Supervisors OK District 4-H Director

On recommendation of its cooperative extension committee, Iosco County Board of Supervisors agreed to aid in the hiring of a district 4-H Club director at an added cost to the county of $400 per year. This sum is to be allowed in the extension budget to be presented in April.

In reading the motion supporting the above, Harvey Odell, Reno Township supervisor, said that with over 425 youths involved in 4-H Clubs within the county, he felt this one of the best moves the board of supervisors could make. Hiring of a director would require participation by Arenac, Ogemaw and Oscoda Counties.

The cooperative extension committee's recommendation that the county apply for the services of a resources development agent was also approved. County Agent Marvin Davenport was directed to take steps necessary at no additional cost to the county.

To comply with recommendations of the auditor general, the county is to discontinue paying any claims for goods or services furnished to the county or any department if such goods or services were furnished directly or indirectly by any supervisor during the term of office of the super-

MICHIGAN AUDUBON SOCIETY will urge the state legislature to grant complete protection to the few timber wolves which still roam the state. Lawmakers, the society noted, removed the wolf bounty in 1959. But the handful of these majestic animals which yet survive may be slain at any time, for any reason. Conservative estimates by the conservation department places the Michigan wolf population at less than a dozen. Said a Michigan Audubon spokesman: "We hope the day will never come when newspapers carry the story of the demise of Michigan's last wolf. Perhaps this is inevitable, perhaps this great beast is already doomed by progress. But we feel conservationists should give the wolf every chance to survive. And this can only come through immediate statutory protection."

Save This Fight Dirty Water

Michigan, so rich in water quantity, faces a crucial test in its fight to maintain water quality. For the state's eight million people, the stakes run high: Clean water is basic to their daily needs, their work and play. The struggle for pollution control is sometimes one of life-or-death importance to waterfowl and other wildlife. Note the heap of oilsoaked ducks killed by pollution (bottom right photo). Thanks to the watchdog efforts of the Conservation Department, the Michigan Water Resources Commission, and State Health Department, gains are being made in combatting pollution. However, with the state's population boom, new problems are surfacing, calling for increased vigilance and new techniques of waste disposal by industry and municipalities. The job ahead is going to take a lot of hard work and money to "Fight Dirty Water," the slogan of this year's Mar. 14-20 National Wildlife Week.--Mich. Dept. of Conservation

Cards and Eagles Place List 3 on All-Conference

Whittemore-Prescott Cardinals, Northeastern Michigan Conference championship squad, placed two players on the all-conference team in recent voting by coaches.

Earl Bronson and Jim Redmond seniors, were named to the first five. Both were consistent scorers this season in the Cards' last ditch stand to take conference honors in the final week of play.

Hale Area's Lonnie Ryland, a member of the district D championship team, was named to the North Star League's all-conference team. Ryland averaged 20 points per game during the season. George Maas, Hale Area junior, was named to the North Star's second squad.
