. Action is prompt and lethal and inhalation for a few seconds may cause death. Exposure to mild traces of the vapor causes bronchial restriction with difficulty in breathing, coughing and a water discharge of the nose. A slightly greater exposure induces painful constriction of eye muscles, terrific pain back of the eye-balls. Larger doses cause rapid and severe broncho-spasms, preventing both inhalation and exhalation. The victim becomes confused and cyanotic, may have nausea and vomiting and falls unconscious. The blood pressure falls, heart beat is slowed and may or may not start again.

The U.S. public health service has worked out treatments for all these inhuman forms of modern warfare in the biological and chemical field. The point is in learning how to combat it; what treatments to give in emergencies and in the long pull for recovery; to pile up stocks of the right kind of medicines, particularly atropine and tridione, plenty of gas masks, protective clothing, how to prevent contamination, hospitalization and a dozen other necessities in case of such an attack.

Doctors and veterinarians must take special courses in how to combat the effects and this professional manpower must come from the private ranks. Therefore full cooperation of the various state, county and local medical and related professional groups is essential. Be ready to volunteer.

(Next week's article will discuss national, state, and regional training centers in the civil defense program.)

THE FICTION CORNER BEWILDERED BOY

By Willard Olvan Persing

MY HANDS came up shoulder high. I didn't think the kid would use the gun intentionally, but scared and cold as he was his hand shook so much that I was more than a little worried. I wasn't going to startle him into waking any of the townspeople. They would find out plenty soon enough that I had been caught flat-footed by this teen-age bad man.

Otto was standing behind the counter, his hands resting easily on its scarred top. I couldn't figure it, but he was half smiling at the wild-eyed, boyish face that was half covered with a dirty white handkerchief.

"Sure, son," Otto was saying, "I'll give you the money, after I fix you a bite to eat."

The kid's eyes lit up for a moment, then he frowned and said, "You're trying to trick me into taking off the mask."

Otto shook his head slowly. "I'll put some sandwiches in a sack so you can take them with you." He turned his back on the kid and went to work at the sandwich board.

They seemed to have forgotten me, so I started edging around behind the youngster. I figured that was why Otto was stalling, but I had moved only a few inches when he stopped me.

"Take it easy, Joe, you're apt to ruin his appetite."

At these words from Otto, the kid spun around. I was staring at Otto, trying to figure out what in the world he had in mind. There wasn't any writing on the back of Otto's neck, and it was too deep for me, so

I hooked a stool with my toe and pulled it out where I could sit down

Otto turned around with a hamburger in his hand. He reached across the counter and handed it to me. "Maybe this will keep you out of mischief for a while," he said, grinning at my bewilderment.

After all, he was the one getting robbed, so I decided I might as well go along with whatever he was trying to do. All I stood to lose was maybe my job.

"This is the first time you've tried this?" Otto was asking the kid. The kid's head nodded quickly, then he frowned and said, "What difference does it make? Hurry up with those hamburgers."

I was checking the kid's description again to see if there was anything I had missed. He had brown eyes and was waving a Luger pistol at us. His hair, if any, was hidden under an old cap pulled down over his ears. I was still trying to figure out how much slack there was in the bulky overalls when Otto dumped the cash drawer out on top of the counter.

He counted the money into a paper sack and placed it a couple of feet from the sack of hamburgers. "Thirty dollars," he said to the kid, "not much pay for the chance you're taking."

The kid reached out and scooped the two sacks together, using both hands. His right hand with the Luger came to rest a few inches from Otto's stomach. Otto slammed a huge hand down over the kid's hand and gun, clamping them to the counter.

I started to yell at Otto, if that gun went off, he wouldn't have a chance.

"Take it easy, both of you," he told me and the squirming kid. "That gun isn't loaded." To me he said, "I'm surprised you couldn't tell by looking at the extractor."

I didn't have an answer for that. "That thirty dollars is your next two weeks wages," Otto told the kid, "and you can have all you want to eat." He slipped the gun out of the kid's fist and placed it out of sight under the counter.

The kid was still scared. "Aren't you going to tell the cops?" Otto grinned and pointed at me. "That's them, son."

