Christian Science

The fact that God's man is endowed with unquenchable strength and power will be brought out at Christian Science services Sunday in the lesson-sermon entitled "Life." Selections to be read from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy include the following (215:12): "Whatever is governed by God, is never for an instant deprived of the light and might of intelligence and life." The life-giving power of God is also set forth in passages from the Bible including the following (Psalms 27:1,4): "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid? One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his temple."

Is crabgrass one of your lawn pests? Recent inquiries seem to lead us to believe many folks are having trouble with it. Chlor-dane with a good grade of kerosene is still the best known crabgrass killer in lawns.

One-half pint of 72 percent chlordane in a gallon of kerosene will do the job in one application. That amount is enough for 1,000 square feet. The chlordane must be the liquid concentrate form, however. The wettable powder kind will not do the job.
Other crabgrass enemies include a spray oil, potassium cyanate and phenyl mercuric acetate. All three will do the job but more applications are needed than with chlordane and kerosene.
The chlordane should not be used on fescue grasses.
Some new compounds on the market now are being tested by Dr. Grigsby of Michigan State University. They are called organic compounds or arsonates. The researcher indicates the chemicals will have several advantages over others if they prove to be effective.
Good pasture provides the best, and the cheapest, feed for raising dairy heifers, but Larry Johnson, extension dairyman at Michigan State University, hastens to add: "Pasture alone won't do the right job."
Here are some suggestions that successful dairymen follow in raising young stock during the summer months:
Calves under six months of age should be kept in, or near, the barn so that grain and some hay can be fed. The rumen of the young calf is not yet developed enough to take from roughage all the nutrients it needs.
Extra concentrates must be fed to the calf to get it off to a good start, but a small pasture plot helps to provide sunshine and exercise. Small amounts of grass silage can be fed if no pasture plot is available.

Calves between six months and a year old can be turned out on pasture but should continue to get two or three pounds of grain a day for the best results and growth. It is best to keep calves in this age bracket in a separate place, otherwise older cows may swipe all the grain.
From a year old until about three months before the heifer is due to calve, good pasture alone will keep the animal growing satisfactorily. But if the pasture is not good, it will not provide enough protein, carbohydrate, vitamins and minerals.
Two checks will help determine if the heifers get enough feed:
The first is to watch the pasture to see if there is enough forage. This is easy with pastures close to the farm buildings. Pastures at a distance should be checked at least once a week. The second check is to observe growth of the heifers. The Morrison growth tables show that at 18 months of age a Holstein heifer should weigh about 860 pounds; a Guernsey, 660 pounds; a Jersey, 615, and an Ayrshire, 690. Dairymen usually can see if heifers are growing enough without bothering to weigh or tape the animals.
If pasture does not provide enough feed, then grass silage or hay should be made available. Water, salt and minerals are necessary, too, as part of the pasture feeding program. Shade should be available for protection on hot days.
Will calfhood vaccination prevent Brucellosis? It will help but it is not enough to give complete immunity.
To get complete prevention, good management, care of animals and close attention to calvings all are necessary.

MARY WORTH'S FAMILY

KERRY DRAKE

Dr. Glen Reed, extension veterinarian at Michigan State University, cites this experiment by the United States Department of Agriculture at Beltsville, Maryland.

One group of calves was vaccinated, another wasn't. Both groups were given a small drop of fetal fluid from an infected cow. None of the vaccinated calves got the disease while several of the unvaccinated animals did.
But when two similar groups of calves were given five to 15 drops of the contaminated fetal fluid, all of the animals, including the vaccinated ones, caught the disease.
That means, that vaccination does not do the protection job when there is excessive exposure. And the effects of the vaccination do not last much over two years in many cases. A vaccination at eight months usually is not effective when the cow reaches the age of three.
Tests of vaccinated calves sometimes do not indicate whether the animal is carrying the disease or is reacting from the vaccination. New regulations on tests of vaccinated animals give the owner some leeway, however.

Calendar:
July 19-22—Michigan Homemakers' Conference at Michigan State University, East Lansing.

Here is a call especially for "Mrs. Michigan"—any Michigan homemaker is invited to come to the Michigan Homemakers' Conference. It will be held next week, July 19-22, on the Michigan State University campus. About 1,400 homemakers will take advantage of this opportunity to learn up-to-date information in homemaking.
Besides the scheduled classes, there will be tours through the college of home economics on campus as well as through a home management house and through the large food operations on campus. One evening youngsters from 4-H Clubs will put on a talent show for entertainment. They will perform on Wednesday evening, July 20.
Various speakers are scheduled to bring interesting information and ideas to the 28th annual Homemakers' Conference. Miss Mary Taepke, home lighting specialist of the Detroit Edison Company, will talk about "There is Light in Your Future" on Thursday morning, July 21. That same day, but later on, Dr. David E. Molyneux will speak of "The Challenge of a Hungry World." He is the minister for the First Presbyterian Church in Flint. Then on Friday morning, July 22, Dr. Harold Sponberg from the continuing education service at Michigan State will address the group on the topic, "It is For Us, The Living."
If you are among the homemakers planning to attend the conference, you will be able to stay overnight at Shaw Hall dormitory on the campus. The four-day event carries a full program you won't want to miss and again those dates are July 19-22.
Lamp bulbs should never be even partly exposed, especially those not equipped with diffusing bowls. They should be toward the rear of chairs or sofas so that no bare bulbs are visible to anyone seated nearby in the room.
When you marinate the vegetables that go into a fresh vegetable salad, you add more flavor and also distribute the flavor better throughout the salad. What does "marinate" mean? Marinating is the process of letting foods stand in a liquid for a period of time before the foods are used.