The kid paled and wilted. That took all the fight out of him. I stared at the kid for a minute, then stood up and headed for the door. "Time to make my rounds," I said, "Otto, you should hire some young fellow to help out in here, you're getting too old to do it all yourself."

Lawn Painting With 2-4-D

To use 2-4-D effectively on small patches of spreading weeds, a paint brush is a practical applicator that will not spread the 2-4-D beyond the spot to be treated. Unless the brush is reserved for this use (and not used for sprinkling other broadleaf plants about the place with insecticides and fungicides), it should be thoroughly washed out with soap and warm water and left to stand overnight in a quart of water to which a teaspoonful of ammonia has been added.

Encephalitis in Humans

True encephalitis, mainly contracted by human beings from swine and cattle—first became a reportable human disease in 1923, when less than 100 cases were reported in the United States. In 1917 more than 6,000 human cases were reported. Approximately 35 per cent of human cases are caused by eating infected food products of animal origin. Such cases can be prevented by proper pasteurizing of milk products and cooking of all meat.

COUNTY AGENT GIVES TIPS TO IOSCO COUNTY DAIRYMEN

It takes a combination of good management and efficient feeding practices to obtain high milk production at low cost, says Harold R. Clark, county agricultural agent.

He cites information from C. R. Hoglund, Michigan State College agricultural economist which emphasizes the need for these factors.

First, Hoglund says, the more efficient dairymen are producing higher quality roughage. These dairymen tend to reduce corn silage feeding to 20 or 30 pounds a day and to get the cows to eat a maximum of this early harvested, high protein legume roughage. Many of these dairymen used to feed 40 to 50 pounds corn silage a day.

A second important practice that is being used by more and more successful dairymen is the production and feeding of grass silage during August and September when pastures are usually productive. Many of the least efficient dairymen either do not provide any supplementary feed during this period, or feed expensive grain and protein supplement in order to maintain milk production.

A third important practice followed by many dairymen is to reduce the amount of protein supplement fed. Dairy nutrition specialists state that where good quality roughage is available, no protein supplement needs to be added to the farm grain fed cows. Some successful dairymen have also reduced the amount of grain fed to cows, with the more efficient dairymen never feeding more than 14 to 16 pounds per cow a day.

Another practice emphasized by Hoglund is that of a more adequate system of records of production, feed and costs. A dairy farmer without adequate records is about in the same category as a clock without hands. He certainly cannot determine his costs and returns.

OUTLAW GUNS BY E.E. HALLERAN

THE STORY SO FAR:

During the course of his first evening in Mesa Verde, where he is investigating the disappearance of arms and ammunition along the border, Dan Frazer has collected three guns—one from Archie Scott, another agent, who was killed before he could tell Frazer the location of the munitions; one from Vince Gale, whom Frazer killed when he saw him trying to shoot Helen Bartell, and one from a man whom he knocked down in the act of attacking an old prospector. Frazer gives Helen, Scott's gun for her protection and retains the other two. In the hotel barroom, Ed Delaplane attempts to take the two guns from Frazer.

CHAPTER X

It was no great problem. Something rustled just beyond the door, and Frazer knew that the prowler's objective was this particular room. He could sense, rather than hear, the metallic rasp of the door latch being tried as he edged back, readying himself for almost anything. It might be that Carson Emery was coming back for another conference, or it might be that someone had discovered the mistake of the afternoon. This marauder of the night might be out to get the man they had failed to kill in the mountains.

The door opened an inch or two and he knew that he had guessed wrong again. The familiar tang of heavy perfume identified the intruder. The red-headed girl was coming back for another visit. But was she alone this time?

He let her come fairly into the room, then he reached out with his left hand to seize her in a grip which kept her helpless. She gasped, but smothered the sound as he whirled her out of the doorway. It was almost the only sound Dan made as he covered the dark hallway with his gun, trying to see whether anyone else was out there.

The girl fought savagely but in complete silence as he kept her practically helpless. He paid no attention until he was sure that she had been unaccompanied, then he nudged the door shut and ordered roughly, "Stop that clawing or I'll have to use both hands on you."

The Red-Headed Girl Invades Room Again

The threat sounded a little ridiculous in his own ears, but it seemed to impress the prisoner. The girl stopped her frantic kicking and whimpered, "You hurt."

"Sure. But what did you expect—prowling around here like this?" Her voice changed abruptly, its whine turning into something almost coy as she began, "Can't a girl...?"

"Don't give me any of that siren talk!" he interrupted. "I let you do it the other time, but I'm not that easy. Did you expect to stick a knife in my ribs, or was it to be a gun job?"

She tried to slap him again, so he kissed her—hard. Then he held her at arm's length and spoke grimly. "Get the idea?"

She surrendered. "All right. What do you want to know?"

He waited until she had seated herself in the chair by the window, then he asked grimly, "Who sent you this time?"

"Delaplane," she replied finally.

"Not your father?" he asked, trying to conceal his surprise.

"No."

"Did Delaplane tell you to look for the same thing your father sent you after the other time?"

"Why do you say my father sent me?"

"Don't duck the question. He sent you first and you went back to tell him that you had failed. Of course, you came back later after I left the room. Now tell it straight. What did each of them want?"

He managed to put as much menace into his voice as he thought would be effective.

"Father wanted to know whether you were really the man you claimed to be," she said doggedly. "I couldn't find anything to tell by."

"And Delaplane?"

"He wanted me to steal your guns."

"Sounds pretty fishy to me," he scoffed, still trying to make her talk freely.

"Let me tell you." Some of her anger had fled now. She was concerned, serious. "Bartell and a bunch of the mining people are planning to stir up a revolution over in Mexico so they'll have an excuse to step in and take control. They want to run the part of the country where they are locating some copper mines. What they don't seem to know is that they're not in the game alone. There's a bandit named Candino who's planning to step in at the right minute and take everything for himself. That will mean a big battle and some real fighting all along the border. If we don't have Candino's cut-throats roaring through Mesa Verde it will be mighty queer."

"So that's Delaplane's yarn, is it? What's he trying to do?"

"Don't sneer. It's the truth. Ed hopes that he can block the whole thing before it comes to a head."

"And why does he want my guns?" he asked sharply.

Again she hesitated, but this time came up with a reply. "Guns are not allowed in Mesa Verde," she said lamely.

He switched topics again, feeling that he would get nowhere by pressing either of the previous questions. "Where does your father stand on this deal?"

This time she was prompt, seemingly frank. "My father is helping Bartell."

Another Intruder Trapped by Frazer

"Why did he want you to search my stuff?"

"I think he was afraid you might be a Federal agent. He mentioned particularly that I should search for identification papers."

"No more than that?"

"No."

He considered her answers for several moments and in the intense silence of the room the next sound came loudly enough to startle both of them. A floor board had creaked somewhere in the direction of the stairs.

Frazer hissed warningly and took two silent strides toward the door.

She tried to slap him again, so he kissed her—hard. Then he held her at arm's length. "Get the idea?"

In the moment that his back was turned the girl went through the open window. He heard the rustle of her clothing and looked around just in time to see her drop out of sight. There was a thump from below and then the sound of footsteps. Frazer grinned in amusement but sobered quickly as another board creaked in the hallway. The traffic was getting heavy.

The door opened silently and Frazer could hear the soft breathing of the intruder. Still the unknown did not come into the room. Apparently he was waiting to see whether he had been heard. There was a long moment in which Frazer feared that his own breathing would be audible to the prowler. Then there was a soft shuffle as a man entered the room.

He moved directly to the washstand and picked up the gun. He was only a shadowy form against the window, but Frazer could see that he was a small man. He also realized that the fellow was pocketing the weapon. That was interesting—and highly significant.

The intruder seemed to hesitate, fumbling around at the washstand before turning toward the cot as though to continue his search. It must have been then that he realized the cot was empty. A nervous grunt escaped from his lips and he swung quickly toward the door.

Frazer met him grimly, swinging a hard fist to the point of the man's jaw. The fellow went down without even a grunt, his fall shaking the flimsy building. Instantly Frazer was upon him, recovering the gun even as he made certain that his victim was completely out.

Somewhere in the hotel voices were raised in irritated inquiry, but Frazer ignored them long enough to strike a match and study his man. Then, as the intruder began to stir painfully, he blew out the match and stepped out into the hall.

"Somebody come here a-runnin'," he yelled. "I got a burglar. Give me a hand, somebody."

He smothered a grin as he continued to yell, starting an uproar which was not quite enough to cover the hasty sounds of a man scrambling out of a window.

Frazer chuckled silently in the darkness and continued to shout an occasional comment until he had a crowd of serious men around him. Then he went back into his room and struck a light. Instantly he became broadly rueful. "Gosh! He got away. Musta slipped out the window while I was hollerin'."

He hurried to the window, still keeping up his act. "There he goes—through that alley. I saw him in the moonlight. Somebody get out and grab him!"

"What was the critter after?" a nightshirtd individual growled.

"Danged if I can make it out," Frazer confessed, scratching his head perplexedly. "I sorta dropped off to sleep without shuckin' out my clothes and the next thing I knew I heard this jasper fumblin' around. I jumped outa bed and caught him fair with a good solid punch. Then I hustled out into the hall and hollered for help. I reckon I wasn't more'n half awake or I'd ha' knowed betta."

Another man sniffed loudly and laughed. "Who's been drinking cologne in these here parts? Yo' sure yore burglar didn't wear skirts?"

Frazer managed to look properly confused and the bantering crowd gradually disappeared. Frazer grinned with quiet satisfaction when the room was clear, but the grin did not remain with him very long.

Dan Frazer Ponders Line-Up of Suspects

He reviewed the facts carefully. Ed Delaplane had tried twice to get those two guns, certainly not for the reason he had given. Then another prowler had made the attempt, a prowler who probably was the man who had killed The Duke. Did it mean that Delaplane and the left-handed gunman were working together, or were they simply after the same thing and working at cross purposes?

The night was nearly spent before he reached a conclusion that seemed to fit all of the contradictory terms in the problem. Even then sleep evaded him and he was up again at daybreak, having taken scarcely the proverbial forty winks. There was much to be done this morning, and it behooved him to start doing it without delay.

Indecision gripped him for a moment as he prepared to leave the room, but then he acted deliberately. Defying Carson Emery's peace rules, he tucked his own gun into his waistband where it would be concealed by the tail of the coat he had elected to wear. The other two weapons he left in plain sight on the washstand, first taking care to mark their positions carefully. He had every expectation of finding them gone when he returned, but there was a chance that the next searcher of the room would merely inspect them, and he wanted to know whether such an inspection had taken place. The chances of losing them was no longer a source of concern.

He went downstairs to find a half dozen men already attacking the pancakes, eggs and coffee which Sally Chew was hustling in from the kitchen.

The red-haired girl avoided his eye, attending strictly to her chores, and he wondered how much she knew about the final act of the past night's performance. He made no attempt to draw her into conversation, however, content to bolt his meal and get on with the business of the day.

His first stop after leaving the hotel was at the grubby little post office. He had been loath to entrust his messages to the sort of postmaster to be expected in a place like Mesa Verde, but it eased his mind to see old Pete helping with the outgoing mail. The stage driver had already displayed his jealous solicitude for postal integrity, so Frazer dropped his letters into the slot and went out with an eased mind.

A red sun was already glaring across the tops of the eastern ramparts and he could feel the early heat of it as he headed for Bartell's store. This would be the important call of the morning. Not only did he have important business to discuss with both Helen Bartell and her father, but there was always that other interest which had nothing to do with the troubles of the border. Even in time of danger a man couldn't very well avoid having ideas about a girl like Helen Bartell.

He found the store closed up tightly, the wooden shutters still on the front windows. Not wanting to create a disturbance in the street, he went around through the alley where Gale had lurked in ambush, and found himself in a back yard which separated the store from a fair sized stable. A man was there, harnessing a pair of sturdy bays to a buckboard. It was the wiry little prospector who had been rescued from the street the previous evening.

He ignored Frazer's greeting for a moment, then grinned in belated recognition. "Howdy, pard," he hailed. "I was wonderin' what happened to yo'. I ain't had a chance to thank yo' fer takin' care o' me last night. So thanks."

SCRIPTURE: Mark 10. DEVOTIONAL READING: Matthew 20:20-28.

Interruptions

Lesson for March 4, 1951

PEOPLE KEEP making your life shorter every day. For time is the stuff of which life is made, and you never do have a full 24 hours a day. After taking out what has to be spent in sleep, eating and so on, and taking out what has to be spent on your job, whatever it is, there still ought to be a few hours to call your own. But if you are like most people, you live from one interruption to another. If it isn't the telephone it's the door-bell. The more important you are, the more you are likely to be interrupted. Once there was a teacher who became president of the college where he had taught. In later years he mourned the change. "It seems to me," he said, "I never get a consecutive half-hour any more to think about anything. No day is ever what I planned. Life has become one long series of interruptions."

Dr. Foreman

THE LIFE of the Master himself, to judge from what we read in the Gospels, was a long series of interruptions. The tenth chapter of Mark is a good example. Jesus himself at this time had one great thing in mind: the Cross. He was going up to Jerusalem not to talk to beggars or to listen to lawyers' arguments or to hold interviews with puzzled young people. He was going to die.

Unscheduled Stops

A man on his death-bed might be spared interruptions. He could not be blamed if he said to interrupters one and all: "Sorry, I can't be bothered. See my assistants if there is anything you want done."

But Jesus did not say anything of the kind. He did not fume over the unscheduled stops on his life's highway. He took time to clear up misunderstandings; he took time for little children when even his best friends thought he ought not to be disturbed; he took time to answer the question of the rich young man; he did not brush off James and John when they came to him with their ill-considered petition; he even took time to take care of a beggar's need.

Ministries by the Wayside

JESUS DID not always take the initiative in every situation, though indeed he controlled every situation. When the Pharisees asked him about marriage he did not say, "Let's not talk about marriage; let me suggest the topic of salvation instead." When the young man ran up to him, Jesus did not ask: "Did you have an appointment for an interview?" Jesus not only did not resent other people's initiative. He never seems to have resented an interruption in his life.

Does this example of Jesus mean that we ought not to plan our days ahead of time, or that we ought never to try to "budget" our time? Must we never plan any project, but always wait till other people suggest what we are to do?

Not at all. The example of Jesus means that if and when interruptions occur, if we share his spirit we shall not be irritated by them or resent them. For what Jesus did, always, was to make use of the interruption. Each one was turned into a "Wayside Ministry." Indeed, a large part—some would say the larger part—of Jesus' life was made up of just such by-the-way ministries.

Life's By-the-Ways

HOW MANY of Jesus' teachings we would never have had, if no one had interrupted him or asked him questions! How many of his miracles would never have been done if he had refused to perform any but those he planned and scheduled himself! It is what we do "by the way" that makes up life's service, for the most part.

In Jesus' story of the Good Samaritan (no doubt an incident from real life) we are not told what were the original errands of the priest, the Levite and the Samaritan. Very likely the first two were on time for their appointments.

But the priest and the Levite missed a wonderful chance, just because the poor beaten traveler was not, so to speak, on their agenda. The Samaritan was delayed, and maybe bothered, by what he did for the man in trouble. But what he was willing to do by the way, something he had not planned for at all, won him the immortality of the Master's praise.

Grammy, 81, Drives Groton School Bus Fifty-Three Years

GROTON, Mass. — In 1898, Mrs. Lillian K. Clapp, contracted to drive pupils for the Groton town school. Now 81, white haired but robust, she is still driving after 53 years.

She used a horse and carriage back in 1898, with a sled in the winter. She had six passengers. The pay was $6 a week. (She gets $6 a day now.)

Some of the first group today are grandparents.

Hardly had Mrs. Clapp begun her venture as a "common carrier" than the horseless carriage appeared. She recalls how she herself sometimes joined in joshing a hapless motorist swathed in a duster as he reclined beneath his car.

She admits, too, that she was one of the last of the holdouts. Not until 1933 did she yield and buy a bus. She still has it.

Today a little swarm of grade schoolers rush to open bus door, shrilly shouting:

"Hello, Grammy! Hello, Grammy! Let's go."

And as her young passengers come aboard her lips count soundlessly. A lip reader would say she stopped at 28, before asking "Where's Jimmy?" The children chorus, "He's hiding under his seat."

"Sit up straight," admonishes Grammy, "and remember, no monkeyshines, or you'll have to walk home."

Grammy, who found time to rear two children herself, and has six grandchildren, is about through with bus driving. The school population is increasing. A larger bus is in order.

Grammy says, "At my age I don't think I'll buy a new one. I've persuaded the school superintendent to accept my resignation. You see, I'm a seamstress, too, and I have more work than I can handle. I'm self-supporting, and I plan to remain so."

Japanese Bath Attractions Now Include Baby Sitters

TOKYO, Japan — Tokyo has 1,400 public bathhouse operators and recently they have been going all-out for customers.

Some of the enticements include: Milk baths at 10 yen (about 3 cents), free soap, mineral water, free tea and baby sitters for the young mother trade.

Now a $300,000 three story turkish bath is under construction. It will offer all these, plus: A "perfume bath," a cabaret, a hotel, and hand picked beauties in bathing suits to give free massages.

New Fire Fighting Method Is Reported by Egyptian

CAIRO, Egypt—A new method of fighting fire was announced recently by Egypt's chief fire fighter, Col. Mohamed Mahfouz.

The colonel reports that through a new device ordinary air is sucked through a series of cleaners, then blown out onto a fire through a special nozzle after the oxygen content is reduced.

"You blow out a candle by moving air toward it," he said, "Well, in this you just blow a little harder to extinguish a bigger flame."

Mahfouz said the process could replace present methods of fire extinguishing, since it can be used for any type of flame and does not harm materials, as do water and many chemicals.

While reasonable precautions must be taken that the air jet does not fan the flame, there can be no bad chemical reaction when the air comes in contact with a flame.

One of the biggest and best arguments is the price and availability of the new device's chief component—ordinary, everyday breathing air.

Telephone Books Are Used To Repulse Bandit Attacks

NEW YORK — The magazine Tracks of the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad reports old telephone books are being used to make trains bulletproof in Central America.

The prevalence of bandits and political dissidents makes armored trains desirable, and one line installed double thick steel plates on their cars.

These were unsuccessful, because the bandits fired high powered rifles with bullets that penetrated the steel. Then it was suggested that old telephone books be packed in the air space in the walls. This worked so well that the line placed an order for 4,000 pounds of old New York telephone books.

Brass Orders Army Rookies Be Called Privates Again

WASHINGTON—The army again will call the rookie a private, instead of a recruit, for morale and administrative reasons.

Since August 1, 1948, soldiers in the first four months of basic training had been called recruits. But under the present accelerated training program, the army reported, many soldiers complete basic work in less than four months and go into specialist training still with the title of recruit. The army said it found this had a bad effect on morale.

AROUND THE HOUSE

To remove iodine stains, wrap a damp cloth around your finger, dip the end in fine powdered pumice and rub the spot carefully.

A bureau drawer, after Junior has removed the knobs for some obscure purposes of his own, can be opened by pressing a suction cup or rubber plunger against it.

A dry ink bottle with sediment still left in the bottom can still be made to produce ink simply by adding a little cold water to the sediment.

If there's a crack in your wooden salad or chopping bowl, get the of water. It's best kept in an old surface thoroughly clean and dry, then pour shellac into the crack. It should harden into a more or less permanent fix.

Homemade ink eradicator can be produced by whipping up a solution of one part of chlorinated laundry bleach and ten parts of iodine or mercurchrome bottle with a rubber stopper to withstand the destructive effect of the bleach, and with a glass rod as an applicator. Use it along with a blotter just like commercial eradicator, but don't expect it to work on typewriter ink.

Dust is one of the prime factors in shortening the life or lowering the efficiency of a typewriter. You can dust the machine in handy fashion with a chicken feather. Or, turn the blower nozzle of your vacuum cleaner on it.

If wax doesn't help and you have to resort to planing the drawer, do your planing on the sides and bottom of the drawer, and follow with a good waxing. Planing the top edges helps, all right, but it spoils the appearance of a drawer.

When wax polish begins to look streaky on the furniture, it's usually time to remove the old wax that's gotten mixed with dirt and has collected on the surface. Mild soap and lukewarm water will serve the purpose, but don't let the soap remain on the furniture for any length of time. Be sure, also, to polish or re-wax the furniture immediately after the washing.

When windy weather sets in, get a piece of rope long enough to reach from your clothesline to the ground. Tie one end of the rope to the middle of the clothesline, tie the other to an old flat iron or some heavy weight; and your line won't get twisted or be blown around.
